OBITUARY.

MR. E. RIDER COOK.

Many churches and efforts in East London are mourning the departure of Mr. Edward Rider Cook, J.P., which took place last week at Woodford, as a result of an attack of heat apoplexy. In early life Mr. Cook came under the influence of Thomas Binney. He was a successful man of business, being head of a large soap manufacturing industry; for many years he served on the Metropolitan Board of Works, and for a time represented West Ham in Parliament. He was a warm supporter of Congregationalist undertakings, and in hearty sympathy with good work by whomsoever done.

MR. G. WILL.

The community of Cullen, N.B., and all engaged in business in the North, will hear with deep regret of the sudden death on Monday week of Mr. George Will, late clothier, and ex-Provost of Cullen. Mr. Will, who had been living with his son at Bethnal House, Cambridge-road, London, had reached the age of seventy-five years. A prominent member of the Congregational Church, he was an earnest worker, and the friend of every movement calculated to have an influence for good on those around him. For a series of years he conducted a Bible-class with remarkable success, and many young men now scattered in various parts of the world are deeply grateful for the benefit they received from Mr. Will's training and wise counsels. He was a man of singularly genial, agreeable, and sunny disposition, and enjoyed the respect of the whole community. He was predeceased by his wife, and is survived by a family of six—three sons and three daughters.

MLLE. MARIE LEVAT.

The death is announced of Mlle. Marie Levat, a well-known worker at Nimes, France, in her seventy-sixth year. Early converted to God, she engaged in Christian work throughout her long life, especially by the use of her pen. She wrote for L'Eglise Libre and other papers, translated English works into French, and was the author of useful tracts and Scripture meditations.

With reference to her decision for Christ, Mlle. Levat was accustomed to say: "I was converted by a tear." That was two generations ago, under the instruction of Pastor Frossard. Speaking on redemption, the pastor dwelt upon God as vainly searching heaven and earth for a victim capable of expiating the sin of the world, and at length spoke of such a victim being found only in God's own bosom — in the Son of his love. At the thought of such love the pastor was deeply moved, and a tear trickled down his face. The young catechumen was much agitated, and the more so when she observed that several of her companions shared the pastor's emotion. "Shall my heart remain cold and dry?" she said. "Does not the love of God and the sacrifice of his Son say something to me? Woe is me, for I am undone!" Immediately afterwards Marie ran to her room and shutting herself up, passed several hours in prayer to God. She came out of the room a new creature in Christ Jesus, having given her heart to God.

The Use of Cocaine is a growing habit in the United States. In some stores it is kept ready done up in 5-cent packages, and the customers are so well known that they do not need to tell what they want. They simply throw down the five cents, and get the cocaine just as easily as they would a glass of beer in a saloon.

The Liverpool licensing magistrates have by pressure induced 409 licensed persons in that city to cease using their back doors for trade purposes. At the sitting forty cases in which the agents had received no instructions were adjourned till September 7. A recent official report showed that about 5,000 people dwelt in courts on to which publichouse back doors open. The justices have long expressed a desire to close the back doors, and this session they have succeeded in closing 90 per cent.

The Bishop of Ripon has ruled out "burning questions" from the Church Congress programme, but the Evangelicals are preparing for a conference at Bradford on the first evening of Congress week on "The Present Crisis in the Church of England." It is expected that Sir John Kennaway will preside, supported by Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P., and other well-known laymen.

Rev. F. H. Bovill, lately one of the curates at Christ Church, New Seaham, a mining village in East Durham, intending to remain there for some time, had built himself a house costing about £1200. He was, however, compelled to leave the parish owing to ill-health, and has presented the house, completely furnished, to the New Seaham Parish Mission, conducted by Miss Stirling, one of Canon Body's missioners.

Special services in City churches for business men are constantly growing in favour, and amongst the most successful are those held at St. Bride's, Fleet-street, where Rev. E. C. Hawkins is vicar. The list of preachers arranged for the autumn course is now issued. The Archbishop of Canterbury will open the series on Monday, Oct. 3, and the preachers on successive Mondays up to Christmas will include the Bishops of Rochester, St. Alban's, Islington, and Southwark; Deans Farrar, Elliot, and Hole; Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. S. A. Alexander (of the Temple Church), and Rev. E. J. Kennedy.

Rev. James Watson, secretary of the Congregational Union of Jamaica, recently visited several of the churches and schools in Sheffield, speaking on "Church Life in Jamaica." He referred to the assistance rendered to the churches in that colony by the Colonial Missionary Society.

Efforts of Welsh Congregationalists to raise a fund of £20,000 towards assisting weaker churches and establishing new causes are being crowned with success. This "Forward Movement," it is evident, will receive the practical sympathy of the churches of the denomination throughout the Principality.

Special services were recently held at Corrie, Arran, in connection with the opening of a new mission church there, under the auspices of the congregation at Sannox, of which Rev. A. McDougall is pastor. The new building stands on a rocky eminence overlooking the Clyde, and has the peaks of Goatfell for a background. About £200 is required to clear it of debt.

A well-attended meeting was held last week at Barnet to bid farewell to Rev. Simon P. Sihlali, of Tembuland, the first delegate from the South African churches to the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Mr. Sihlali, who reached England this week, came to this country in July, and since then has held a number of meetings under the auspices of the Colonial Missionary Society, at which the sum of £430 has been contributed towards his new church in Tembuland.

The West Indian Methodist Conference is asking for men to enter its ministry. Candidates for the ministry and local preachers under twenty-five are particularly desired. Rev. Henry Adams, Bilton-road, Rugby, has the matter in hand.

A successful mission has been conducted at Hackney Wick Chapel, London. People have gathered night after night to hear the Word of God. The power of the Holy Spirit has been manifest. Twenty persons have professed conversion, and many Christians have been led to a fuller salvation.

The appointment of Miss M. J. Perritt as Sunday-school evangelist and organiser of ladies' missionary societies, by the last P.M. Conference, is an entirely new departure. Under the direction of the General Sunday-school Court and the Missionary Court, Miss Perrett will begin her work in October.

From the new South African Minutes of Conference it appears there are 46,024 native members and 5882 English, an increase of 4034 on the year. Besides these there are large numbers of Presbyterian troops ministered to by Church of Scotland chaplains at Aldershot, Sheerness, Brompton, Portsmouth, Colchester, and elsewhere.

Society of Friends.

President Newlin, of Pacific College, Oregon, expects to sail for England early in September. He is a very able and powerful minister of the Gospel of Christ.

Several missionaries are on their way home from India and Syria, the necessity of change mostly obliging them to return for a season. Deep is the felt need for workers in the foreign field.

The Tent Mission at Willesden turned out a real success, the attendance and power being maintained all through. There were many professed conversions, and not a few were quickened into higher life.

The death of the venerable and eloquent Wm. Wetherald, of Canada, on Aug. 21, in Banbury, will be much regretted. He had become much beloved since returning to England on a brief visit to Friends. Canadian Friends will especially feel the loss.

The death (in Cornwall) of Arthur Pease, M.P., of Darlington, on Saturday last, will be much felt in the Society of Friends. A member of an ancient and honourable family, and himself early dedicated to God, he filled positions of responsibility in the Society for many years past, and at his death was treasurer of the Home Mission Committee. Differing from many Friends on some public questions of the day, he nevertheless retained the respect and love of all, and will be greatly missed in the councils and work of Friends. His health had been feeble lately, but it was hoped he might regain strength and continue his useful and busy life. His age was only sixty-one years.

Personalia.

Dr. Llewellyn Bevan has declined the nomination to the principalship of the Memorial College at Brecon. Rev. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, has been offered the position.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer.—We learn with much regret that Mr. Dyer, Editor of The Bombay Guardian, is on his way to England in very poor health. We trust a sojourn in his native land may restore him to bodily vigour.

Mr. W. R. Lane has been spending a short time at Worthing. He held six days' meetings in the Tabernacle, and notwithstanding the sweltering weather there were good attendances, and many tokens of blessing.

Pastor George Smith has resigned the charge of Quilmes Protestant Church, Buenos Ayres, and hopes to be in England shortly. He will be glad to address meetings on Argentina and its needs. His address will be Harley College, Bow, E.

The late Mr. Thomas Paul.—An interesting sketch, with portrait, of the busy and useful life of Mr. Paul ("Pearl Fisher"), a member of our staff, whose death we recently announced, is given in the current issue of In His Name, the organ of the Ragged School Union.

Mr. James Stokes, of New York, gives in The Evangelist of that city an interesting summary of his round the world tour in the interests of the Y.M.C.A. He says the experiences he gained impress him more and more with the need of the young men of the world for vital Christianity, and prove that the Y.M.C.A. is one of the best agents for its spread, an opinion held by missionaries of all denominations.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis's address from September 1 will be 5, Spa Villas, Gloucester. Mr. Francis's lectures on the Tabernacle are as interesting as they are instructive. We worked together in the Revival days of 1860-65, and have been in close correspondence ever since. In 1865 he saved me from drowning, wading up to his lips in the sea. He is sound in the faith; he and Mrs. Francis have done good work in India and elsewhere.—R. C. M.

Dr. Yonan, Oroomiah.—A young Persian doctor, Jesse Mahli Yonan, having supported himself by lecturing in the U.S.A., and passed his examinations in Chicago, desires to return to his own land as a self-supporting medical missionary. He is highly commended by well-known American ministers, the American mission at Oroomiah, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Invitations to lecture may be addressed to Dr. Yonan, care of Missionary Pence and Information Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., till September 15.

Rev. W. Williams, Pastor of Upton Chapel, Lambeth, completed, on Sunday last the twenty-first year of his ministry in connection with that church. He preached two appropriate sermons, to large congregations, prior to taking his annual and well-earned holiday. During the recess the chapel will be closed for redecoration, and it is hoped to open the building on the first Sunday in October. Under Mr. Williams's earnest ministry large numbers have been added to the church at Upton, whose sphere of usefulness is not confined to South London.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE appalling railway accident at Wellingboro' last week, caused by the thoughtlessness of a few boys in playing with a truck which rolled in front of an express train, teaches a lesson of far-reaching application. It was not the trivial forces with which the lads were dealing (taken alone) that caused the disaster, but, in conjunction with them, the momentum of the approaching train. How heedlessly do we often set in motion some apparently trifling forces, of word, act, or habit, little recking that these may combine with others, to us unseen, and result in consequences we never contemplated.

The Jewish people cannot be left out of account in calculations regarding the future of our earth. They have their place in the sure word of prophecy; and hope springs eternal in the Hebrew breast. God will not repent Him concerning the promises made unto the fathers. The perverseness of the people will not affect his purposes of love and mercy. "He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. xxxi. 10). Who can read the proceedings of second Zionist Congress at Basle without recalling such promises, given by a covenant-keeping God? Students of prophecy have long been expecting the return of the people to their land in unbelief, in readiness for such measures of the Divine discipline and grace as shall realise the prophetic word, "Then shall all Israel be saved."

The end of the South Wales coal strike has come at last, with the result that the terms offered by the employers last June have been accepted by the men on September 1. The victory of the masters has been complete, and it must be added they have not tempered their strength with mercy by making any concessions to the men. The issue of this will probably be that smouldering seeds of bitterness will be left behind, which may burst into flame in after years. Among the deeply resented conditions laid down by the masters is the disappearance of the monthly holiday called "Mabon's Day." Outsiders, however, will probably look upon this as a boon rather than a hardship, for the way in which this holiday was spent by the majority of the men did not conduce to their real welfare, while it was a serious disturbance to business. On the whole this has been one of the most disastrous struggles of modern times, involving a loss of £6,000,000 or £7,000,000 in money, and untold and fruitless misery to many thousands of innocent people. One lesson stands out clearer than ever—that strikes and lockouts are barbarous expedients for the settlement of trade disputes. The next Peace Congress should be an industrial one.

The overthrow of the Khalifa, the Mahdi's cruel successor, which was accomplished at the end of last week by Sir Herbert Kitchener's forces, is an event for which the whole civilised world may well be thankful. It means the crushing of one of the most bloodthirsty and barbaric tyrannies the world has ever seen, the destruction of the slave trade over a vast district, a new era of prosperity for the Soudan, and a fresh opening for missionary enterprise. With our rejoicings must be mingled sorrow for the brave soldiers who have fallen on our side, and pity for the thousands of not less heroic, if misguided, men who gave their lives away on the other. The valour with which they threw themselves on the British lines time after time was worthy of a better cause. On our side we have the satisfaction of knowing that this has been a war purely humanitarian in its object and results.

Not the least striking feature of the Czar's message was its complete unexpectedness. It is like a burst of healing sunshine through a rampart of storm clouds. For months the movements and policy of Russia have been the chief centre of disturbance in the diplomatic world, and now, out of this most threatening of all directions, the dove and the olive branch come forth! The reception of the news in the European Press is another instructive feature of the situation. This Gospel of peace has been preached "in season and out of season" throughout the length and breadth of the world years without number by enthusiasts of all creeds—Quakers, Socialists, peace societies, patriots like Cobden, Mazzini, Bright, Tolstoi, etc.—and the world has smiled in superior scorn at them all as unpractical dreamers. The same message, upheld by the same arguments, comes forth from the Czar of all the Russias, and at once it is listened to with profound respect, is commented upon by every newspaper in the world, and, whether it issues in a speedy disarmament or not, cannot help but advance incalculably and at a bound the sacred cause of peace and good will among men. All of which proves two things—how shallow the world's scorn is at most, and what untold good may be done by those in the highest places when they choose to become mouthpieces of the will and truth of God.

The duty of all Christian people towards this message is obvious, and yet it may need a great deal of emphasising in order to be carried out. As individuals and as churches, here is a call to speak, and to act, and to pray for the coming of the Kingdom of God. If Mr. John Morley's words are deeply true, that "public men and political parties in the country will be stamped now and in history by the more or less of their zeal and vigour in promoting the success" of this movement—how much more will the attitude of those who are followers of the Prince of Peace determine their place in his eyes? Never in the history of the world has such an opportunity been granted to the Church to give direction and force to the peace movement. Here is something in which differences of sect and creed have no place; in which Christendom can speak with absolutely united voice; and if it fails to throw its whole enthusiasm into this cause it will be nothing short of an act of treachery at headquarters. There is a Divine Hand at work, moulding the heart of kings, and the tortuous ways of diplomatists, to its will. God is able at the most unpromising moment to bring glorious issues into sight.

The poverty of Spain is great, and it is not likely to be lessened by the ecclesiastical burdens she has to bear. According to a writer in a foreign paper there are 21,000 seminarists, 73,000 curés, 33,000 nuns, altogether 117,000 individuals vowed to a so-called religious life, who are kept at the expense of the nation. It is not too much to say that this burden, borne for so many centuries, and which involves a system made up of ignorance, superstition, and oppression, is the chief cause of the decline of Spain. The Romish Church in that country has had an unhampered opportunity of showing what she can do for a nation under her complete control. The result has been to bring Spain to the edge of an abyss. Is it not time this unhappy country asserted her spiritual liberty, and tried another course? As this writer well says:—

> All her defeats would not be too heavy a price to pay if she could and would but understand that she must shake off this yoke and so regain her independence.

The extraordinary developments of the Dreyfus mystery is a signal illustration of the impossibility of staying the onward march of righteousness for long. All the machinery of the French Government, the prestige and self-assertiveness of the army authorities, and the stubborn prejudices of the nation have been exercised hand in hand with a view of preventing the reopening of the case. The confession of Colonel Henry that he had forged one of the incriminating documents, and his subsequent suicide, have made this powerful coalition of forces of no account, and there is no doubt that the awakened conscience of the people will now see that justice is done. The world is eagerly watching how France will behave in this fresh opportunity to re-establish her good name among the nations. More hangs in the balance than the settlement of the question whether Captain Dreyfus is guilty or innocent.

It is well to ask ourselves sometimes how far can a Christian man go in the quest of gold? It is the love of money, not money itself that is the root of all evil. To live for the mere massing of wealth no man professing to be a follower of Christ could devote himself. An article in the Boston Congregationalist discusses the question of "Gospel Teaching about Property." It says:—

> There is no sin in being rich, not even in the ownership of a large fortune...Perhaps it would not be fair to interpret the Biblical teaching by a single passage, and that outside of the Gospels; but the Gospel spirit, after all, is in the appeal, "Give me neither poverty nor riches." It is honourable to accumulate wealth by righteous methods and for Christlike uses, but wealth always is accompanied by many and serious perils. The question is rather one of men than of money.

Given the wholly consecrated man, to whom life is a sacred trust, who walks with Christ as Enoch walked with God—such a man could not be dominated by the lust of gold. Wealth of character would be his ideal pursuit. The question needs to be settled—not gold, but God; not glory, but goodness; not pleasure, but purity; not passion, but principle; Christ Jesus through and through. Then there will be no room for anything that will bring disgrace upon our Lord.

The correspondence in The Times on the Anglican Confessional is itself another proof that the country is slowly awakening to the gravity of the situation. There are High as well as Low Church names among those who are protesting against the "detestable custom." The letters bear witness to the great harm done both to confessor and confessed by this spiritual-illegal act of pouring into a human ear confidences that the All-Knowing alone can understand. Most of the clergy are utterly unfit recipients of such confidences; they have had no training in the unspeakably delicate relationships involved in such acts; and many no knowledge of human nature so as to qualify them to administer advice and comfort. Apart from this come the deeper arguments against the confessional, well expressed in the Times by Canon McCormick in the following words:—

"The whole question," he says, "resolves itself into the following statement: If a man repents and believes, he is absolved by God, though no clergyman may declare him to be so. If he does not repent or believe, he is not absolved, no matter what words of absolution are pronounced by human lips. It does not lie in the province of man to read the thoughts and intents of the heart. A judicial human absolution may be the greatest delusion and deceit."

Canon Newbolt, in his new series of "practical lectures" to clergymen under the title of "Priestly Ideals," makes an important admission as to the lack of personal fervour and simple directness of the "offices" and prescribed forms of prayer and worship so dear to the hearts of Ritualists. He compares them to a trim Dutch garden, where one longs for the free-blooming freshness of the flowers, and the fragrance of their unrestricted growth. This is, no doubt, the feeling of those who prefer voluntary and elastic forms of worship; and though many "voluntary" forms may become as "set" as the most rigid liturgy, they at least are in keeping with the promise of the Spirit, which, like the wind, "bloweth where it listeth," and whose visits should be enshrined in the form best suited to the occasion.

We spoke recently of the constant need, now too little recognised, of a vigorous application of the truth. There cannot be a doubt that preaching, if it is to be of spiritual use, must be faithful in exposing sin, fearless in denouncing judgment upon it, and explicit, tender, and persuasive in pointing to the Lamb of God who has taken away the sin of the world. Moreover, no one that reads the New Testament can doubt that the denunciation of sin and the preaching of righteousness were originally associated with solemn warnings regarding "a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." Primitive example should be more faithfully followed in this matter.

The Sins of Believers.—Thy sins after pardon have a blacker circumstance than the sins of devils, or the sins of wicked men, for theirs are not against pardoning mercy, nor against special love. Oh, thaw thy heart every morning with meditation on pardon, and sin will not so easily freeze it in the day time. When thou art tempted to sin, consider what thoughts thou hadst when thou wast suing for pardon, how earnest thou wert for it, what promises and vows thou didst make; and consider the love God showed thee in pardoning. Do not blur thy pardon, or easily wound thy conscience, or weaken thy faith.—Charnock (1628-1680).

Obstructions.

IT has been recently stated that it is quite possible to change the present course of the White Nile; that a single ton of dynamite could divert the mighty river at the sixth cataract, and send it flowing through the desert into the Red Sea.

Whatever then would become of fertile Egypt? Egypt depends entirely on the Nile, and it would lapse into barrenness and desert. Without the regular irrigation by the water from the Nile every scrap of vegetation would undoubtedly disappear, and an irresistible flood of sand would roll across the country.

It is not a fact that the stream of Divine blessing has ceased to flow; but something has blocked up the channel, and your soul has been left high and dry. Make ditches (2 Kings iii. 16), provide a channel, remove the small hindrances which have choked the bed, and the river will move along its old channel again. Beneath the stones and the rubbish in the well the fresh water still bubbles, and when the refuse has been cleared out the fountain will spring up once more, clear, joyful, sparkling, and refreshing as ever.

Those small sandy particles appeared unimportant once; but now they have changed "the garden of the Lord" into a "howling wilderness," do they still seem unimportant?

As the timber-logs go bumping down the Canadian rivers from the saw-mills, a jam frequently takes place, and the mass of wood is fixed immovably between the banks; the river is blocked, and the larger the surging log-island the more complete is the confusion. Indeed, it would appear to be perfectly hopeless ever to start in motion again that great jammed field of floating timber.

But the raft-master knows that the obstruction is caused by a single trunk. It is called the key-log. He must hunt for that until he discovers it. At a risk to his life he must push it from its position. Then, as the timbers surge onward in mad delight at their freedom, he must leap from log to log until he gains the bank.

KEY-SINS!

It is some key-sin which has so repeatedly brought a man or a congregation to a sudden halt. The stream of blessing continues to flow, but they do not move with it. Others are advancing, but they are marking time.

That key-sin must be sought for, and removed. It needs a cautious hand and a brave heart to undertake the delicate and dangerous work. Sympathy, tact, love, courage, energy, should all be at the command of him who will set in motion again those of our churches and those of our brethren who are standing at ease while the rest of the army is charging the foe.

Travellers have told us about the grass islands on the Nile. They are not only a source of interest, inhabited as some are by the natives, but they have become a real danger. One gentleman was held prisoner on the river for six weeks, and another voyager lost most of his men and his own life. The danger, of course, is starvation. The banks are perhaps five or more miles away, and all the water seen is a small lake, a hundred yards in diameter, and walled round with impenetrable grass.

Men who have elsewhere viewed the Nile flowing in all its pride can hardly believe this to be possible.

Since the fountains were unscalled at Calvary and Pentecost, the stream of love, mercy, and power has never ceased to flow. Men, however, have filled up the breadth and the depth with their own inventions. Many are confined within the small horizon of a narrow faith; they have but a few yards of spiritual outlook. They are shut in, and they cannot get forth. They are skeletons, and not well fed, robust men in Christ. Starvation has decimated many a congregation, because of the hedge of doubt within which the minister had shut up them and himself.

People like this cannot understand their own leanness and destitution. They saw the stream flowing full and free elsewhere, in some other man or in some other church, and yet they themselves can hardly turn themselves, and their experience contradicts the promises of God.

Hew down the obstacles, and let us cut a path to the clear and open river. The river still flows, and is wider than we think, and deeper than we know. Climb to the mast-head, and let your faith perceive its open water glistening in the sun beyond the doubts which confine and the sins which encompass you. It is there; nay, it is beneath your boat and around it, and when the weeds are cut away it will be the means to bear you into the open, fresh water of progress and power.

There is something—possibly more than one—which is filling up the channels of blessing, and preventing the flow of the Holy Spirit of God. They must go. And then there will be an end of these wearisome delays in the forward march of the Christian Church or the Christian man.

A Work and a Warning.

"THE little one shall become a thousand and the small one a strong nation. I the Lord will hasten it in his time." This is one of the Divine principles and promises which evermore repeat themselves. How often have we seen works begun on a large scale collapse; as when a dead plant is put into the ground and rots, it cannot grow because it has not life. On the other hand, a tiny work humbly and quietly begun, dropped by faith like a grain of mustard seed into the ground, takes root and multiplies from year to year, because it is a living thing.

For twelve years we have watched the growth of the work of God in Blankenburg, a lovely valley among the Schwarz mountains, in Thüringia, of which Luther said that "The man whom God loves he gives a house in Thüringen." This legend is inscribed above the door of the Allianzhaus, and beneath it is the beautiful Saxon word, "Heim"—home. The story from the beginning is concisely told by Dr. Baedeker, and the chief features of the recent conference are briefly sketched by Dr. Gritton and Mr. Meyer (p. 18).

It must not be thought that Germany is altogether Rationalistic. A considerable reaction has for years been taking place, and perhaps there are more in Germany than in England of decidedly Evangelical men among prominent and distinguished scholars in the Church. Some of these and many out-and-out Evangelical Christians among the higher classes, are brought together by these gatherings, which partake alike of the character of the Evangelical Alliance and of the movement which has Mildmay and Keswick for its English counterparts.

By Rev. D. J. BURRELL, D.D.

THE RELIGION OF THE GREEKS.

THEY were, as Paul said, "exceedingly devout." In their Pantheon we observe the exaltation of Nature. Zeus, the all-father, was the deification of ether. He reigned on the heights of Olympus; the lightning was the flash of his eye, and with his javelin, the thunderbolt he hurled his foes down the mountain side. The minor gods and goddesses who assembled about him were personifications of natural forces. Apollo curbed "the fierce flame-breathing steeds of day." Athene was the spirit of the morning, rising from the brow of the sky. A god was here for every river, a nymph for every brooklet. Troops of sirens came from the mossy clefts, and oreads from the hills to claim their tribute of devotion, while dryads brought with them oracular secrets from the rustling oaks. It was a beautiful system, and should have been quite satisfactory and ultimate if it were possible for natural theology to satisfy the cravings of the immortal soul.

But the Greek deities were only mortals projected on the skies. In their Olympian life they ate and drank, made war and love, quarrelled and sinned, reviled and wept. Hermes was a thief, Aphrodite a drab, Athene an adept at "Billingsgate," Hero no better than she ought to be, and Zeus, their worthy sire, a base deceiver who ofttimes drank too deeply of the mirth inspiring nectar, and was faithless to his wife, whom he "hung up in mid-heaven with anvils tied to her heels."

The festivals in honour of these gods were a magnificent display of sensual abandon. There were dances, tourneys, athletic sports, processions, and chariot races. There were dramatic representations of the adventures of the Olympian gods, in which dancers, flushed with wine, ministered to the basest passions of men.

The failure of such a religion was a mere question of time. Doubt and inquiry arose; Lucian and the other satirists began to write ruthlessly against the gods. On went the unmasking of the tricksters. The shrines were abandoned, the altar fires were extinguished, and from the deep recesses of the forests the winds came wailing,

"GREAT PAN IS DEAD!"

Then came the philosophers, the lovers of wisdom. They were the Protestants of their time, who fearlessly approached the stalking ghosts and spectres of the national religion, and laughed them out of court. Plato founded the academy, and discoursed on virtue as the most desirable thing. Epicurus, in his garden, exalted the emotions above the intellect, leaving to posterity the strange maxim, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Zeno, in his painted porch, founded the school of the Stoics, making expediency the highest rule of action. The cynics, led by Diogenes, taught a philosophy steeped in gall. The Sceptics glorified doubt; they were the ancestors of our modern agnostics, their chief dictum being, "We assert nothing; no not even that we assert nothing." The Peripatetics, with Aristotle as their illustrious tutor, originated the inductive method of reasoning; and drifting into practical materialism, rejected as unsubstantial all the verities of the eternal life.

It will be observed that the philosophers failed as utterly as the priests to answer the great question, "What must I do to be saved?" The earnest youths who walked amid the palm trees by the Ilissus had much to say of the cardinal virtues and the symmetry of a noble life, but they suggested no escape from the mislived past, and left the doorway of the tomb shrouded in unbroken night. Socrates, the noblest of them all, with the fatal hemlock at his lips, could only say, "I take comfort in the hope that something may remain of man after his death." The priests and the philosophers gave no real comfort or positive assurance to those who longed for the endless life. Ixion was left bound to the wheel. The vultures still gnawed at the vitals of Prometheus, the prisoner of death and despair. Tantalus still abode in hell, with the ever-receding waters close to his thirsty lips.

"Christ Our Life."

Col. iii. 4.

LIFE is greater than death. Death is but the shadow of life, hideous only where life is hideous. Make life beautiful, and death will put off his robes of black horror. It is ignorance that peoples the dark with demons; know God, and these fears shall vanish.

Death finds room in a coffin; life breathes through a universe, and finds satisfaction alone in God.

Death is separation: all men are naturally dead to what is highest. There is a broken cog in the wheel of life, a burden in the song of the bird and in the music of the brook. Something is wrong with man in both heart and circumstance. This is the unhesitating admission alike of philosopher and preacher. Difference of definition there may be, but each in his own way tells of a dislocated centre and a crashing circumference, of broken law, and death actual and impending.

Death cannot be considered as subject to degree. We can admit no comparison of dead—more dead, most dead. Let me illustrate my meaning from the New Testament. There are three instances in which Christ was life to the dead. At Capernaum Jairus' daughter lay on her bed as in sleep; at Nain the only son of a widow was borne out at the city gates; at Bethany one was laid to rest in a rock-hewn tomb, and saw corruption. These were dead, though one was like a gathered flower and one like a rotted fruit. And the same voice was needed to arouse the tiny sleeper as rang through the vaulted cavern where Lazarus lay bound hand and foot with grave-clothes. Death is so absolute that we have to confess with the Psalmist: "The redemption of the soul is precious, and must be let alone for ever"; and hope would fail did we not hear a voice greater than his saying, "I am come that they might have life."

"'Tis life of which our nerves are scant." Life is our great need. Whence shall it come? From above. A stone cannot, by taking thought, become a lily; a lily, however moved by admiration, can never become a lion; and a lion can never hope, by exercise of its great strength, to become a man.

Nor can man, in his own strength, lay hold on eternal life. Life must always come from the higher to the lower. The plant must stoop if the mineral is to be raised. Its tiny rootlets must lay hold of the dead atoms and lift them into life. So must God condescend and reach arms of love down the ages if ever mortal man is to enter into his life.

Life comes through death. "He died: I live," is the sum of all true belief—the creed of creeds. There is but one lever to raise the world—that is, the cross of Christ resting upon the fulcrum of the Divine purpose. Of Himself Christ said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The man Adam was a "living soul," but his life was self-contained, he could impart it to none other; Christ was the last Adam—the centre and circumference of life's circle in one—He, through death, should be no longer alone, but the life of the world. The one grain, if buried, should become the full corn in the ear. He, the "quickening spirit," should impart life to all men.

Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,
And live in Thee transplanted, and from Thee
Receive new life.

Christ is our life because He is the Revelation of the Father. He has brought life and immortality to light. Life is incomparably greater than immortality. Immortality means continued existence, life means GOD.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." There are two ways in which a branch may grow. It may extend its capacity for fruit bearing, and it may grow in girth where it has union with the parent stem. What we want to-day is vital contact with God in a larger area of our life. As we abide in love we shall live; and our life will be manifested that it is hid with Christ in God.

Hope thou in God.

Fret not, sad soul,
When waters roll,
And seem to overwhelm thy heart,
God will the fearful waters part,
And thou shalt cross,
Nor suffer loss.

Hope, weary soul,
Despair will roll
Its heavy arm on thee if faint;
In heaven's law there's no restraint
But to the bad.
In Christ be glad.

Trust, fainting soul,
Though doubt may roll
Its baneful fruits on all around;
Stand thou the test, hold fast thy ground.
On Jesus' breast
Securely rest.

Speed on, tried soul,
Press to the goal;
And if, perchance, the way you lose,
Thy Guide is near, his footprints choose.
Let go thy sin,
And heaven win.

Soldiers' Home, Lichfield.—In 1890 Col. Churchill founded the Lichfield Soldiers' Home. The building which he utilised for the purpose was once a grand stand on a racecourse, and much needs enlarging and improving. With the consent of the War Office it is proposed that a new wing should be added, containing a bar and recreation-room. That the Home is appreciated by the troops is shown by the many grateful letters we receive. Besides help in funds, we should be glad of indoor and out-door games of all kinds.

Railways and Religious Gatherings.—A correspondent writes:—"In your 'Notes and Comments' reference was recently made to the refusal of directors and managers of English railways to grant special privileges to those who wish to attend religious gatherings. I am pleased to note one exception. The North-Eastern Railway Company grant, every year, on application, special privileges in the shape of running an excursion train to suit those wishing to attend the annual meetings of the B.W.T.A., held in London." [We are glad to note this exception, and only wish the example of this company were universally followed.—Ed.]

A Thrilling Experience.

SOME years ago I spent a brief summer holiday in Cornwall, and one day I joined a party that were making an excursion to the Lizard Head. We left the rail at Helston, and drove by a pleasant road to the Lizard Lights. These twin lighthouses, illuminated by electricity, cast a brilliant beam far out over the Atlantic Ocean, and are a great benefit and safeguard to homeward bound vessels entering the English Channel.

After viewing the Lizard, it was proposed to visit the Kynance Coves, a series of very beautiful caverns at the foot of the cliffs, which however can only be reached at low water by a precipitous path from the heights above. We found we were too early, for the ebbing tide had not yet receded far enough to permit our reaching the caves by the prepared way. An idea struck me that it might be possible to reach them from above, by climbing down the cliffs from a little distance, and to achieve our purpose without waiting for the ordinary way to be left dry.

Separating myself from my companions (who were all strangers), and not speaking of my purpose, I strolled along the cliffs, which are very lofty, and in most places nearly perpendicular, till I reached a point where the face of the cliffs was of a more broken character. Here, thought I, a descent may be made with caution, and by working my way downwards in a slanting direction I shall be sure to reach the coves.

My first movement was to let myself drop from the summit upon a projection a little lower than I could reach with my feet, then to work my way carefully along the surface in a downward direction, then to suspend myself over a projecting ledge and drop again. This mode of progression was repeated many times. No thought of danger entered my head, nor did I imagine that I might fail of reaching the caverns and return by the path leading thence to the neighbouring hamlet.

By-and-by, when about half-way down, I found my task becoming increasingly difficult, and extreme caution was needful to secure a footing and to advance further. At last, after several more drops from the rocks above to those beneath (some of these having lowered me many feet at a time), I found myself upon a narrow ridge of rock projecting from the cliff, and looking below beheld a precipice more than forty feet deep, and beneath rolled the dark green sea, washing the base of the cliffs, and of a very considerable depth. My path was cut off. Suddenly as I looked around and behind me it flashed across my mind that the way I had come could not be retraced, and there was

NO PATH BY WHICH TO RETURN.

It took a little time to realise the situation! Alone, upon a green knoll, at a safe distance above the tide, but without means of communication with my fellows, without food or shelter, cut off, by my own mode of progression in dropping from rock to rock, from retracing my steps; and above, the frowning cliffs, some 300 feet high, rearing their massive walls nearly as abruptly as are the walls of a house.

Yet I knew at once that my only hope of getting back to the party, who in a few hours would be leaving the Lizard, was to scale the cliffs. So I commenced to climb! I got perhaps thirty or fifty feet upwards, but could get no further, and gingerly climbed down again to my narrow platform. Again I essayed my task, and mounted aloft in another direction, and once more returned defeated to my starting point. Five times I tried to scale those steep shelving walls, and as often, after getting perhaps 20 feet, perhaps 100 feet, found that it was impossible to take another step upward from thence. So again and again I had to creep downwards to my platform, each time with decreasing strength, relaxed nerve, and increase of tremor.

I sat down upon my knoll overlooking the shining sea to collect my thoughts and to determine what next might be attempted. The beauty of that summer afternoon and of my surroundings soothed me, and much more the consciousness (which had been a habit of many years) that, though alone and in danger, the Lord my God was with me. I thought of my friends 300 miles away in a distant county, and of that ministry I was just commencing, and in which I had hoped for years of active and useful service; and I reflected that since I was Christ's servant He would bring me out of that peril, if so be He had further work for me on earth, and if not—still, all would be well! So I committed myself to his keeping and guidance, and then looked about me to see if any means would suggest themselves by which I might escape.

Looking upward, I traced with my eye a way by which it seemed just possible I might reach the summit. And again, and for the last time, I began to climb. Presently I was aware that I had placed myself in extreme peril. I could not go back, I could not remain an instant in one spot, I could scarcely proceed! I was clinging to the rough rocks, on the face of towering cliffs of almost perpendicular formation. Far below tossed the deep green waters. I had left all trace of foothold, and scarce found crag or projection for hand or foot. Above rose a mountain wall, and no human being knew of my danger, or would be able to account for

MY DISAPPEARANCE IF I FELL.

Suddenly I was aware of "a still small voice" of reassurance and promise. Clear and close, as if from heaven, came the familiar and long-loved message, sent formerly to Israel by the mouth of Isaiah the prophet: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness" (Isaiah xli. 10). I could not doubt, and from that moment I lost all fear, and knew that I should be saved. The whole incident comes back to me as if it were yesterday.

I was not yet out of danger; nay, in the next ten minutes, humanly speaking, my peril increased greatly. Yet I knew who had spoken that promise, and that I was safe! Scrambling, climbing, clinging, I slowly advanced, reaching upward. It was no choice of steps, for an instant's hesitation or cessation would have entailed a headlong fall upon the rocks or into the sea; and without rest or a glance below, my way was onward and upward ever! At length I saw the top of the cliffs, and to my horror discerned that the last dozen or twenty feet projected outward and overhung the spot where I was clinging. I shall never know how I overtopped that difficulty; I trusted, and I had God's promise, and I was saved! At last, I remember how I got one arm over the top, and raising myself by a supreme effort rolled myself to a little distance from the edge of that fearful cliff, and lay for some time panting and with nerves unhinged; till after a while I roused myself, and actually afterwards found the path down the cliff to the coves, and explored their interesting recesses before I rejoined those who had been my companions, and returned to Falmouth, where I was staying at that time.

Do you know anything of this God-consciousness, this assurance that the Almighty One is with you? To myself it has been my most precious possession during a period of twenty years. It is always there while I am willing to do his will and desirous to be loyal to our Lord and Saviour Jesus. And in other crises of my life, as in prolonged sickness and special trouble or difficulty, it has been as clear and helpful as in this experience, when my life was placed in jeopardy.

When the storms of life beat upon us, when we encounter its deadly conflicts and are imperilled by its sudden snares, this God-consciousness rises like a flood in our hearts, makes strong our hand and steadfast our hope and courage. When we are weak in ourselves we become strengthened in God, and when danger confronts we are secure under his protection and guidance. Though it were foolish, as in my case, to run heedlessly into an unknown peril, even then, as in times when his own service has brought danger nigh, have we heard his voice speaking unto us as of old, saying, "Fear thou not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

The Norwich Ornaments Case.

A CASE of considerable interest came before Mr. Chancellor Blofield on Tuesday, August 30, in the Consistory Court of Norwich. Some weeks ago Rev. Robert Middleton, rector of the parish of St. Michael-at-Coslany, Norwich (an earnest and godly Protestant clergyman), who was instituted on February 5 last, removed a retable and ornaments from the so-called altar. Although he took the sole responsibility of this action, he had a majority of the vestry and parishioners with him. But Mr. Simmons, one of the churchwardens, objected, and after reporting the matter to the bishop (who unsuccessfully attempted to compel Mr. Middleton to replace the ornaments) took proceedings against the rector. It appears that the bishop threatened Mr. Middleton that "if he did not replace the ornaments he would prosecute him and he would have to bear all pains and penalties."

In spite of the fact that Mr. Middleton has the support of a majority in vestry and parish, the Chancellor, keeping strictly to the law of the case, decided against the rector, who is now ordered to replace these articles and to pay the cost of the action. Mr. Middleton (viewing the case legally) appears to have made the mistake of acting without obtaining a faculty. The Chancellor, meantime, stays his hand until the appeal has been heard.

Does not this case shed a strong sidelight on the attitude of the bishops in this controversy? Appeal after appeal has been made to bishops by Protestant members of the Establishment against Romish innovations, and in most cases the bishops refuse to interfere, many of them saying that they have no power to do so. Yet when a Protestant clergyman removes some of these Popish articles a bishop becomes active at once, and no time is lost in coercing the clergyman to replace the articles he had taken away. To say the least this has a very suspicious look about it, and indicates a bias in the wrong direction. It is difficult to believe in the sincerity of the bishops in the face of such contradictory actions.

I heartily wish Mr. Middleton success in the brave course he is taking. J. L. S.

How it Fared with Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

REMEMBER that this very circumstantial account was given by one who was an eye-witness of the whole scene; and who, withal, was then and in after years the warm friend and companion of Peter. But his love did not lead him to conceal his brother's sins. Peter himself would not have wished him to do so, because where sin had abounded grace had had the greater opportunity to super-abound.

At the moment of the Lord's arrest all the apostles forsook Him and fled. The Shepherd was smitten and the flock scattered. Two of them, however, speedily recovered their self-possession, and followed at a distance, eager to see what would befall. When the procession reached the palace gate John seems to have entered with the rest of the crowd, and the ponderous, massive doors closed behind him. On looking round for Peter he missed him, and concluding that he had been shut out, and was still standing without, he went to the maid that kept the wicket-gate (opening in the main entrance doors for the admission of individuals) and asked her to admit his friend. She recognised him as being well known to the high priest, and readily assented to his request.

A fire of wood had been hastily lighted in the open courtyard, and cast its rays on the chilly April night; so that whilst Jesus was being examined by Annas the men who had taken part in the night adventure were grouped around the fire, discussing the exciting incident, with its moment of panic, the ease of the arrest, the hurt and healing of the ear of Malchus, the seizure of the rich Eastern dress from the young man whom they had encountered on their homeward march. Peter did not wish to be recognised, and thought that the best way of preserving his incognito was to and take his place among the rest, as though he, too, had been one of the capturing band, and had as much right to be there as any other of that mixed company. So he stood with them, and warmed himself.

Meanwhile, the doorkeeper, leaving her post, came to the fire, and in its kindling ray her eye fell upon Peter's face. She was surprised to see him there, feigning to be one of themselves. If like John, he had gone quietly into some recess of the court, and waited unobtrusively in the shadow, she could have said nothing. In her kind-heartedness she would have respected them both; for she knew that they sympathised with the arrested Nazarene. But to find him there talking and acting as though he had no personal interest in the matter was so unseemly and unfit that she was provoked to expose him. She looked at him earnestly—as another evangelist tells us—to be quite sure that she was not mistaken; and feeling quite certain in her identification said abruptly, "Art thou not one of this Man's disciples?"

Peter was taken off his guard. If he had been arrested, and taken for trial, he would no doubt have played the hero—he had braced himself up for that; but he had not expected that the supreme trial of his life could come in the question of a servant-maid. It is so often thus. We lock and bolt the main door, and the thief breaks in at a tiny window which we had not thought of. We would burn at the stake; but in an hour of social intercourse with our friends, or a trivial business transaction, we say the word which fills our life with regret. Confused at the sudden pause in the conversation, and the turning of all eyes towards himself, Peter's first impulse was to allay suspicion, and he said bluntly, "I am not." Such was his first denial.

After this, as Matthew and Mark tell us, he went out into the outer porch or gateway, perhaps to avoid the glare of the light and the scrutiny of those prying eyes. He remembered afterwards that, at the same moment, a cock was heralding the dawn—the dawn of the blackest, saddest day, and yet the brightest and most full of promise, that had ever broken upon Jerusalem, or the world. But its warning notes were just then lost on Peter; for there another maid, speaking to some male acquaintances, pointed him out as one of the Nazarene's friends. "This man also was with Jesus the Nazarene." Probably no harm was meant; but the words alarmed Peter greatly, and he denied, as Matthew says, with an oath, "I know not the man." This was the second denial.

An hour passed; Peter, as we learn from the twenty-fifth verse, was again at the fire, and it was hardly possible for him to talk in a large company without unconsciously and by force of character coming to the front and taking the lead. His perturbed spirit was perhaps the more vehement to drown conscience. But now he is challenged by many at once. They say unto him, "Art not thou also one of his disciples?" And another saith, "Of a truth, thou wast with Him"; and another, a kinsman to Malchus, and therefore specially likely to remember his relative's assailant, saith, "Did I not see thee in the garden with Him?" Beset and badgered thus, Peter begins to curse and to swear, saying, "I know not the man of whom ye speak." When men lose their temper thus they drop naturally into their native speech; and so, as Peter's fear and passion vented themselves in the guttural patois of Galilee, he to his identification: "Thou art a Galilean, thy speech bewrayeth thee." And again he denied with an oath, "I know not the man." This was his third denial. And immediately the cock crew.

It may have happened that at this moment Jesus was passing from Annas to Caiaphas, and cast on Peter that marvellous look of mingled sorrow and pity, of suffering more for his sake than his own, and of tender allusion to the scene and words of the previous evening, which broke Peter's heart, and sent him forth to weep bitterly.

The light was breaking over the hills of Moab, flushing with roseate hues the marble pinnacles of the Temple, whilst the city and surrounding valleys were still shrouded in the grey gloom, as Peter went forth alone from the high priest's palace. Only those whose last words to the beloved dead were rude and thoughtless—little thinking that there would be no opportunity to unsay them and ask forgiveness, but that, ere they met again, death would have sealed in silence the only lips that could speak words of relief and peace—only such can realise what Peter felt. Did he know Him? Of course he did, and ever since that memorable hour, when Andrew first brought him into his presence, he had been growing to a more perfect knowledge. Did he love Him? Of course he did; and Jesus, who knew all things, knew it too. But why had he acted thus? Ah, the reasons were not far to seek. He had boasted of his superiority to all his brethren; had relied on his own braggart resolutions; had counted himself strong because he could speak strongly and loudly when danger was not near; had thought that he could cope with Satan, though arrayed in no stronger armour than that which his red-hot impulse forged. He thought his resolutions wheat, and his Master's cautions light as chaff; he had to learn his weakness and see his confidence winnowed away as clouds of chaff, while

SATAN SIFTED HIM.

The resolutions of the evening are not strong enough to carry us victoriously through the morning conflict. We must learn to watch and pray, to lie low in humility and self-distrust, and to be strong in the grace, which awaits all tempted ones, in God.

And where could Peter go to weep his bitter tears but to Gethsemane? He would surely seek out the spot where his Master's form was still outlined in the crushed grass, and his tears would fall where the bloody sweat had fallen but a few hours before. But how different the cause of sorrow! The anguish of the blessed Lord had none of the ingredients that filled the cup of Peter to the brim! And all the while the memory of that sorrow, of those broken cries, of that coming and going for sympathy, of those remonstrances against his senseless sleep, and of that last tender, yearning, pitiful look of love, came back on him to arouse successive surges of grief. Contrast Christ's love with your ingratitude, Christ's constancy with your fickle devotion, Christ's meekness to take the yoke of his Father's will with your unwillingness to bear his cross of shame; and ask if you, too, have no cause for tears like those that Peter shed!

It is remarkable that Peter should have fallen here. His open, ingenuous nature was not given to lying, his impetuous character was not prone to cowardice. Accustomed from boyhood to meet death in the wrestle with nature for daily sustenance, he was not subject to the apprehensions of a nervous dread. None of his fellow disciples would have expected the rock-man to show that he was clay or sand after all. But this was permitted that he and we might learn that our noblest natural qualities as much need to be dealt with by the grace of God as our vices and defects. Many a fortress has been taken from a side which was deemed impregnable. No one expected that Wolfe would assail Quebec from the Heights of Abraham. How often we have FALLEN INTO THE SAME TRAP!

We have, perhaps, been thrown into a company where it was fashionable to sneer at Evangelical religion, and we have held our peace; where the ready sneer was passed on those who dared still to believe in miracle and inspiration, and we have been silent; where condemnation has been freely passed on some man of God whom we owned as friend, and knew to be innocent, and we have not tried to vindicate him; where some great religious movement in which we were interested was being discussed and condemned, whilst we have coolly joined in the conversation as if we had not made up our minds, or were totally indifferent. We have been unwilling to be unpopular, to stand alone, to bear the brunt of opposition, to seem eccentric and peculiar. Let those who are without sin cast their stones at Peter; but the most of us will take our place beside him, and realise that we, too, have given grief to Christ, and grave cause to his enemies to blaspheme.

But, be it remembered, the true quality of the soul is shown, not in the way in which it yields to temptation in some moment of weakness and unpreparedness, but in the way in which it repents afterwards. Do we weep, not for the penalty we dread, but because we have sinned against Christ? Are we broken down before Him, waiting till He shall restore? Do we dare still to believe in his forgiving and renewing grace? Then this is a godly repentance, which needs not to be repented of. These are tears which his love shall transform to pearls. How different this to the attitude of a Judas! Each fell: but in their demeanour afterwards the one was shown to be gold, silver, precious stones; the other wood, hay, and stubble. How may we

BE KEPT FROM FALLING AGAIN?

(1) Let us not sleep through the precious moments which heaven affords before each hour of trial; but use them for putting on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to stand in the evil day.

(2) Let us not cast ourselves needlessly into situations where our most cherished convictions are likely to be assailed by wanton men; though if God should lead us there we need not fear, for it will be given us in the same hour what to answer. Take care of warming yourself at the world's fire.

(3) Let us keep within the environing presence of our Lord. It is always right to do right; always safe, always blessed. Satan can only hurt us when he allures us out of that safe hiding-place. Never forsake the things which are pure, and lovely, and of good report. You, in Jesus, shall yet overcome the world if you refuse to allow the world to come between Him and you.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 11.

"Unspotted from the world."—Jas. i. 27.

WHATEVER may be our views about the doctrines of Christianity, we must see to it that their outcome be in pure and holy living. Orthodoxy of view is utterly worthless unless it be combined with orthodoxy of life. This was the side of truth on which James was specially inspired to insist.

The man of the world says, Live right, and you may do as you will about your creed. The Christian insists that we must think and believe truly before we can live so as to please God.

What a beautiful conception is here! The unspotted Life! No book is like the Bible in its conceptions of sin; indeed, we owe to it the thought of sin, and its evil in the sight of God. But there is no book with so lofty an ideal of what life may become when it is yielded to the grace of Christ. A cleansed heart, and an unspotted robe; no sin to be allowed and permitted in the soul, and no evil habit allowed to dominate and enthral the life; the blood of Christ speaking for us for justification, and in us for sanctification; our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

MONDAY, September 12.

"Hath not God chosen the poor of this world?"—Jas. ii. 5.

There is nothing that men dread more than poverty. They will break every commandment in the Decalogue rather than be poor. But it is God's chosen lot. He had one opportunity only of living our life, and He chose to be born of parents too poor to present more than two doves at his presentation in the Temple. All his life was spent among the poor. His chosen apostles and friends were, with few exceptions, poor.

It is in harmony with the spirit of the Gospel.—The world-spirit aggrandises itself with the abundance of its possessions. Its children vie with each other in luxury and display. The Spirit of Christ, on the other hand, chooses obscurity, lowliness, humility; and with these poverty is close akin.

It compels to simpler faith in God.—The rich man may trust Him, but the poor man must. He waits on Him for his daily bread, and gathers the manna falling straight from the sky. The poor are delivered from many of those temptations in whose eddying whirlpools so many are caught and drowned.

It gives more opportunities of service.—The rich are waited on, and pay for servants to wait on those they love. The poor, on the contrary, are called to minister to one another, at every meal, and in all the daily round of life—like Him who was and is as one that serveth, and who became poor that through his poverty we might be rich.

TUESDAY, September 13.

"If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."—Jas. iii. 2.

Think of the sins of speech! How innumerable they are. About ourselves. The tongue boasteth great things. We are all apt to be vain, boastful, exaggerating. We tell stories that redound to our own credit; contrive to focus attention on our own words and deeds; and even in delivering God's messages endeavour to let it be seen that we have a clearer insight into truth or a closer familiarity with God than our fellows.

The sins of speech about others.—Behold how much may be kindled by this small fire! A keen observer says:—"We break the law of courtesy, and become harsh, insolent, and uncivil; or the law of purity, and repeat stories that leave a stain; or the law of truth, and practise insincerity, equivocation, and dissimulation; or the law of kindness, and are harsh and implacable to those who are beneath us in station. Or in our desire to stand well with others we are guilty of flattery, servility, time-serving and the like."

The sins of speech in connection with God's work.—We disparage other workers behind their backs; pass criticisms which take away the effect which their words had otherwise exercised over others; indicate one defect in what was otherwise a perfect achievement. Set a watch, O God, upon our lips.

WEDNESDAY, September 14.

"That Spirit which He made to dwell in us yearneth for us even unto jealous envy."—Jas. iv. 5 (R.V., marg.).

The Spirit of God dwells within thee, O believer in Jesus Christ. If a man have not the Spirit of God, he is none of his; and since thou art undoubtedly one of his, thou hast most certainly the Holy Spirit. But the mistake of thy life consists in this, that He hath not thee. Some part of thy heart is given, but not all; and this causes Him pain, such as we suffer from jealousy.

No keener pain is possible to the heart of man than to find that a loved one is not wholly true, that there has been an alienation of affection which was once whole and entire, that another is receiving a part at least of the heart's devotion. But this is what the Spirit of God suffers when we share between Him and the world that love which should be all his own. "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God" is as true as when first spoken from Sinai. He must be first. The person of Jesus Christ must be the Sun of our system, though that system may include many circling planets beside.

THURSDAY, September 15.

"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—Jas. v. 16.

The righteous man finds relief for suffering in prayer.—"Is any among you suffering? Let him pray." There are sorrows we cannot tell to our dearest. Surges of grief sweep over us for which we have no words. Life is a stern fight for us all, and each heart knows its own bitterness. But there is always one resort: we can pour out our sorrows to our compassionate and merciful High Priest.

The righteous man prays the prayer of faith.—We can only pray that prayer when we have asked what is in God's will to bestow. And when we have prayed it we do not need to be perpetually repeating it, but with patience to await the answer. But righteous men cannot always pray that prayer, because they do not know the Lord's will on matters not recorded in this book. There are some sicknesses which are unto death, and we cannot pray the prayer of faith for these. If you cannot pray the prayer of faith, take medicine, and use the best means in your reach.

The righteous man can affect the whole history of his fatherland by his prayers.—It was so with Elijah, as we learn here. It was so with John Knox, whose prayers were more dreaded by Mary of Scots than the armies of Philip. If we were led out in fervent prayer, for us also the heaven would give rain and the earth yield her fruit.

FRIDAY, September 16.

"An inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away."—1 Peter i. 4.

Yes, it is an inheritance. It is a free gift, and yet we have a right to it. By God's great mercy we have been begotten again, "and if children, we are heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together."

Oh, blessed heritage! Incorruptible! The gnawing tooth of decay cannot injure it. Moth and rust cannot consume, nor thieves break through to steal. No spendthrift hand can scatter or over-spend its treasures. Undefiled! Not a stain on its pure robes, not a freckle on its leaves, not a taint of miasma on its atmosphere. "Into the city entereth nothing that defileth, or worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." That fadeth not away! Some of our fairest hopes, the most delightful friendships, the most perfect dreams of delight, have faded and withered before our eyes. But in the ages to come this will yield as much rapture as when we first enter upon its joys.

It is kept for us, and we are kept for it.—It is reserved in heaven for you.

> I have a heritage of joy,
> That yet I must not see;
> The hand that bled to make it mine
> Is keeping it for me.

Who by the power of God are guarded through faith. The idea is that we are being brought through an enemy's country under a strong escort—as the women and children from Lucknow, between the double line of English soldiers, till they were safe from the onset of the Sepoys. We are not in heaven yet, but we are as safe as if we were.

SATURDAY, September 17.

"Who his own self bare our sins in his body on the tree."—1 Peter ii. 24.

A text almost of monosyllables. A child could decipher it; yet how unfathomable!

He came into the sinner's world.—Himself sinless, He took our nature. His blessed feet trod among the dust of death, the mounds of graves, and the traps that men laid to catch Him. And all for love of us.

He lived the sinner's life.—Not a sinner's life, but the ordinary life of men. He wrought in the carpenter's shed; attended wedding festivals, and heart-rending funerals; ate and drank, and slept. He sailed in the boat with his fisher friends, sat wearied at the well-head, and was hungry with the morning air.

He sympathised with the sinner's griefs.—In their affliction He was afflicted. When leprosy with its sores, bereavement with its heartrending loneliness, dumbness, and deafness, and devil-possession came beneath his notice, they elicited the profoundest response from his sympathetic heart.

He died the sinner's death.—He was wounded for our transgressions. The iniquities of us all met in Him. He stood as our substitute, sacrifice, and satisfaction; the guilt, and curse, and penalty of a broken law borne and exhausted in his suffering nature.

He is preparing the sinner's home.—"I go to prepare a place for you"; and no mother was ever more intent on preparing his bedroom for her sailor boy on his return.

For all this, shall we not love Him? Shall we not disown the sinful self, which has too long monopolised our love and life, that we, being dead to sins, may live to righteousness?

JUST PUBLISHED.—OUR DAILY HOMILY, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Vol. I., Genesis—Ruth. (1/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan & Scott.) Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job, will be ready shortly, and will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

Mr. Moody on Aggressive Work.

As the Northfield Conference drew to an end the visitors felt that a great responsibility rested upon them. Having heard so much that is excellent, the problem now is how to make it of value in their own church work. Mr. Moody was plied with so many questions regarding evangelistic work in churches, and how to build up the Sunday evening service, that he gave two or three hours to a public answering of the inquiries. We extract the following from a report of one of these meetings:—

Question—If the pastor of a church does not favour evangelistic work, what can a layman do, besides praying, to promote the spiritual work in such a church, which evidently is losing power in the community?

Mr. Moody—Well, I should do a great deal more. I believe the time has come for the laymen to move, and when I say "laymen" I mean men and women. If you can't work in the church, I wouldn't leave the church, but I would go out and have a cottage or open-air meeting. If it was in the country I would get into the school-house; that is a magnificent place to work, and there is no trouble. I say "no trouble." There is always trouble in everything, but there is no trouble or difficulty that cannot be overcome in almost every part of the United States.

One of the audience—That has been tried.

Mr. Moody—Then you ought to pray God to fill you with the Holy Ghost.

One of the audience—The school boards of neighbouring towns prohibit us.

Mr. Moody—Very well; go to Round Top; get a hill like this. That is what Christ did. Get into a boat if you're near the water. Nothing can stop a man that is red-hot and full of the Spirit of God. If you can't get into a school-house, get under a tree. And if you cannot get under a tree, go into a kitchen. I tell you, the time has come everywhere to carry the Gospel into the homes of the people; and if we cannot get them into the church, if the style of preaching is driving them away, if they are getting drawn away from the church, then go into the homes. The family was established long before the church was, and you will have to go back to it.

I believe that a man or woman who has the Spirit of God can have access to hearts, and can have conversions all the while anywhere and everywhere.

I know there is a certain class of people who don't believe in evangelistic work, and what we call conversions. I would not quarrel with them. I would step right out and have conversions; and you can have them, as I said before. There is not a place in this country where you cannot get converts if you aim for them. We get generally what we look for in this world, and for a man to stick his talent under a napkin, and say that because his minister is opposed to evangelistic meetings he is to spend his whole life in that church praying once a week or once a month to ease his conscience that way, I believe that he is on the wrong track entirely.

Question—Don't you think, Mr. Moody, that people can be brought into the kingdom of heaven over the heads of a dead church?

Mr. Moody—That is what I have just been saying. You are not to wait for the church. If the church won't move, move yourself, but don't go out and fire stones at the church. That would suit the devil to a dot. Preach Christ and keep at it in season and out of season, and if you cannot preach it in one place, preach it in another. If a man has tact he will get along almost anywhere. A man that has not tact will always begin at the wrong end, and will raise all the old Adam there is in town, and do more harm than good. But I believe when a man is filled with the Holy Spirit he has tact and tenderness, and gentleness and love, and unction.

HOW TO INFLUENCE MEN.

Question—What can be done to influence young men who are not Christians in the Church and Sunday-school? How can young men who are Christians be enlisted in active Christian work? What part of the church work can be best entrusted to them?

Mr. Moody—That covers a great, long piece of ground. It depends altogether on what class of young men you have. You can't say in a few words how it is best to set these men to work, or get them interested. It may be wise to get them to a social gathering, ask them around to your house to tea, and get acquainted with them; to have a talk with them, and ask them how you can get them interested in the work, and find something they can do, something they would like to do, and draw them out one after another. Another good way is to see them personally. Go into their office or place of business and Men like to be treated like men. They like to have men approach them and speak to them personally, and take an interest in them.

Take these farm hands. Let the minister go and call on them where they are at work in the fields and they will manage to be around next Sunday to hear him; and if he will put them on a committee or set them to work, they will be glad to do something.

The Mormon church is very wise! Every fifth man is an officer in the Mormon church, and it is a good thing to give a man something to do if you want to get him interested. That is the great trouble with our churches; they are not organised in that way to set everybody to work. But if everybody had something to do, you would in that way get them interested in the church and church work, if they are Christians. If they are not, what you want then is the time to have a live evangelistic service every Sunday night and get them converted. This is the first thing to do. You can't work very well on cold iron. You have got to have iron heated up to a white heat before you can bend and weld and mould it.

SUNDAY NIGHT MEETINGS NEEDED.

Question—Did you say you would hold an evangelistic meeting every Sunday night?

Mr. Moody—I would hold an evangelistic meeting fifty-two Sundays in the year, never turning to right or to left. If I could not have it in the church where I was, I would have it in somebody's kitchen. Sunday night is worth more than all the rest of the week to get men out. Working-men and mechanics don't get out at any other time, and if you don't reach them on Sunday night you won't reach them.

Take most of the audiences in America, and they are made up of Christian people on Sunday morning. That is the time they come, and they ought to be fed and built up. You are not losing any time in feeding the church and building them up, and if they are fed right and properly all of them become preachers themselves, and instead of the minister having one meeting on Sunday night there ought to be twenty. I do not know how many meetings we have within twenty miles of this hall on Sunday night, but I suppose there must be in the neighbourhood of eight or ten. Are there not, Dr. Scofield?

Dr. Scofield—When we are all working there are thirteen.

Mr. Moody—We used to think everybody had to come to church. We got wagons to carry them. But come a snowstorm or a rainy, day we could not get them. You take a man who has worked all day in the hot sun, and he is not going to walk three miles to a religious meeting in the dark at night, so we go right to the school-house and take him where he is. Forty or fifty is as many as these school-houses will hold, and we get them full sometimes. We get more, sometimes, than we have at the church.

On Sunday morning we try to centralise, but Sunday nights we scatter all around. I believe this can be done all through the United States.

AFTER-MEETINGS.

Question—Don't you think sometimes it would be wise to have an after-meeting at the close of the morning service?

Mr. Moody—Once in a while you might, but, as I say, Sunday morning, as a general thing, you need to feed the church and build them up. Sunday night I would aim for an after-meeting.

People say, "Let them go home and consider. You have sowed the seed, don't disturb it." And I have had ministers use this illustration: "Moody goes and plants some seed, and then he goes and pulls it up every few days to see if it has sprouted." A man is a great dunce to sow the seed and not harrow it in. The crows will get at it, too, if it is not harrowed in. You want to harrow and brush it and roll it, so the devil can't get it, and then let it sprout.

Suppose a man preaches a powerful sermon to-night, and there has been a great impression, an awakening, and the people are brought under conviction; and then he says, "Next Friday night the pastor will be in his study to meet anyone who would like to have a conversation with him on the subject of salvation." Well, don't you know the devil has got a right of way long before Friday night? The impression of Sunday night is gone long before Friday night. If he has an impression of salvation, he wants to be dealt with then and there, before he gets out into the chilling atmosphere of the world.

Nothing will straighten a man out himself like trying to help others. If you smoking men take the unbelieving man who doesn't like the smell of tobacco, and you ask him to make an unconditional surrender, it would straighten out lots of you. When a man gets into that kind of work it is going to make a different man of him at once. I believe your progressive euchre would go to the four winds; you will get something better, and so will let go your cardplaying, dancing, and theatre.

And it is the cream of Christian work; there is nothing like it. I thought the joy of my own salvation was the greatest joy I would ever know on earth; but when God gave me a soul it surpassed any joy that I ever knew on earth, and I remember the night. How this old world receded from my vision!

THE AGE OF ADVERTISEMENT.

Question—Would you advertise the topic on which you expected to preach on Sunday? If so, how?

Mr. Moody—If my audience was waning, and I wanted to hold my audience and get the thing started up again, I would give out some popular subject that I thought they would all like to hear, and give it out two or three days ahead and have it worked up. This is the age of advertisement, and you have to watch your chance. I don't like to give out a subject. I would rather take them by surprise; but if I see I'm losing, and I want to catch my audience, then I begin to push, begin to advertise.

Question—Would you advise a pastor, in holding evangelistic services, to use tickets?

Mr. Moody—I would have anything rather than empty pews. I don't think God ever called a man to preach to empty pews. You have either made a mistake in your call, or you don't use tact. And I don't think it is beneath a man's dignity to go out and ask people to come in. Let people know you want them enough. Many a time I have told a man I was going to preach a whole sermon to him, and he would be out to hear what I had to say. I would rather do that than not have him there.

When a church gets so stuck up that it won't have a sign out, I believe it has got too high altogether for this world. You take the cathedrals in London, and those great churches have their bill of fare out every week for every day in the week. Why should not we have it in this country? Why should a man be so terribly terrified at having a notice out that he is going to preach Sunday night on "Heaven," or "Assurance," or something else?

Famine in Central Russia.—Most unfavourable reports continue to reach St. Petersburg regarding the state of affairs in the districts affected by the bad harvests. In the province of Kazan, where the distress is particularly acute, signs of drought are everywhere present. The authorities are now busy devising measures to prevent the complete destruction of live stock during the famine. Great purchases of fodder and grain are to be made in other provinces, and cattle will be fed with supplies distributed from the stores thus acquired. Terrible as the situation now is, the distress will probably be more accentuated in the coming winter, when the famine will have for its prey a population already impoverished and exhausted by previous years of want and scarcity.

Work among Pariahs.—Work among the much oppressed and depressed classes of Pariahs inhabiting four villages in the Saidapet Talug, near Madras, has developed. The cry for help is heard from many villages. With my two workers, I preach and teach among the Pariahs, and I rejoice that there is much awakening among them, and an inclination is manifested towards Christianity. Last three years' labour has produced thirty converts, who form my congregation at present. A contribution of £2 is wanted per month for the support of two preachers. I shall be obliged to friends for religious magazines, tracts, leaflets, etc., for free distribution among British soldiers, Sepoys, native Christians, educated Hindus, and others.

The Prophetic Outlook.

By Dr. NATHANIEL WEST.*

THAT this last "crisis" is impending is undeniable. The whole world is preparing for the last act in the tragedy of the "Warfare Great." Christendom is already one vast military camp and naval depôt. The son of Pethuel is again on his watch-tower, blowing the trumpet in Zion, summoning the nations to "come up" to Jerusalem, and the Lord and His mighty angels to "come down" from heaven. Joel (iii 9-16) has dramatised the scene in the most thrilling manner, the scene of the advance of the nations, marching to the "Valley of Decision," where the "Eastern Question" will be "decided."

The Lord—"Proclaim ye this among the nations. Prepare war. Wake up the mighty men. Let all the men of war draw near. Let them come up. Haste ye, and come, all ye nations round about, and assemble yourselves together." This the summons.

The Prophet—"Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord!" This the prayer.

The Lord—"Let the nations bestir themselves, and come up to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, for there will I sit to judge all the nations round about." This the locality.

The Lord to his Hosts—"Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Come; tread ye; for the winepress is full, the vats overflow, for their wickedness is great." This the order.

The Prophet, a Spectator—"Multitudes, multitudes, in the Valley of Decision! For the Day of the Lord is near in the Valley of Decision! The sun and the moon are darkened, the stars withdraw their shining. And the Lord shall roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem. And the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the Hope of his people, and a stronghold to the children of Israel." This last the consolation.

All the prophets, Christ and his apostles, have looked to this end of our age. And the nations are "preparing." History is the clap of which prophecy is the fore-stroke, the echo of which prophecy is the voice. The growth of modern armies and the man-killing power of their weapons, the destructive enginery of modern warfare by land and sea, during the last twenty-five years, are appalling. The augmented war material, and armies swollen beyond all precedent in times of peace, are the omen of disaster to the world. They are the presage of the judgment day on all nations which no arbitration can arbitrate away. The guilt of Christendom must meet its punishment. The condemnation of the Christian nations is their military strength. The peace-footing of Italy to-day is 1,473,000 men of all arms; of Austria, 2,076,000; of Germany, 4,300,000; of France, 4,300,000; of Russia, 4,800,000; not to mention Great Britain, Turkey in Europe, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and the millions in Asia and Africa; nor to think of the enormous naval strength of the world.

Christian Alliance Missions.—The Christian Alliance, whose headquarters are in New York, has held camp meeting services at Old Orchard Beach. On Sunday Rev. Dr. A. B. Simpson raised for foreign missions at the meeting 60,000dols. About fifty young men and women volunteered as foreign missionaries. Some 6000dols. of the amount raised was pledged to the Cuban and Philippine missionary fund.

Priests: Who are They?

WHAT is the teaching of the Scriptures with reference to priesthood? The work of the Romanising party in the Protestant Church of England has made it absolutely necessary that we should face this question. The introduction of the confessional and the mass indicates most clearly that there is amongst us a class of men who are boldly assuming priestly power and authority. The mass, as defined the other day at a meeting of the English Church Union, is "a repetition of the sacrifice of the Cross," and it can only be celebrated by a duly ordained person, a person who, by virtue of his ordination, is supposed to have been placed in a position between his fellow-men and God; he offers sacrifice on their behalf. And, on the other hand, in the confessional he is supposed to come between God and his fellow-men for the purpose of hearing their confession of sin and of absolving them. Of course, this at once undermines the doctrine of the priesthood of believers, for if these men are priests, in the sense in which they understand the term, then the rank and file of Christians are not priests.

But what saith the Scripture? In the Old Testament we meet with a priestly system everywhere. We have the high priest, the rank and file of the priesthood, and the Levites, the ministers of the Temple. We have the priesthood divided into courses, the heads of which are chief priests, and each course is appointed to serve a week in turn at the Temple. We have the Temple with its altars of burnt offering and incense, and its numerous sacrifices for sin, etc. And whichever way we turn we are confronted with this elaborate priestly system. We see its beginning in the wilderness, its full development in the time of David and Solomon, and its continuance in the time of Malachi. And even in the days of our Lord this system still ruled, and its mark was upon everything.

But when we come to his Resurrection, we enter into an entirely different atmosphere. The whole priestly system, as it previously existed, is swept away (see especially Heb. x. 4-9), and a new condition of things takes its place. The Temple and the priesthood, it is true, continue right on to the destruction of Jerusalem, but these form no part of the Christian religion; and but for the Epistle to the Hebrews we should scarcely know that Christianity had been preceded by such an elaborate system, except from our reading of the Old Testament. Christianity has no temple other than a spiritual one; it has no special line of priests; neither does it know anything of a repetition of sacrifices (Heb. x. 12-14). The priest whose business it is not to offer a sacrifice but to proclaim a Gospel; not to shed the blood of animals, but to preach reconciliation to God through the blood of Jesus Christ (2 Cor. v. 20, 21). The ministers of the New Testament are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers (Ephes. iv. 11), and never once are they called priests. This is a most important point, and it ought to be especially remembered in face of the priestly pretensions of those who blasphemously assert that they offer again the sacrifice of the Cross every time they celebrate the mass.

And yet Christianity has its priestly system, but it differs entirely from that of Judaism. We have a High Priest (Heb. viii. 1-5) who has offered a sacrifice for sin, a sacrifice which can never be repeated—it has been offered "once for all" (Heb. x. 10). This High Priest is the Lord Jesus, who is thus designated again and again in the Epistle to the Hebrews (chaps. ii. 17; iii. 1; iv. 14; v. 10; vi. 20; vii. 26; viii. 1; ix. 11). And the word priest—hiereus—is also frequently used in the New Testament, but never to designate an order of Christian ministers. Used often in the Gospels and once in the Acts of the Apostles, it uniformly describes the Jewish priests; and in Acts xix. 13 it designates the priest of Jupiter. The term does not occur in any of the Epistles of the New Testament until we come to the Epistle to the Hebrews, where it is frequently met with. It is used (1) of the priests of the Temple (vii. 21, 23; ix. 6; x. 11); (2) of Melchizedek (vii. 1, 3); and (3) of Christ (v. 6; vii. 11, 15, 17, 21; viii. 4; x. 21). The term does not occur again except in the Book of Revelation, and there we find it three times. In chap. i. 6 John uses it in his ascription of praise to Jesus Christ, "He made us to be a kingdom, to be priests unto his God and Father" (R.V.); in chap. v. 10, the four living creatures and the four-and-twenty elders take up the words, and say, "And madest them to be unto our God a kingdom and priests" (R.V.); and in xx. 6, it is said that they who have part in the first resurrection "shall be priests of God and of Christ." Never in any other connection is this word used in the New Testament. Peter, using a related word—hierateuma in his first epistle (ii. 5, 9), applies "priesthood" to all Christians, without distinction. The obvious teaching of the passage is that and throughout all time, are a "holy," a "royal priesthood." Certainly there is no suggestion of any special line of priests apart from the rank and file of Christians. This, then, is the priestly system of Christianity—it consists in Christ the great High Priest and his believing people.

How baseless, then, are the pretensions of men who set themselves up to be priests in a special sense, and who would come between God and his people! There is only one Mediator through whom we can approach to God, the Man Christ Jesus (1 Tim ii. 5). Only one sacrifice for sin was needed, a sacrifice which was offered once in the end of the ages by our Lord Jesus Christ (Heb. ix. 26); and that sacrifice is eternally sufficient for the purpose; it could not be made one whit more efficacious if it were repeated every day until the end of time (Heb. ix. 24, 25; x. 10-18). What, then, is the sacrifice that we are to offer (for if Christians are priests they must have an offering to present unto God)? The first offering which we are to bring unto God is OURSELVES. "I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. xii. 1). Secondly, we are to offer the sacrifice of PRAISE. "Through Him then let us offer up a sacrifice of praise to God continually" (Heb. xiii. 15). Thirdly, we are to offer the sacrifice of GOOD WORKS. To do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Heb. xiii. 16). "I am filled, having received from Epaphroditus the things that came from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God" (Phil. iv. 18). These and other sacrifices of a like nature are the "SPIRITUAL SACRIFICES" that the "holy priesthood" are to offer "through Jesus Christ" (1 Peter ii. 5).

Christ and the Cross.

I THOUGHT the name of Christ to bear,
But not the cross with Christ to share.
He showed his wound; ah, me! my shame!
Christless to bear the Christian name.

I tried the work of Christ to speed,
But not the word of Christ to heed;
Regardless He it was who said
"My Father's will's My daily bread."

I thought the power of Christ to show
But not my weakness first to know;
He touched me and my strength was gone,
With cords of love then drew me on.

My glory now is in his cross,
And what was gain I count but loss;
My highest aim is Christ to know,
My greatest gain in Christ to grow.

The Jews and Palestine.

EVER since the destruction of the Second Temple the Jew has looked forward to re-establishment in his own land. Long before that dread time prophets depicted a golden age for the tribes, settled in the land "after their old estates," the Lord undertaking to multiply and watch over, and, indeed, to do better unto them than in the days of prosperity at the beginning of the nation. With these great expectations ever and anon brought to mind, the people have from generation to generation saluted one another with the words "Next year in Jerusalem!" And amidst persecution and great hardness of life, they have indulged the hope of restoration to national life and Divine favour.

The spirit of Zionism in the midst of Israel to-day is a sign of the times. The hopes that have for centuries been pent up in the Hebrew breast are finding expression, and, in fact, are being proclaimed from the housetops in Jewry. All the world is being informed that, though dispersed among the nations, the separated people is remembering its old home, and longing for resettlement. That this material desire should be more general than a wish to live again in the favour of God is not surprising. At the meetings of the Zionist Congress last week in Basle six hundred men of learning and influence gathered from many lands, and deliberated on questions which are associated with what is being anticipated as "The New Exodus." Among these were the colonisation of the Holy Land and the establishment of a Zionist Bank.

Dr. Herzl, the prime leader of the movement, was there, and a rousing speech was delivered by Dr. MAX NORDAU. The address was a magnificent oration, and as the speaker uttered his last words colleagues overwhelmed him with embraces, after which the rabbis who were present advanced in a body and blessed him. Among these were Russian rabbis of the most orthodox type, whose very absence from Russia on such an errand was fraught with serious danger to personal liberty. And this enthusiasm was exhibited by men whom the orator had rebuked for their past contempt of the national idea, and by rabbis whom he had reproached for neglect of the hope of return to the Land of Promise. Though Zionists may be a minority at present, Dr. Nordau declared that they would rejuvenate Judaism, because they represent the life of the race as a whole.

It is impossible to do justice to the addresses delivered; they may be read in The Jewish Chronicle of Sept. 2. We must content ourselves with a brief extract from the letter of a London delegate given in The Daily Mail of the same date: "Zionism is the Jew's answer to the world that persecutes him; the first ray of hope to millions born and bred and living in constant misery from which they could see no escape. The Anti-Semitic outbursts have been constantly referred to. Max Nordau hesitated not to point to the passage through the House of Lords of an Alien Immigration Bill as evidence that the disease was spreading to England.

"Who, ten years ago, would have said it was possible to bring together for anything Jewish men who had apparently lost all sympathy with matters Jewish, who observed not one iota of ritual practice—to bring them together with an enthusiasm that knows no bounds for a Jewish idea and a Jewish ideal, as Dr. Herzl has brought so many present at this congress? And who in his wildest dreams could have imagined that side by side with such Jews it would have been possible to bring such rabbis to work hand in hand for a common object? Personally, I believe emphatically that Zionists are making history."

New Mission Fields.—At the invitation of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, a meeting of representatives of different denominational boards has been held to consider plans for carrying on missions in Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Micronesia, in view of the way in which these fields are likely to be opened as a result of the war. One object of the conference was to agree upon an assignment of different centres, so as to avoid rivalry or duplication in work, and to enable each society to occupy the position that it is best fitted to hold.

THE LATE

Miss S. G. Stock.

MANY will learn with sorrow that Miss Sarah Geraldina Stock has passed away. As a chronicler of Gospel effort in the foreign field she was widely known, while her hymns have found their way into many collections. A sister of Mr. Eugene Stock, editorial secretary of the Church Missionary Society, she shared his well-known zeal, and showed a like devotion to the great cause of missions. She recently went to Penmaenmawr for a short holiday, and whilst there was seized with pneumonia. That was on Saturday week; the following day her condition was evidently critical, and on Monday, August 29, the heart failed, and she fell asleep.

Born on December 27, 1838, she was taken in her sixtieth year. Her early literary work was in connection with Sunday-schools. One of her hymns appeared in The Church Sunday School Magazine as early as 1868. Her "Lessons on Israel in Egypt and in the Wilderness" (1874), are only inferior to those of her brother on "The Life of Our Lord and the Acts of the Apostles." She also wrote "The Child's Life of Our Lord" (1879), "Bible Stories from the Old Testament" (1882), and other similar works. Later on her attention was more strongly drawn to the cause of foreign missions. Her most popular work was perhaps "The Story of Uganda and the Victoria Nyanza Mission," of which a second edition was published in 1894.

From photograph by Mr. Octavius Carter, 19, Commercial Road, Bournemouth.

For the Church Missionary Society, which was closest to her heart, Miss Stock wrote "The Eastern Equatorial African Mission" (1891), besides a host of leaflets. The illustrated report of the Society's work, called "The Story of the Year," was also from Miss Stock's sympathetic pen.

These publications have but a passing value when compared with the deceased's hymns and poems, a collection of which she issued in a volume entitled "Joy and Sorrow." In the words of a writer in The Record, "perhaps the most prevailing note of Miss Stock's hymns is that of loving personal devotion to Christ as the Saviour and King, whose service is not only 'perfect freedom' but full of joy." Many of Miss Stock's hymns appeared in connection with the Gleaners' Union, of which she may be said to have been the poetess; and with valedictory meetings for missionaries, which she did much to inspire with a holy joy rather than sadness. She was also in warm sympathy with home missions, and long took an active part in evangelistic work. Among the hymns which have passed into general use are: "Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking," "The tender light of home behind," "A cry, as of pain," "Hear ye not the tramp of reapers?" "O Master, when Thou callest."

Another volume of Miss Stock's was "Life Abundant, and Other Poems" (Shaw), the pages of which glow with holy thought and heavenly aspiration. What Christian will not enter into the following:—

UPWARD AND HEAVENWARD.

Upward and heavenward! This be my song;
Upward and heavenward! all the day long;
Upward and heavenward! thus may I be Ever, my Lord, drawing nearer to Thee.

Upward and heavenward! though I be dust,
There is my home if in Jesus I trust;
Upward and heavenward! then be my gaze,
Strengthened and quickened by prayer and by praise!

Upward and heavenward! So may the light
Curtain me round with its canopy bright,
Light of his loving care, light of his Word,
Light of his presence, my Saviour and Lord!

Miss Stock's health was but frail, so she did not move much among the multitudes. Yet all who knew her were charmed by her amiability and Christian consistency. Her last days and hours were spent in labour which was to her a delight. During her holiday she was busily engaged in preparing the proposed "Church Missionary Hymn Book." When weakness necessitated rest from that, she conversed about work for God in far Uganda. She had received a letter from a missionary in Uganda, through his wife. On Monday afternoon she said, "Read me Mr. ——'s letter." She listened to the end, and then said, "No more just now," so the letter was literally the last thing read to her.

Bolivia Waiting.

A LEAFLET entitled "Bolivia Waiting," issued by the South American Evangelical Mission, gives "a message from the borders," by Mr. John Linton, who, with his wife, is hoping soon to enter the dark land. About two years ago, compassionating the neglected condition of Bolivia, Mr. Linton sailed as a pioneer missionary. After a few months spent acquiring the Spanish language and quietly witnessing for Christ in the Argentine town of Tucuman, a further step northward was made to San Pedro, a village some 100 miles south of the Bolivian frontier, where large numbers of Chiriguanos are met with from across the border, and where opportunity has thus been afforded of becoming acquainted with the Indian ways and tongue, and with the reality of their needs.

Mr. Linton has been carrying on a quiet, steady work among the mixed population at San Pedro, and the time seems near for a further advance. He writes: "My wife and I are ready to go, but we need a third person who can either accompany us or stay here in San Pedro and keep up the connection. I do not need to tell you there are sufficient souls to make the effort worth while; as near as I can gather, the Chiriguano tribe alone numbers some 40,000, and there are other and much larger nations of which they speak. A doctor who would be willing to be lost in the wilderness and to take hard fare would be of inestimable service."

Further particulars of the enterprise may be had from Mr. B. W. Ranken, 34, Broadgreen-road, Old Swan, Liverpool.

The Blankenburg Conference.

Alliance Hall, Blankenburg.

THE small beginning of this movement took place when Miss v. Weling, a lady of noble rank and of high culture, made her abode in a house which had been left to her in Blankenburg, with the view of commencing evangelistic work in the Thüringian forest, and in the towns and villages of Luther's land. She arrived in the year 1886, and soon after her arrival Dr. Ziemann, who had laboured in the Gospel in Weimar and other places of Thüringia, united with her, and a conference of Christians was attempted, to which came Dr. Baedeker, Mr. Gebhardt, Mr. Wilms, and some pastors, in all twenty-eight people, on September 13 and 14. The following year the attendance grew in numbers, and friends from Berlin, Leipzig, and Halle joined the conference, and also some English, Dutch, and Swedish friends.

Very soon it was found necessary to build a second house with a conference-room, holding 120 to 150 people. The following years the numbers increased, until last year (1897) Miss v. Weling had to hire a large school-house for the occasion, which held about 300 people, and was filled and crowded. Very many who from various countries attended that conference were full of joyful expectation that the conference of 1898 would more than double the numbers of 1897. It was thought desirable to secure a larger hall, and this could only be obtained by building.

The proposition was made known through the Allianzblatt, and very soon hearty responses and gifts were forwarded from various parts of Germany, from England, Holland, and most of all from Russia and Finland. These large contributions, especially from friends of the Alliance in Russia, encouraged Miss v. Weling to purchase a suitable plot of land, and to make a plan for the hall. And now he thirteenth conference on international and inter-denominational lines has been held in the Alliance Hall, which for beauty and convenience surpasses the expectation of all.

So the Alliance Conference has stepped out of its infancy, and justifies the hope of further increase and progress. The subject for this year's conference is "The One Church of God," embracing various denominations and churches, so far as they own the one only foundation—the Lord Jesus Christ in death and resurrection. The working of the one Spirit as the vital power was very manifest in the meetings of believers of various church forms and nations and tongues.

Contemporaneously with the enlargement of the Alliance work Miss v. Weling received into her home orphan children, whom she takes under her motherly care. In the year 1886 the first three children were received, and their number has grown to twelve, amongst whom is one Armenian girl and an Indian boy and girl. The massacres in Armenia and the thousands of orphaned children brought fresh claims, and the needs of Armenia made known by the Allianzblatt drew out sympathetic responses from many hearts. Gifts were sent in response, which resulted in about forty children being provided for in Armenia and in Bulgaria. Also a whole colony of Armenian refugees in Alexandria have, through the efforts of the same paper, been maintained by the sale of their embroidery works since March, 1897.

Bible and tract distribution has also proved a most fruitful means for evangelising the many Italian navvies in Germany and Switzerland.

The Allianzblatt was begun to be printed in 1890, and has proved to be a very healthy stimulus to promote the unity of the Spirit in the Church of God. Another paper, Für Dich, was begun in 1893. This is a very cheap weekly paper of an evangelistic tendency, it is published at the price of ten for an English penny, and is much esteemed by the people; the demand for both papers is ever on the increase. An evangelist who visits the towns and villages, and who also holds Bible-classes and evangelistic services, resides in the Alliance House. Many needs are being supplied, and yet fresh needs arise on all hands.

It is a great joy and privilege to be in any way connected with this centre of missionary and evangelistic effort, and to find oneself united with the Church of God as represented by members of various denominations and nations. Truly it gives one a taste of the reality of Psalm cxxxiii.

In the Thuringian Forest.

THE little sapling planted twelve years ago at Blankenburg has grown into a vigorous tree. Miss von Weling planted it, but it was of the Lord's own right hand planting. The tens have become hundreds. Two houses sufficed at first. Now there are three houses, a conference hall seating 600, a dining booth for some 300, while in scores of houses and inns all available rooms are secured and filled. The lodging and feeding of over 500 persons for four or five days is a very heavy task, but scores of willing hearts move many hands and feet, and the thing is done. Nobles and commoners, learned and simple, rich and poor, find service for the King a high distinction and dignity. They remember that the Lord Jesus girded Himself and washed the feet of his disciples, and they have heard Him say, "Ye also should wash one another's feet."

The new hall, which was only commenced in May, and which has now and then tried the faith and patience of the managers, has been nearly completed, and was opened on Monday evening in a condition fit for comfortable use, and solemnly dedicated to the Lord for the service of his people, and for a testimony to others that true Christians are one in Christ. Over the portals are the words "Allianz Halle." As we enter the hall we behold, spanning the platform arch, the motto of the Evangelical Alliance, "UNUM CORPUS SUMUS IN CHRISTO," while the platform itself rests under the grand words, "Jesus Christ yesterday, to-day, and for ever also, the same."

Many countries are represented, but the immense mass of attendants are German. Many languages are spoken, but German and English have been enough for all purposes of conference.

The theme for consideration has been "The One Church of God," resting on one basis of purpose, covenant, and sacrifice; vitalised by the one indwelling Spirit, called to and fitted for service within and without; moved by one high aim—the glory of God in Jesus Christ by the Spirit; cheered by one blessed hope—the glorious appearing of the great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ.

While theological and scholastic discussion has been well sustained, the tendency has been rather to deep heart-searching and practical teaching. Many mighty Germans have been with us—Baedeker, Jellinghaus, Stockmayer, and others—but God has very specially called us to searching of heart and purging out filthiness of the flesh and spirit, by the words of his English servants R. G. Walker, F. B. Meyer, and Walter Sloan.

The general and sectional prayer-meetings have been thronged. The need and woes of men and nations have been laid before the Lord; and for mercies innumerable to saint and sinner, to communities and churches, thanks and praise have gone up to the God of all grace.

Some missionary societies and works have found their place in the programme and their operations described by competent men.

Some have sought solitude, an easy thing on the beautiful hillsides which overlook Blankenburg, and many a quiet spot in the fir woods has witnessed very solemn transactions between God and souls—souls convicted, souls ashamed, souls longing, and souls filled with good. Others have been much with one another. They seek to see God in the glory of the face of Jesus, in the wondrous revelations of the Word, and in the holy and happy brethren and sisters whom they meet. One book is enough for some to read. Others ask for two, and many rejoice to behold the glory of the Lord in all His books.

It would be impossible for anyone who has lived through a week at this German Keswick to hint that presumptions of perfection in the flesh or forgetfulness of practical godliness had here a place. We have been cut to pieces by the piercing sword of the Spirit in the hands of our teachers We have retired to weep in shame of heart before our gracious and patient Saviour. We have left not a few broken idols and chains on the ground bedewed by our tears, in the valleys and hills which have echoed our praises.

Testimony has been frequent to the influence of Blankenburg, its conferences, its work, and its publications on Germany, on Scandinavia, on America, and on Russia.

Not a few have learned that Divine truth is larger than the teachings of any one church, that Divine love is broader than the conceptions of denominationalists, that Divine salvation is, and must be, a righteous salvation, and that the sovereignty of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in providence, in grace, and in discipline, is supreme.

The united communion on Wednesday night, which divided the Conference into halves, was a culminating blessing. It was conducted by the brethren Baedeker, Stockmayer, and F. B. Meyer. About 300 attended, and thus illustrated the beautiful oneness of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the Land of Luther.

THE Blankenburg Conference is, in many respects, unique. How long it may retain its present character it is impossible to say, but if the numbers continue to increase at the present ratio it will be impossible to maintain long the family feeling which now prevails.

Imagine three houses, two together and one at a little distance, standing in a picturesque garden, overlooking the little town of Blankenburg. Behind are the green cultivated slopes that culminate in a ruined castle, whilst before are the richly wooded hills of the Thüringian forest, intersected by lovely walks through the solemn pillared aisles of pine. Such is the Alliance House, where Fräulein v. Weling is caring for orphans, holding meetings for women and children, working for Armenia, editing two papers, and pouring out streams of health-giving power to the whole neighbourhood, indeed to all parts of Germany.

One of the rooms of this establishment amply sufficed for the earlier conferences; but that of last year had suddenly risen to such large dimensions that it was needful to hire the hall where the first Froebel Kindergarten was held years ago. And in anticipation of still larger numbers attending this year a tasteful and commodious hall was erected on a site a little above the level of the garden we have described, but adjacent to it.

The opening of this hall was an interesting ceremony. The congregation waited in the broad space before the steps, till, at 8 o'clock, Dr. Baedeker, leading Fräulein von Weling by the hand, made his way through the crowd. The builder, standing before the closed door, presented her with the key, with which she unlocked it and entered the hall, saying in German, "I desire that this hall should be consecrated for the service of God." The people flocked in after her, singing as they passed down the aisles and stood in the seats one of the noble old German hymns beginning "O, blessed house..." Addresses were delivered by several, taking as their theme the essential unity of the body of Christ, of which that congregation of six hundred persons was witness, gathered from the Baltic provinces of Russia, from Sweden and Great Britain, and from all parts of Germany, composed of pastors, evangelists, students, counts and countesses, barons and baronesses, with deaconesses, working people from the neighbourhood, the artisans who had constructed the hall, and the boys and girls whom Fräulein von Weling has adopted as her own.

The gifted Christian lady who summons these conferences insists on regarding all who attend as her guests. She requisitions all the hotels for sleeping accommodation, but arranges that those who attend shall take their meals at her table. For this purpose this year a temporary building was erected, in which some 300 persons were served with three meals a day, and some seventy or eighty more in one of the houses. How it is done is a mystery; no charge is made, but an unpretending little box receives the thank-offerings of those who wish to contribute, and the contents of this are known only to Fräulein von Weling and God. Her whole work is in faith. And in answer to prayer the necessary funds are supplied for the great expenses of this conference and the maintenance of the whole work. Some £300 were needed, in addition to what had been contributed to defray the cost of the New Alliance Hall. No doubt this debt will not be allowed to remain long, and if English readers like to contribute it will be a pleasant link between the two nations. The contributions may be sent to the office of this paper, or direct to Fräulein von Weling, Allianzhaus, Blankenburg, Thüringia, Germany.

The presence of so many pastors and evangelists suggested the holding of a special meeting for them, which was addressed by one of the Keswick deputation, Pastor Stockmayer interpreting. At this and others of the meetings a very remarkable power was manifest. Many wept and broke in on the prayers with expressions of emphatic assent. Speaking for himself, the writer has rarely been more conscious of the presence and power of the Divine Spirit—a feature to which Mr. W. B. Sloan, of the C.I.M., and Mr. R. C. Morgan bore emphatic witness. It was very touching to sit at the Lord's table, to join in the Lord's Prayer, and mingle in the various gatherings with so many of God's children of different nationalities, and it was pleasant to hear the tunes so familiar to us at Keswick and elsewhere, though the German translations of the words seemed somewhat strange.

The tone and spirit of the Convention were very deep and searching. God is evidently doing a mighty work in the land of Luther, of Ter Steegen, of Jacob Behmen, and of Zinzendorf through these annual conferences, which are being repeated in all parts of that vast empire; and our beloved brethren Baedeker, Stockmayer, Jellinghaus, Lepsius, and others may be congratulated at the wide and effectual door which has been opened to them.

Closing Meetings.

The following notes of the closing meetings sum up the character and effects of this new thing in Germany:—On Thursday evening Mr. W. B. Sloan was asked to speak first about the C.I.M. Pastor Stockmayer interpreted. Then Professor Ströter, from New York, spoke with much power upon the Jews, and Dr. Baedeker finished. On Friday we had a splendid time. In the forenoon Dr. Lepsius, Pastor Paul, and Pastor Stockmayer spoke on the Lord being glorified in the Church. The Lord was upon them all in manifest power. At one point of the meeting those were asked to stand who had entered into "full peace" during these days, and about thirty rose at once. It is supposed that most of these were only converted at this time.

On Friday afternoon the meeting for "reports of work" went on for three hours. In the evening Professor Ströter, Pastor Stockmayer, and Dr. Baedeker spoke on the Lord's coming. Pastor Stockmayer was very striking on "he that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself even as He is pure," and "perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The meeting for praise on Saturday forenoon ran on for two hours. Dr. Baedeker opened; then Pastor Stockmayer got matters in hand, and, after speaking on the healing of the woman with the issue of blood, and the having to confess before the multitude, he called for testimonies, and there was a wonderful response. It went on for about three-quarters of an hour, and there were often three or four on their feet at once waiting their opportunity. Very many who took part were women, and I question if there have been many such meetings in Germany before.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Beach Services.—Great Yarmouth.

Gospel services have been held among the visitors during August by the "Open-air Mission." Meetings were held throughout the week on the beach, in the very centre of the people, in front of the crowded parade. Children's services were held in the morning, and open-air services for adults in the evenings, whilst tract-distribution and preaching in the town occupied the afternoons.

On Sundays, through the courtesy of the lessee and the special permission of the Town Council, the Singers' Ring was available for evangelistic services for the first time for several years. The Singers' Ring is a circular concert hall, open to the sky, situated about the centre of the beach, and capable of holding 1500 people. A more admirable position it would be impossible to find. Here, on three successive Sundays, meetings were held, morning, afternoon, and evening, with most encouraging results, the evening meetings being especially good. Many of the beach meetings during the week were of a solemn and impressive nature, and "signs following" were not wanting.

The clergy co-operated with the preachers of the Open-air Mission. All the missioners were men of large experience, and admirably fitted for such work. J. J. Willis, Curate, Great Yarmouth.

Kent Fruit Pickers.

A very successful season's evangelistic work among the fruit pickers in the neighbourhood of Sidcup and Swanley has been concluded. The mission is carried on under the auspices of the Country Towns Mission, and the resident missionary, Mr. Melling, assisted by a band of honorary workers, has been unceasing in his efforts to provide for the spiritual needs of those lodged in the various encampments in the district. Outdoor services were held throughout the week, and individual visits were made. Several testified to personal blessing received, and everywhere the services were highly appreciated. It is estimated that the total number of people thus ministered to is at least 2500, many of whom are gipsies, others the poorest of the poor from London and the large provincial towns. W. L. S.

Evangelists' Movements.

As the result of a fortnight's mission recently conducted by Mr. A. H. Carter, of the Bible League, a definite Gospel work, on strictly unsectarian lines, is being carried on at the Commercial Sale-rooms, Brentwood. Many have testified to blessing received.

Mr. Thomas Payne has concluded a ten days' mission for Rev. J. Mountain in Tunbridge Wells. The meetings have been well attended; and at the concluding meeting many testified to spiritual blessing received. Mr. Mountain also expressed his public thanks for the Divine influence which had attended the services.

Mr. David Rea pitched his large tent, seating 2000, in the first week in May in the centre of Dublin, and has gone on preaching the Gospel nightly ever since. The tent was crowded on Sunday nights and well attended on week nights. Many professed conversion, both Protestant and Catholic. Interest in the meetings is still increasing. From the first Mr. Rea started a noonday prayer meeting, where all denominations of Christians come together, and where we have had blessed seasons of refreshing. Pray that we may have greater blessing during the remainder of the time.—J. S.

Great American Tent, Dalston.—Gospel services have been continued in the tent during the week, each day the numbers increasing, a large children's service being held on Saturday morning, and the evening meeting being one of great interest. Closing services were held on Sunday afternoon, and in the evening the tent was completely filled with an interested and responsive audience. A large number of people remained to the after-meeting, up till ten o'clock. Mr. Leonard Weaver preached with power. There was much joy and enthusiasm, and a large number of people came forward to the platform seeking the Lord, very many of whom confessed Christ before leaving the meeting. The great tent is now being removed to Bruce Grove, South Tottenham, where the work will be resumed. The opening services on Saturday evening will commence at 6 o'clock for workers, and 7.30 for the general public. Services will be continued on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, also at 7.30 on Sunday and every night during the week.—A.G.

Messrs. Bewley and F. Weaver's forthcoming engagements are: Sept. 4-16, White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow; 18-30, Belfast; Oct. 2-14, Govan Free Church, Glasgow.

For blessing on Gospel work at Heacham, near Hunstanton.

For blessing on monthly meeting for deepening of spiritual life, Sept. 15, at Ipswich. Speaker, Rev. E. R. Hassé.

For blessing on an eight days' mission—Sept. 11 to 18—by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, in the Mission Hall, Surrey-square, Old Kent-road, S.E.

Praise.

For much blessing given on work amongst children on the beach at Bournemouth and Margate in connection with the Special Service Mission.

Personalia.

Mr. W. S. Caine meditates an early tour in the United States.

Mr. W. J. Gibbs, of the Farwig Mission, Bromley, was married on Tuesday last to Miss Ada Rose, well known as a Gospel singer.

Mrs. Edward Crossley, of Halifax, is very ill. A friend who has known her for years writes to request prayer to God for her restoration, or, if this may not be, that she may be spared acute suffering.

Dr. T. Witton Davies, Principal of the Midland Baptist College, Nottingham, has resigned that position, and accepted a unanimous invitation to be Professor of Old Testament Literature at the Bangor College, North Wales.

Drs. Baedeker and Gritton, who attended the convention at Blankenburg last week, passed on to Saxony to visit Pastor Mascher, whose Gospel work is well known. Our friends go to comfort the pastor, who is yet subjected to persecution in various ways.

Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, director of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, has returned to London, after a two months' mission tour on the Continent. He was well received by the Jews with whom he came in contact, and much encouraged by what he saw and heard in his work of visitation.

Rev. Thomas Champness leaves England next month for a long tour abroad. He will first visit America and preach and speak at various centres. He will then proceed to China, where he proposes to make a special study of the condition of the people, with a view to possible openings for lay missionary work, and afterwards visit Australia, where he has already accepted a number of engagements.

Two Syrian missionaries, brothers, whom I met in Tunis last year, F. S. and A. S. Nemour, are now in London, in consequence of the mission with which they were connected having, for the present at least, been closed. They understand French, Italian, and Arabic, and will be glad to be employed while waiting for an open door to other mission work.—R. C. M.

Rev. John McNeill has completed his month of residence at Stonehaven. While fulfilling his engagement with the Free Church congregation as their pulpit supply for the entire month, he has also been able to appear in the pulpits of the Established and U.P. Churches, and has invariably attracted crowded audiences. At the Free Church Convention in Inverness he is announced to give an address on evangelistic work.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan returned on Saturday from his visit to the United States. He preached twice at Tollington Park Chapel on Sabbath last. In the course of his evening address he stated that he had not accepted an invitation to leave England—had not, indeed, received one. He added that it was not safe for English newspapers to quote American papers on personal matters relating to Englishmen. Rumours are too easily accepted as true.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Japanese Jottings.

MANY things of vast importance are coming to the front in this interesting mission field. Only within a few days the Bible Society, through its faithful veteran agent Rev. H. Loomis, presented a handsomely prepared copy of the complete Bible to the Emperor. Marquis Ito arranged for the presentation, and a letter of thanks has come from the Palace. This means much where many in high official life have thrown their influence against its widespread circulation. The thirty or more colporteurs going through the empire will now be better received among all classes, and doubtless this imitative people will follow their ruler's example. Even in receiving a Christian Bible a divinity cannot do wrong. The Japanese Christians have prepared a beautiful copy in their own language for their emperor. It is an exquisite piece of workmanship, and every part is of Japanese manufacture. No doubt that now the Mikado will also accept this gift from the hands of native converts.

Mr. Loomis, representing American and British Bible societies, is very hopeful that there will be an upspringing of a great harvest from the million copies of the Scriptures now in the hands of this people. Indeed, the missionaries I have conversed with are full of good courage. The rapid multiplication of converts through nationalistic influence, and an abnormal desire to imitate Western civilisation, was followed by a few years of reaction and depression. Some discouraged souls feared that the day of grace was over for Japan. Added to this came the dissatisfaction connected with Kamai churches (native Congregational) and the attitude of the Doshisha trustees towards the missionary members of the faculty, and their disagreement with the American Board. The atmosphere was full of ecclesiastical agitation, and other churches were affected. But now there is a tendency among the native preachers to harmonise with their American brethren, as also a repudiation of the rationalistic teaching promulgated by advocates of the New Theology.

I have addressed several congregations of Japanese, the Daikin (Presbyterian Synod) (the M.E. 25th anniversary), the annual Y.M.C.A., and on several occasions the summer school of young men, representing twenty-three colleges besides the Imperial University of Tokyo. My teaching on the atonement and other radical foundation doctrines was heartily received, and votes of thanks given with generous promptitude. The recent visit of Mr. Mott wholly changed the complexion of the summer school from a loose and creedless assembly to an earnest and Evangelical body. Hereafter it will be merged into the Y.M.C.A. national gathering for Bible study.

Mr. Robt. Speer providentially followed Mr. Mott, though on a different mission. His wise counsels, faithful adherence to Evangelical doctrines, and gracious disposition has been used of God in toning up the foreign brethren among whom he visited.

We have already commenced our Bible conferences among missionaries and their families. The first is now in session at Karinzawa, 100 miles north-west from Yokohama. One fact has deeply impressed me: that the new, bright, clean, though very plain, wooden Union Church building lies close to a Shinto temple, whose buildings are decayed, whose images are defaced, and whose walks are overgrown with weeds. My heart thrills with joy as I read in this parable the prophetic announcements that idols shall be overthrown, and our Lord Christ alone be exalted. Later our conferences will be held at Arima, near Kobe, and Hiezen, near Kyoto. In September (D.V.) we begin evangelistic work for natives and foreigners.

Mr. Reginald Studd, the youngest of the brothers well known for their missionary and Christian work, is at present in Japan. He is attending our conferences, and hopes to give himself wholly to some form of mission work hereafter. Our young brother desires to be filled with the Spirit, and to follow the Lord fully. G. C. Needham.

Tientsin Mission Hospital.

THE story of the L.M.S. Hospital in Tientsin for the benefit of the Chinese is well known to many of our readers. Founded by Dr. John Kenneth Mackenzie, the charge of the hospital devolved, on his lamented death, upon Dr. F. C. Roberts. By whole-hearted devotion and untiring energy, this brave man crowded the work of a lifetime into a few years. When he entered the King's presence, Dr. G. P. Smith took up the work, and is now the medical missionary in charge, with native staff.

There is a free bed in the Mackenzie Ward, named after the founder, and supported by some in England who wish to perpetuate his saintly memory amongst those he loved and for whom he worked. Recently Dr. Smith wrote to the lady who transmits the sum, forwarding her a letter in Chinese characters from an occupant of the Mackenzie bed; of which letter a translation was enclosed, as follows:—"Mrs. N——, honoured lady,—I am a sick man who came into Dr. Smith's hospital, and he has put me into the bed which you support. My sickness is daily getting better, thanks to God's goodness. Dr. Smith tells me that you always pray for the sick here. I, a sick man, cannot repay you, but I thank you for your goodness, and pray that the Lord will always keep you. I am sorry I cannot see you face to face, but I pray that God will keep you, that you may be in good health, and that your heart may be ever aglow. I hope that the Lord will save my body and soul, and then through the kindness of God we shall see each other in his presence. This is my heart's desire." The writer is an aged man, a Christian.

There is a Roberts Memorial operating room, and Dr. Smith wrote, in reply to a question as to supporting another free bed, to be called "The Roberts bed": "If the Lord puts it into the heart of some others to do this I will welcome the idea." The yearly cost is £5, and for 5s. more a portion of God's Word is given to the patients. Dr. Roberts was greatly beloved, and the very fact of his name being before the sick would bring back his teaching to the hearts of those to whom he gave up his life.

Progress in China.

THE tide of progress and reform, in more senses than one, seems to have set in among the Chinese people. This may mean much for the rising generation, especially if a Christian direction can be given to the movement. To do this will involve heroic endeavours, and great care lest culture shall be made to appear as a substitute for Christianity. Some brave men are addressing themselves to the problem, and we trust they will be divinely guided to the only end that is worth their while.

One of these is Rev. Gilbert Reid, for some years missionary in Shantung, under the Presbyterian Board of New York City. Having worked among the higher classes of the Chinese people, he has at length planned for the establishment of an International Institute in Peking, to consist of library and reading-room, a commercial museum, class-rooms, and large auditorium. It is thought that such an institute, located in the capital of the empire, will be an intellectual centre for the diffusion of enlightening and liberal influences among the mandarin and educated classes of all China. It will serve as a model for other schemes of national development. It will primarily benefit the Chinese, as a government and as a people, but by opening up the country and inculcating ideas of progress, breaking down prejudice, and establishing friendliness, will prove beneficial to every nation and individual having dealings with China or in any way affected by the policies which it adopts. Being thus widely beneficial, both in purpose and operation, the Institute may rightly be termed International.

In a circular letter Mr. Reid says: "This Institute is a new enterprise, entirely distinct in itself, is not controlled by any particular church or creed, but is based on principles and carried on in a spirit broad and philanthropic, with which intelligent and generous men of every nation and creed can agree and co-operate. Were it not that friendly relations had already been opened up with a large number of mandarins and literati by mere personal effort, there would be no guarantee of success in the mere establishment of such an institution. The plan has received the distinct endorsement and approval of the Princes and Ministers of the Imperial Board of Foreign Affairs, eleven men in all, including both progressives and conservatives, Manchus and Chinese. This is the first time that such an official sanction has ever been given to a foreign scheme under foreign auspices, aiming at progress, enlightenment, and reform. The famous statesman Li Hung Chang also gave a personal letter of testimonial."

The buildings will, it is thought, cost £15,000, one-fifth of which has been raised in China. A considerable amount has also been subscribed in America, both for the building and for maintaining the work. Mr. Reid is to have the active co-operation of Dr. W. A. P. Martin, and from both of them further information may be procured from Peking. On all hands it is believed that this undertaking may do much to promote an understanding between East and West. We trust that our first misgivings—arising from a fear that the work may fall short of spiritual fruition—may not be realised; but that, with definite purpose and strong direction, working among women as well as men, the Institute may help to advance the Gospel among the needy millions of China.

The Philafrican League.

WE have several times called attention to the work for Africa founded by Mr. Heli Chatelain, and now being carried on by himself and a staff of mission helpers. Mr. Chatelain reached Benguela, on the West Coast of Africa, just a year ago, and from his first inland station, named Lincoln, he has sent deeply interesting letters. There is every reason to hope that the Philafrican League Mission will present a strong influence against the prevalent evils of slavery, polygamy, witchcraft, and intemperance. The region in which the station has been planted is healthful and fertile, and the instruction of the natives in civilised ways of life and Christian truth and practice has been begun with much encouragement.

In a recent letter, Mr. Chatelain says: "Njila-Hulu, the king or head chief of the country to our west, has paid us a visit. He was accompanied by a considerable retinue of his head men, and spent two or three hours with us. The chief is an intelligent old man, and seems well disposed. I showed him the Gospel story in the Kimbundu language, with illustrations, and gave him some idea of the life and work of 'Jesu,' the Saviour of men. I sang to him a few hymns, and was pleased to learn that some of his people, who had worked for the mission, had already sung one or two lines in the streets of his capital. I also showed him the pictures of the 'Illustrated African Album,' which he and his followers greatly enjoyed. Some day I hope to return the visit of this royal guest.

"We are now getting more labourers than we can effectively superintend. Last Saturday twenty-five came from one village, and I had to send several back. I may be compelled to reduce the wages, so as to reduce the demand for work; yet it is not a pleasure to see the disappointed faces of the young men and women who have come a long way to earn a few yards of cloth. A dozen of them have stayed here a day and a night, hoping to be accepted as workers; but as only thirty can be properly looked after, they will be obliged to wait until some have finished their time and there are vacancies to be filled.

"Last Sunday morning I had as visitors a bright lot of girls from six to eighteen years of age, from Njila-Hulu's district, and I formed them into a Sunday-school. They did their best to learn the words of the tunes as I sang to them. In the afternoon, as I was trying to get a few minutes of rest, I heard voices at my door, begging me to repeat the sweet song about 'Jesu.' They said, 'We have forgotten what we learned this morning.' Of course, I could not resist this welcome request; and, 'out of session,' I gave them another singing lesson. Yesterday and the day before, while I was directing some of the young women in their work, they asked me to sing the hymns, and expressed their great delight."

To reinforce the first mission, so that, after gaining due experience, some of its workers may be spared for a second mission, three young men have sailed from America to join Mr. Chatelain. Further particulars of the work may be had from the office of the League, Room 517 United Charities Building, corner Twenty-second-street and Fourth-avenue, New York.

The Nepaul Mission.

WRITING from Sukhia, by Darjeeling, Mr. J. W. Innes-Wright says: "We are being encouraged in our work. When itinerating lately we were able to hold several lantern and other Gospel meetings over the border, and even to sleep one night inside the closed land of Nepaul. At none of the places visited had the people heard the Gospel before, and at some my wife was the first British lady the women and children had ever seen. Itinerating on the Himalayas is hard work, as one has often to climb 1500 to 3000 feet, or more (and on foot) up or down jungle paths as steep as a house roof, in order to reach the 'bustis,' or little villages which lie scattered over the mountain sides. It is hard work, and we often get but a handful of people after all; but it is blessed work to tell about the Lord Jesus to those who have never heard of Him. We wish some who love the Lord would come out to help us.

"Through our medical work we have got to know a large number of Nepaulis and others, both near us and across the border in Nepaul. Over 5300 cases have been treated in less than ten months, and the Lord has blessed the help given to the healing of many. Best of all, one woman who has been coming daily to morning prayers in our house seems really to have given her heart to Christ, and though opposed by her relatives has asked for baptism. It is now (July 11) the middle of 'the rains,' and as we sometimes have a fall of ten inches in twenty-four hours you can understand that we cannot get about so much now as during the cold season. We continue, however, to have good meetings in front of our house on bazaar days, and, owing to prevailing sickness, many are constantly coming to us for medical help."

Convention in Syria.

WE have had a very interesting series of meetings, lasting five days (August 9-13), convened by the American Mission, Beyrout. They were held in the playground of the Boys' Training Home, Brumana, which being roofed over with canvas formed a kind of tent. An Arabic paper says, "The missionaries from all parts of the land gathered for prayer, and the pine trees made music above them." There were four meetings each day. There was a gathering for prayer at 6.30 a.m., called the "Sunrise Meeting"; the second was held at 9.30, when papers on various subjects (followed by discussion) were read, such as—"Missions in the Levant, their Aim and Motive"; "Bible and Tract Distribution"; "Education as a Factor in Spiritual Influence"; "Evangelistic Work among Christian Sects—Moslems, Jews, and Druses"; "The promotion of the Missionary Spirit among Eastern Churches"; "Medical Missions as advancing the Religion of Christ"; and "Women's Work for Women." The afternoon meeting lasted from 2.30 p.m. to 4; and the "Sunset Meeting" began at 6. These were mostly devotional, though in the former some definite subject was brought forward connected with the power and work of the Holy Spirit. And, indeed, these meetings were spoken of as being the outcome of the yearning, prayerful desire of many hearts to know more of his power and fulness.

In the evenings there were social gatherings in the various houses, when the times of Bible reading and prayer were truly helpful and refreshing. The last evening there was a general gathering at the hotel after supper, for further acquaintance with any we had seen little of; for there being more than 150 in attendance, it was not easy to know all even by name. Those present were from Egypt, Jaffa, Sidon, Baakleen, Hasbeya, Baalbec, Damascus, Tripoli, Marsovan, Orfa, Constantinople, etc., and, of course, many from Beyrout. And now those who have thus been gathered in happy fellowship are most of them again wildly scattered. It has been very helpful to talk over various subjects and compare notes with some of long and deep experience in this land, and of the Master's gracious dealings and unfailing faithfulness to his servants. One who had had much blessing on his work in America, and who has been out here seventeen years, said to me: "I have pondered much how it is that the longed-for full tide of blessing does not come"; and, after some interchange of thought, he added, "There is, no doubt, a great leavening going forward in the land, and perhaps God in his wisdom sees that this quiet work is best at present, for were there great revivals, attracting general attention, probably the whole work would at once be stopped in the same summary way that schools have been closed in some places." The harvest is long delayed, but there is promise of a time when "sowers and reapers shall rejoice together."

Notes from Bulgaria.

PASTOR TONJOROFF, writing from Sofia, reports work in connection with the Evangelical churches of the city. He says:—"Several of the notables of the city attended the meetings, among them three Ministers of State. There are hopeful signs of a coming revival among the Protestant churches of Bulgaria, also among people belonging to the Greek Church. While a friend and myself were speaking in the park, pointing people to the Saviour, a policeman tried to disperse the gathering; but some well-to-do citizens told the "jandar" to go and look after the drunkards, and to let those who would listen to the preachers. Accordingly we were left alone.

"A short time ago at Philippopolis, when I was speaking in the market-place, surrounded by many shopmen, the street being quite blocked, a policeman came by, but instead of dispersing the people, he listened, and when he heard an improper remark he rebuked it, saying, 'You must not speak against the truth.' It was very comforting to my soul. As soon as I came here I visited some of the dignitaries of the national Church, who have come here for the sessions of the Holy Synod. I asked them what the Church had done by way of helping and protecting the poor in the capital of Bulgaria. They told me that they are sorry to say that, so far, nothing has been done. They excused themselves and the Church by saying that they are preoccupied by other things; and told me to do what I could for this cause.

"Accordingly, between my other work I have seen some of the citizens of the capital, and we are arranging a committee to start benevolent organizations. I was told that one of the archbishops has promised to leave at death 200,000 francs for such purpose, and as he is not here I wrote to urge him to devote the money now while he is living. Another person, a citizen of Sofia, has already willed his property of 120,000 francs for this purpose. This makes me hopeful that my work to this end may not be in vain. An officer of the army, after attending one of our open-air meetings, asked me: 'Mr. Tonjoroff, when do you expect to reap from this sowing?' I told him 'That is not my business. I am told to sow, and I will sow; who will reap, and when, that I do not know, nor do I very much care to know.' He was satisfied.

"I am working here, as at Philippopolis, among the children, telling them of their best Friend. Last week I had a meeting in the gipsy quarter, with the gipsy children; many of their parents also listened very attentively. The chief of police and a Minister of State are encouraging me in my work, but how they will behave when the 'Holy Synod' begins to fear the influence of the preaching is quite a different matter. I have been also looking for literary work for my support, but this I have not yet found. Pray for me, that the Lord, whose I am, and in whose business I am engaged, will sustain and lead me. Pray also for Bulgaria."

Sailors in Dunkerque.

I HAVE lately spent a holiday at Dunkerque, France, and would like to call the attention of your readers to the important work going on there amongst English sailors by Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie. The men gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of having a bright cheerful room in which to read, play games, or write their letters. The Gospel meetings are well attended, and have been blessed by God to the conversion of many.

When we realise what this means to men who spend their lives upon the world of waters, and who have few of those privileges which we regard as necessities of life, surely it behoves us to see that such a work is not crippled for want of support. Communications may be forwarded to Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque, France.

Mission to French Priests.

THE Home for Converted Priests has just been opened at Courbevoie, near Paris.

The committee have chosen M. Corneloup as director. Formerly a priest, he is well known by numerous addresses he delivered on our Mission, as well as by the great part he has taken in the evangelisation of the Charentes (Western France).

According to the wish expressed by our colleagues and by twenty-four pastors of Paris, the Home, or Maison Hôpitalière, will not be a seminary, but only a shelter where they will be received for a few months when they break with Rome, just when they are, most of them, homeless, penniless, and friendless.

As a paper says, "The Maison Hôpitalière will offer to priests who have just gone through a painful crisis a quiet refuge to meditate and study the Gospel which is so often a closed book for them. During that time the committee will become better acquainted with them, and therefore be enabled to decide with greater assurance on their future career." Then we will place those who seem to have a true pastoral vocation in Christian families—if possible, with pastors—until they are admitted in a school of evangelisation or in a theological seminary.

It is hardly necessary for us to assure our friends and helpers that our mission will always be based on those Evangelical principles which are the raison d'être and the strength of our Christian churches. We believe that a mission for converted priests which does not act on these principles is doomed to failure. In our time, as in the time of St. Paul, men are saved and regenerated by the "folly" of the Cross, and not by a poor rationalism which pretends to be scientific.

Allow us to add that our committee have accepted ten new priests and seminarists, and we support fifteen others in different situations. One is to enter the Preparatory School of Theology, five are to go to the Faculties of Neuchatel, one to Montauban, one to a normal school, and two or three are expected at the Maison Hospitalière.

Notes from Tasmania.

IN the church at the Launceston Tabernacle our Missionary Prayer Union scheme is fairly started. Other churches are moving in the same direction. How largely the home work of the churches would be helped if only the missionary spirit took hold of all our members!

At present we are attempting the additional task of raising sufficient money to erect a new house for our missionaries. They recently sent tidings of the first baptism in Serajgimge, and other inquirers are being dealt with, who are expected to be baptized before long.

A week of united services has just been held. The arrangements are made by the Ministers' Fraternal Association, which represents only the Nonconformist churches. All the meetings were held in the Congregational Church, and were well attended. Our need, like that of the churches at home, is more spiritual power.

Federation is waiting for N.S.W. Before long it is hoped that every hindrance will be removed.

The gambling spirit is still rife. We have not yet learned how to attack it; but Christians are coming closer together. Every evil must totter before a united Church. GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Jamaica.—Rev. J. J. Kendon, writing from Linstead, St. Catharine's, says:—"The work in Jamaica has become very dear to me, and especially so because while the people are destitute and poor their sincerity seems to be the more manifest. I do not know that I have had, during the nineteen years of my labours here, so much pleasure in the work as I have had this year. We have not had the numbers in attendance that we had in former times, but the spirit of those who have come has been more genuine and true. At Jericho and Mount Hermon, my principal stations, there has been a pleasing work going on, and the same is appearing elsewhere. God is with us; and if, to try our faith and deepen the humility and sincerity of his people, He lays them low in temporal things, He knows how to provide through other channels what is necessary for supporting his servants."

The Russian Stundists.

DEAR Uncle Tom,—I send with this post a few little lavender bags, which you will kindly forward to Miss Turton for the hop pickers. I am sorry not to have contributed until now to your interesting and varied works of charity. The little time I have left free from lessons and home duties I use in dressing dolls for the poor Sunday-school scholars of our church; but the chief interest in our family is my foster nurse, who is a Stundist. She and her husband have a hard struggle to earn a livelihood for their seven young children. Since the word "Stundist" was branded on their passport it is with the greatest difficulty they can obtain work, as many people are afraid to employ them for fear of getting into trouble themselves.

It is now six years since we left Russia, and during that time the persecution of these poor people, instead of diminishing, seems to have increased. Judging by the articles written in The Christian, you must know a good deal about them, and so I am sure you will sympathise with our anxiety about my kind nurse.

If some of your nephews and nieces will take an interest in the persecuted Stundists it will be very kind of them, and when I shall have done with my studies I shall join hands with them in helping you with your charities. It is always a pleasant surprise for me when I get a "certificate," as often I have to make my Bible Searcher rather in a hurry. —With kindest regards, believe me, sincerely yours, Mary C. de Spiganovicz.

1, Seton Place, Grange, Edinburgh.

Many of my nieces (and nephews as well) would like to know a little about the Stundists; and just now I will content myself with a very brief statement. To begin with, I must tell you that it is at terrible cost in Russia that Christian people obey their consciences in the light of Holy Scripture. Everybody is expected to conform without question to the so-called Orthodox Church, and those who refuse are not only spoken of as "dissenters" or "sectarians," but are punished and subjected to acts of ill-treatment and cruelty of which we have little conception to-day in England.

The Stundists look upon religion as a personal matter; and where they see the will of Christ to be different from the demands of the national Church of Russia they do not hesitate in making the worthy choice. They will not be partakers in a system which is corrupt in doctrine and formal and lifeless in worship; so they come out and ask their friends to do the same. Openly and in secret, according to the stringency or otherwise of the local government, they worship God and study the Holy Scriptures. They are, speaking generally, the Baptists of Russia, and there is no reason why they should be persecuted either for their beliefs or practices. In centuries gone by Dissent was forbidden in England, but we thank God that all this belongs to the past. Let us pray that the same may soon be true in Russia.

I think you should know that, on the testimony even of their persecutors, the Stundists are good people. One writer says: "The duty of the members consists in loving one another; in taking an active part both in the salvation of each soul and in the material happiness of all; in the conscientious use of the means of grace, and in following the precepts which Christ, as head of the Church, has given." These are principles which we all approve. Yet, for living by them, Stundists have been thrown into prison and transported to Siberia, and in other ways treated with great inhumanity for the past twenty years or so.

The community dates from 1860, when some good Germans, living in villages in South Russia, gathered anxious souls in their houses and taught them from the Scriptures lessons of life and godliness. The meetings were methodically arranged, and lasted about an hour; and from the German word Stunde (an hour, or a lesson) the people came to be named by their neighbours. The name Stundists stands for a body of men and women whom God loves; He sees their sorrows, and will, in due time, deliver them from the hands of their enemies.

"Mountains and all Hills!"

I HAVE been living lately amongst the hills, and I thought I would like to write and tell you a little bit about them. They are very beautiful, especially at sunset, when they turn all manner of pretty colours—pink and golden and blue, as well as green and brown. But I think the first thing one notices about these hills is their solidness, they look as if they had always been there and always would be, and as if nothing could ever move them (Habbakuk iii.). It makes one wonder at the power of God, who made the hills; there is a text about that in the Psalms which I should like you to find (Psalm lxv.). King David, I think, must have been very fond of mountains and hills, for he says a great deal about them in his Psalms; he lived in a hilly country. He says that God's righteousness is "like the great mountains" (Psalm xxxvi.), and he tells how God sends "the springs among the valleys, which run among the hills." There are so many of these little streams in this neighbourhood trickling down all the hillsides, sometimes spreading out into quiet pools, and sometimes tumbling over the stones with a rush and a roar, looking like milk instead of water, they are so white with foam. Why does God send all these little springs to "run among the hills"?

If you look in Psalm civ. you will find the reasons. They make the grass to grow, and give drink to all the wild creatures that live among the hills. Then again, David speaks of God, who makes "the grass to grow upon the mountains"—such pretty grass it is, too—so fine and soft, and growing all amongst the beautiful flowers and mosses. God, our Father, who loves beautiful things, puts them not only on the outside of his hills, but in the inside, too. All kinds of precious stones, such as you see in the jewellers' windows, are hidden there, some of them needing only to be searched for and found and polished to be fitted to shine in a royal crown. In Deuteronomy xxxiii. we read of "the precious things of the lasting hills," and Job tells us how that "sapphire stones" are found in them, and reminds us that the eye of God "seeth every precious thing." (Job xxviii.)

Hills are very beautiful to look at, but they are often very hard to climb. They make one very hot and very breathless, but when one gets to the top there is usually a fine view of the country all around which quite repays one for the scramble and the difficulties beforehand. We get a little bit discouraged, though, sometimes, before we get to the end of our climb. We think we see the topmost point before us, but when we get there it is not the top after all, there is another peak still higher, and that we must climb once more. This may happen again and again, until we think, "Oh, we never shall get there!" But by-and-by we do, having gone on patiently, step by step. I think that hill is like the Hill of Christian Character which we all want to climb. We see our goal right up there away in the distance, and we want to reach it, so we try to climb. But we slip back and get discouraged many and many a time, and sometimes think that we shall never arrive at all. But if we will let our dear Friend the Lord Jesus guide us, and go on patiently step by step, we shall get there some day.

One morning when I looked out from my window it seemed to me as if all the hills which I had seen when I went to rest the evening before had all vanished suddenly; there was no sign of them, nothing but thick white mist. But do you think I ran down and told all the other visitors in the hotel that the mountains had gone away? No, I just said to myself—you know that hymn, don't you?—

> Mountains by the darkness hidden
> Are as real as in the day.

And so I went down to breakfast quite contentedly, feeling sure that before long the sun would drive away all that cold white mist, and show us the hills again. And it did. Why did the writer of that hymn say that mountains are as real when you cannot see them as when you can see them? He wanted everyone to understand that God's love is just as real when you cannot feel it as when you can.

Things go wrong sometimes with you just as much as they do with older people. You feel as if you could not really be a Christian at all, and as if God didn't love you a bit. Don't you ever believe that last! God always loves you, whether you feel it or not. Listen to this: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee" (Isaiah liv.). And if the mists and the clouds do sometimes come between, He can clear them away.—Your affectionate friend,

Grace Winter.

Come unto Me.

"SUFFER little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Those loving words were uttered more than 1800 years ago, but supposing, dear young reader, our Saviour stood before you at this moment in all his Divine and human glory and invited you, as then, with the same loving, longing desire for your eternal salvation, and said "Come unto Me," what would be your response to his gracious words?

More than probable, little one, you would run and throw yourself at his feet, and cry, "Lord Jesus, here am I, take me and make me one of thine." Although He may not appear on earth again yet, still he is calling you now to come unto Him—and grown-up people too, even from the grandest monarch to the lowliest one in rags. Whosoever will may come, but all alike must come as a little child—in child-like and humble faith.

"Red, White, and Blue" is the title borne by the Christian Institute for Lads, Cumming-street and Collier-street, Pentonville, N. The latest report says truly: "Much discussion has been going on lately in the Press on the subject of the 'larrikins' who infest King's Cross and Clerkenwell, and the necessity of an increased police force to deal with them. What is needed is that more should be done to reach and help these fellows, who respond most readily to any love or kindness shown to them, and that more institutes should be opened where they can spend their evenings under good influences, instead of gathering in gangs at the street corners or engaging in faction fights between rival districts." Girls' Orphan Home, Croydon.—A lady, much interested in Burgos House, Sydenham-road, North Croydon, writes: "I am surprised to find that so very few comparatively of the residents of Croydon appear to know of the Orphan Home, and only wish they would arrange to pay it a visit and see for themselves. To my mind it is a touching sight to see thirty or forty of these dear little ones, with their bright faces, being well cared for, trained, and educated, and to remember that without this Home they would be suffering and neglected, and probably grow up without any knowledge of right or wrong, or of the blessed Redeemer who said, "Suffer the little ones to come unto Me." Young Cripples' Treat.—Last week, for the fifth year, more than 500 of the cripple children of the East End were taken for a day's outing in Epping Forest. The books of the Ragged School Union and Shaftesbury Society show ten times that number under systematic visitation in various parts of London, but these were selected solely from East End districts, and the cost was defrayed by funds specially collected. From Bow, Whitechapel, Bethnal-green, Poplar, and elsewhere the cripples proceeded in twenty brakes to Loughton, where the Shaftesbury Retreat afforded them a hearty welcome. Most of the children, though crippled, were in good health, but one or two had to be carried, or driven in specially provided appliances. Five girls were included from the Bow Workhouse, one of whom had been out of doors only twice in seven years.

CAPTIVITY OF THE TEN TRIBES.—2 Kings xvii. 9-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"If thou seek Him, He will be found of thee; but if thou forsake Him, He will cast thee off for ever."—1 Chron. xxviii. 9.

THE DECLINE OF ISRAEL.

"NONE are so blind as those who will not see." Amos and Hosea in the most scathing words had stripped the furred gowns of luxury from the people of Israel, and revealed to them as a nation the disease which was sapping away their life. Still they would not see.

Jeroboam died about 740, and within twenty years the nation had fallen. During that twenty years six kings had reigned.

Zechariah, murdered in a state of drunkenness on a royal birthday. Shallum, chief conspirator against Zechariah, was slain, after one month's reign, by Menahem, the military governor of Tirzah. Menahem reigned ten years. Pekahiah, his son, two years, slain by his general Pekah. Pekah, killed by the Assyrians. Hoshea was a mere tool in the hands of the Assyrians. Hoshea imprisoned, and the people carried captive by Assyrians. The glory of Israel had departed.

MORAL CAUSES OF THE FALL.

It is not poverty that makes a nation weak (the absence of army and navy), but the pride and vice which follow wealth. All the great nations—Babylon, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Spain, Turkey—have mouldered or are crumbling to decay because of internal vice. It is God's curse on wickedness in a nation or an individual.

Men who have posed as great reformers have fallen because of secret sin. But it cannot remain secret long. The weak heart has an effect upon the whole body.

What were Israel's diseases?

ATHEISM (14).

In their pride and wealth they forgot God. Sin blinded them so that they did not like to pray to Him.

Mrs. Besant says, "God fades gradually from the life of the man who never prays."

Belief in God is not merely a creed; it is also a life. If the belief in Him does not lead to a good life, a bad life will soon lead to disbelief.

IDOLATRY (9-11).

"High places" on hills, in accordance with heathen custom. "Tower to Watchman"—In lonely places, to guard the flocks. Groves—Places of licentiousness.

Idolatry meant much more than the mere worship of images. It meant all the cruel and wicked practices of heathen idolaters. It was the immoral part of it which weakened the nation.

RESISTING THE SPIRIT (13, 14).

God always strives with his people when they begin to go wrong. He speaks through his word, providence, or those around us. The warning voice that seems human is really Divine. Prejudice, pride, and indifference dull our hearing, and the time comes when we no longer hear God's voice. He had spoken to Israel by prophets and seers, but they "hardened their hearts."

CRIMINAL SUPERSTITION (17).

They offered their children to Moloch (Molech, a brazen image with huge hollow arms and body). Fire was kindled inside the idol, and when the arms became red hot the child was thrown into them.

They sought to know future events by superstitious enchantments.

Lesson.—When people cease to believe in God they become childishly superstitious. No one but an atheist could accept the inane miracle of Theosophy.

GODLINESS PROFITABLE.

This is the converse of the lesson. While wickedness ruins, godliness upbuilds. Strongest nations and men are godly ones.

THE SOLD BIRTHRIGHT.

Israel sold herself to do evil. She had a bad bargain. They who deal with the devil always get the hot end of the poker. He is a bad master. Those who sell their birthright of brains, body, money, time, energy to him, will get something in return—(for you cannot dabble in pitch but some of it will stick)—but "the wages of sin is death."

HOME MISSIONS.

Notes from Ramsgate.

RAMSGATE has long enjoyed the blessing of a godly Evangelical vicar. Christ Church has been built over fifty years, and during that time has had four good men ministering there, from Canon Hoare to Rev. Charles L. Williams, who so ably and earnestly sets forth the Gospel to the masses of the people.

A large tent has been for many years erected at the Harbour, and here four times a week Mr. Williams and his two young curates delight in the plainest, simplest language, not only to invite the sinner to Christ, but also to warn the unsaved of their awful danger whilst remaining disobedient to the Gospel. In these days of ritualism it is cheering to find such outspoken faithful men in the Established Church.

But Ramsgate is also signally favoured, and her visitors greatly privileged, by having in their midst a good and gifted Nonconformist minister whose efforts are unflagging and whose labours are unceasing in the glorious work of soul-winning. I speak of Rev. T. Hancocks, of Cavendish Baptist Church, a magnificent building, which was crowded on Sunday week with a large audience, who were more than delighted with the pastor's address; his subject being "Misery alone with Mercy," as evidenced from the eighth of John.

But if the Church of England has its tent, Nonconformity has its services on the sands. My soul has rejoiced as I have seen the multitude drinking in the essentials of the Gospel as preached by Mr. Hancocks and his helpers. CHAS. COOK.

The Blackgang Mission.

I HAVE been spending three weeks of my holiday at Blackgang, in the most remote part of the Isle of Wight. It faces the Atlantic, and the climate is most invigorating. The Blackgang Mission is known far and wide along the coast, and for some miles inland. A regular work has been carried on here for over twenty-five years, with Sunday-school, weekly Bible-classes, band of hope, temperance and Christian Endeavour societies. It is a truly healthy, active, and blessed Mission. It needs at this juncture outside help, owing to the friends being compelled to build another mission hall. The people themselves are poor, and cannot raise much, and Mrs. Smith can no longer afford to give the money she once did.

As one who has recently been examining the work, and visiting the people very largely in their own homes, I earnestly appeal to your readers for liberal help to this work. At least £300 is very urgently needed at this present time. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mrs. C. W. Smith, Blackgang, Isle of Wight.

Great Assembly Hall.

Mr. Rowland D. Edwards, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded his first month's mission in Mr. Charrington's hall in Mile End. During August the weather has been most trying, but the meetings have been above the average for this season of the year. On Sunday, when the Rhondda Valley Prize Choir sang, the building was filled to overflowing.

Mr. Edwards and his wife have evangelised in New Zealand, Australia, India, and many other parts with much blessing. He is by profession a solicitor, with a style peculiarly his own; he cannot be compared with other evangelists. He brings his knowledge of the law very forcibly into his addresses. He has a very free and pleasing manner, which soon wins for him the hearts of his congregations. In him the Evangelisation Society have a valuable preacher, and his mission in East London has been greatly blessed. His addresses to believers have been most helpful and stimulating, while the unconverted have felt the power of God's Word uttered by him. After each service many sought the aid of the workers in the inquiry-room. On Sunday week a large number were dealt with, and some very notable conversions might be recorded. many Christians are rejoicing much over blessings.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

Dear Brother,—My attention has been called to the inquiries in The Christian, page 21, of Sept. 1, as to the suggestion made by me at the recent Keswick Convention, as to what it was which John saw in Christ's empty tomb, which constrained him to dismiss for ever all doubt of the miracle of his resurrection. And, with pleasure, I seek now briefly to communicate to your readers the grounds on which it seems to me that the position, taken by me, that John saw the linen wrappings lying on the floor of the tomb, just as they had been wound about Christ's body, is abundantly upheld by the general testimony of the Gospel narratives.

There are some things, especially the force of particular words and phrases, which only a student of the Greek, and one who carefully compares word with word in the original will be likely to observe. Perhaps, without any pretension to skill as a Greek scholar, I may suggest what led me to the opinion which I now hold, and which has thrown a flood of light on the whole miracle of the resurrection. I may add that this view was first suggested to me by an eminent Greek scholar, who called my attention to the force of one leading word, and left me to pursue the study, as I eagerly did. Let me also say that this is a case, not of mathematical demonstation, but only of moral probability, and hence must not be tried by the laws of mathematics, but of moral evidence; and only by taking a number of particulars can we have a broad enough basis for a safe induction.

First of all, then, I ask your readers to note the significant expression in John xx. 8, where it is declared of that "other disciple"—John himself—that he "went into the sepulchre," and "saw and believed." What did he see which compelled him to believe? It must have been something more than an empty tomb, which would prove nothing except that the body of Christ was not there. Verse 9 shows us what he believed, namely, that Christ had risen again from the dead. Something which John saw convinced him that there had been no mere removal of Christ's body, but a miraculous rising. What was it? This is the question, and for this we seek an answer.

Any satisfactory solution must be sought in the light of several passages of Scripture, which need to be studied in the Greek: Matthew xxvii. 59; Mark xv. 46; Luke xxiii. 53; John xi. 44, xix. 39, 40, and xx. 7, 8. Especially are there three or four Greek words which throw much light upon the matter. Matthew uses the word enetulixen, which is used also by Luke and John, and which means to "roll or wrap up in," to "envelop in rolls or folds" as of linen wrapping. Mark employs the word eneilesen, which means also to "roll up" as a scroll. In John xix. 39, Nicodemus is said to have come with a hundred pounds of mixture of myrrh and aloes, and they wound the body in the linen, with the spices. Here the word is edēsan, which means "to wind about tightly," so as to bind, or confine, or tie up. The one impression of a careful study of these passages is that the body was wound about with the long linen cloths, the spices being placed in the folds to preserve it from decay until the more careful and complete embalming, after the Sabbath. The effect of such enswathement is obvious. The body would be rendered doubly helpless: first weighted down by the more than hundred pound weight of cloths and spices, its ordinary weight being nearly doubled; and then made helplessly immovable, even if life were to be restored, by this close wrapping.

If we compare John xi. 44, where the words dedemenos and periededeto are used, meaning similarly to be bound about by rolls, as of linen, we see how the body of Lazarus was rendered so helpless that, even after the word of Christ had raised him from his tomb bed, he stood immovable in his wrappings, and so our Lord commanded, "Loose him and let him go." Luō is the opposite of deō, and means to unbind or untie, as deō means to bind or tie up.

Now, as it seems quite clear to me, when John looked into and went into the tomb, he saw a sight which left no doubt that Christ had miraculously risen. There lay two rolls of linen cloths, as the body had been deposited in them. The cloths which had been about the body were where the body had lain; and the separate cloth which had been about the head and face lay in its original folds (note the same word used as that describing the enrolment in the linen—entetuligmenon) in its own place, where the head had been.

Now observe, if human or angelic hands had unwrapped the cloths how natural it would have been to have folded them and laid them all together. But, if the body of our Lord, endowed with miraculous power and needing no such unloosing as did Lazarus, simply slipped out of these wrappings, sloughing them off as no longer able to hold the Prince of Life, they would be left on the sepulchre's floor or catacomb's shelf, just as they had lain when the body was in them! And that this is the natural sense of the passage still more appears when the whole sentence is very closely examined. As it is in the accepted version, it reads, "and the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the (other) linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself." Thus rendered, the qualifying phrase "by itself" would seem to point only to its place as a separate one. Such is not the force of the original. Literally translating, we get some such meaning as this: "Not with the (other) bandages lying, but separately convoluted, in one place (i.e., its own place)." We translate thus, simply to convey the force of that word difficult to translate—"lying in rolls"—and to show that the word chōris, meaning separate, or apart from, qualifies this participle, and not the previous one only, "lying." That is to say, all the cloths were rolled up as they were when on his body, but the face cloth was separately rolled, and lying in its own proper and separate place.

This we take to be what John saw, and this was why he himself records that he saw and believed that Christ was miraculously risen. And the statement is added that as yet they knew not from the Scriptures his resurrection, so that we may know that it was, as Alford says, "on the ocular testimony before him" that John believed. If it was simply an empty tomb that he saw, and the cloths neatly folded up, as they were removed from his body, and laid apart as by angelic hands, there was nothing there to prove a resurrection, but at most a removal of the body. When Mr. A. T. Stewart's coffin was found empty in his mausoleum, no one inferred a resurrection but a stolen body. But what if the tomb had been found undisturbed, locked, sealed, walled up with cement, and a metal casket so soldered as to be air-tight, and the grave wrappings all absolutely undisturbed, but not a trace of the body within! We have known a mother wrap an infant child tightly in a long linen cloth round and round to keep it from moving during her absence. What if she had returned to find the cloths as she rolled them about the child's form but not a trace of the child itself!

After a careful examination of all these passages, with the obvious inference from them in their united testimony, it seems very plain that this is what John saw, and why he believed. On the testimony of his eyes he knew that something had occurred in that sepulchre which could be accounted for only on one supposition: the Lord of Life and Glory had risen from the dead, and signalised his rising by casting off these gravecloths as easily as Samson snapped asunder the green withes or the new ropes—nay, infinitely more easily, slipping out of them, tightly bound as He was, so quietly as not to disturb one of their convolutions or stir them from the place where they had lain as he was deposited in the rock tomb.

So understood, not only does the literal fact of a miraculous resurrection become indisputable, but the typical teaching is unspeakably precious. We begin to understand why "the power of his resurrection" is the Divine measure of the "exceeding greatness of God's power toward us who believe" (Ephes. i. 19); for, if we believe in him, and appropriate his resurrection power, we shall so slough off, as no longer able to hold and bind us, the old habits of a sinful life, the bonds of our former slavery to Satan, and, leaving them in the sepulchre among dead things, rise with Him to walk in newness of life.

I have no zeal for maintaining any opinion of Scripture teaching for opinion's sake; but the effect of this interpretation of John xx. 7, 8 upon both my view of the unmistakable miracle of Christ's resurrection, and of the unsearchable and immeasurable power of his resurrection life in the believer, is so blessed that I should be loth to part with such an amazing and overwhelming demonstration of the miracle of Christ's rising as I believe John saw, and felt to be unanswerable by any human and natural explanation.

Hoping this somewhat lengthy statement may help my brethren to a like comforting view of the Scripture,—I am, yours always,

Brighton, Sept. 5. Arthur T. Pierson.

Sir,—In connection with the remarks on this subject, would you allow me to say that in speaking on this wondrous theme I have always felt led to dwell on the deliberate action of our Lord in liberating Himself from the bonds of the grave clothes. He folded them up and laid them aside, as related to an experience with which He had for ever done (Rom. vi. 9); and this as an example to those who are rising or have risen to the "newness of life," showing us that we should earnestly consider—not the sins of the death state, for there was certainly nothing wrong in his having been the recipient of such sympathetic though unnecessary kindness from his friends, and consequently it could not be a real simile if compared with sin—but the apparently harmless habits, connections, and associations of the old life, "tending to bondage." In the strength and power of the new life we should deliberately and definitely renounce and lay them on one side, such habits and bonds for ever done with, thus becoming the Lord's free man indeed.—Yours faithfully, C. J. B.

THE REVISED VERSION.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of September 1 you discuss two renderings of the Revised New Testament, one favourably, and one not so. Permit me to say something as to your complaint against the rendering of 2 Tim. iii. 16—"Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, etc." On this you remark: "This implies that there is Scripture which is not inspired of God, and not profitable for teaching, etc."

This will, no doubt, be the interpretation of those who on other grounds have come to hold that the Bible is a mixture of truths revealed by God and errors which men have thought out for themselves. But you and I reject this opinion, as opposed to common sense as well as to express statements of Scripture; you go on to state some of these very clearly. Since we reject this opinion, my interpretation of the text is entirely different. It is well known that some scholars put little or no value on certain books found in our Bible, such as Chronicles and Esther and the Song of Songs; and they would also have us to place little reliance on the Gospel of John compared with the first three Gospels, and on the Epistles generally as compared with the Gospels. Not so, we reply, and we appeal to the language of this text; every Scripture is also profitable for teaching, etc., being inspired of God.

My work as a reviser did not extend to the New Testament, for which I therefore cannot take either praise or blame. But those who have given us this rendering did so, as they believed, on account of fidelity to the original (whether correctly or not we need not here discuss), when they adopted a slightly different construction of the Greek. Their word "also" I reckon to be a support to the interpretation I have given. In fact, they might have saved themselves from the other interpretation of their translation if they had used the substantive verb as a supplement twice instead of once, "Every Scripture [being] inspired of God [is] also profitable etc." If anyone hesitates about the propriety of this double supplement, the meaning without it seems to me the same, only the English is less smooth. It is as much as to say—Of making many books there is no end, but thou wast brought up on the sacred writings from the time thou wast a babe, and every one of these, inspired of God, is also profitable for teaching, etc., that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work.—Yours very faithfully,

George C. M. Douglas.

Nuns in a Workhouse.—The Belper Guardians recently granted permission to members of a Roman Catholic sisterhood to visit the workhouse. Dissatisfaction arising, and proselytising design being alleged, the question was discussed at length a few days ago, with the result that a resolution was adopted extending a like privilege to any ladies in the Union district, no matter what their religious denomination.

Obituary.

M. ELIE VERNIER.

We learn with sorrow of the death of Pastor Elie Vernier, for many years connected with the Evangelical Society of Geneva. Though of late weak in health, he was in good spirits when a few weeks ago he left Barcelona (Drôme) to conduct a series of meetings at Limoges. He was taken ill, and returned home to die. He was a born preacher, and found great joy therein. M. Vernier was in his sixty-fourth year, and he leaves several sons engaged in pastoral work in France and the foreign field.

REV. J. B. STAIR.

The death is announced of Rev. J. B. Stair, one of the first evangelists dispatched by the London Missionary Society to the islands of the Pacific. He accompanied, in 1838, the band that included the heroic John Williams, the martyred missionary of Erromanga. He was present with the family of Mr. Williams when the tidings of the murder arrived. Samoa was the scene of Mr. Stair's missionary activity, and in 1846 he returned to England to see through the Press an edition of the Bible in the Samoan language. He had lived in retirement at St. Arnaud, in the colony of Victoria, for some time past, and there he recently died in his eighty-third year. His book "Old Samoa" is a valuable storehouse of ethnological and mythological lore.

REV. H. J. BETTS.

The death was announced on Saturday of Rev. Henry John Betts, at Thurmaston, near Leicester, in his seventy-fourth year. The son of a Baptist minister at Yarmouth, he early attracted the attention of Dr. Brock, of Bloomsbury Chapel, and was encouraged to become a minister. His first charge was a church near Westminster, when he was a friend of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, who was then beginning to be known. When Trinity Church, Bradford, was built Mr. Betts was called to be the first minister. It was a large and important work. Mr. Betts left the church well established, and went to Manchester, where he succeeded Rev. Arthur Mursell. Thence he removed to Grange-road, Darlington, which likewise prospered under his ministry, and afterwards to the pastorate of the important church at Rye Hill, Newcastle. There he laboured until advancing years compelled him to relinquish a settled pastorate. Mr. Betts and his family then removed to Thurmaston, where he spent most of the Sundays of the past seven years in preaching.

The Santa Claus Society not only promotes visitation of numerous hospitals and like buildings, with gifts at Christmas, but has a department through which payment is made for beds at seaside and country convalescent homes, and helps with fares poor adults and children needing change of air after illness. This good work has been going on for fourteen years. There are no office expenses or salaries, but all funds contributed go to the maintenance of the work. The hon. secretaries are Miss Charles and Miss J. F. Charles, Stormont, Hampstead-lane, Highgate, N.

East London Hospital for Children.—This useful institution was established thirty years ago. It affords medical and surgical treatment for poor children as in-patients, and has a dispensary for poor women and children as out-patients. A much-needed convalescent home is being erected in connection with the hospital at Bognor; about £3000 is yet required for the cost. The number of patients treated in the hospital during 1897 was 1616, a considerable increase on former years. Communications should be addressed to the sec., Mr. Thos. Hayes, Hospital for Children, Shadwell, London, E.

Dublin Christian Convention.—The arrangements for the Convention in Dublin, October 3 to 7, are now complete. Among those who hope to be present and take part are Pastor Theodore Monod, Paris; Rev. W. E. Burroughs, D.D.; Rev. G. Campbell Morgan; Viscount Bangor; Rev. George Jackson, Edinburgh; Rev. S. R. MacPhail, Liverpool; Rev. H. Foster Pegg, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, etc. It will also be the reopening of the Metropolitan Hall, which has been closed during the summer for extensive repairs. A short mission will be conducted by Rev. Foster Pegg immediately after the Convention.

At the final meeting of the Trade Union Congress an animated debate arose on the child labour question, when an important resolution was carried in favour of the abolition of child labour under fourteen years of age.

The Bishop of Winchester has written a letter to the Times on the Act of Uniformity. While agreeing with Sir W. Harcourt in his interpretation of the Act, he endeavours to prove that these Acts "do not cover the ground."

The Hackney Water Committee has hastened to voice the resentment of the East End against the action of the East London Water Company's policy in the diminishing supply of water to that crowded district. There is now only a nominal supply of water for four hours of every twenty-four.

India.—The plague is increasing in the Bombay Presidency. Over 6000 deaths occured in one week—156 in the city itself. Several deaths also are reported from the Madras Presidency.—The control of the Khyber Pass will for the future be directly under the Government of India. This is the first step towards the consolidation of British rule on the north-west frontier.

The Peace Proposals.—The Kaiser is reported to have consented to the Czar's peace proposals, but the German Press generally is antagonistic. Much irritation is also manifest in France with the manifesto.—From Rome comes the intelligence that the German, Italian, and Austrian Governments accept the Czar's proposal for a peace conference without reserve.—It is stated that the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg has already communicated in cordial terms the hearty sympathy with which the Imperial Rescript has been read by Mr. Balfour. The Government will hail with satisfaction the initiative which the Czar has taken.

There are now in the German Alliance 1430 Young Men's Christian Associations, with a total membership of 85,000; and there are beside these 400 unaffiliated Associations, with a membership of 10,500.

At Kettering and Stafford—where a few months since it seemed probable that the work would collapse—general secretaries have now been appointed, and the work appears to have taken a fresh lease of life. This is chiefly due to the efforts of the travelling secretary, Mr. F. C. Bennett.

The International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association will consider the matter of establishing association work in Havana, San Juan, Porto Rico, and Manila. Inquiries are now making to learn if some local financial support can be looked for, and if it can within a reasonable time Association buildings will soon rise in the new colonies and gradually spread throughout the respective fields.

The Y.M.C.A. at Ashton-under-Lyne has had the joy of sending forth another member to the foreign field. In 1894 there was sent forth their first, James Wrigley, who was only spared a few months' service. On Monday, August 29, good-bye and God-speed was said to the second, Arthur Holland, who sails for China on September 8, in connection with the China Inland Mission. He goes out in connection with the work of the Forward Movement in the province of Kiang Si, and will be supported by the Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations of Ashton.

Nagpur is an important city in the Central Provinces of India, and contains a population of 120,000 people. It is the centre of government for the Central Provinces. The Y.M.C.A. was founded in 1886. Two years ago it secured splendid premises of its own, in which the work has considerably developed. There are eighty-two active members on the roll, and thirty-eight associates; but there is much ground yet to be possessed, for it is estimated that there are in the place some 600 European and Eurasian young men, besides 100 native Christians, and at the same time more than 18,000 heathen young men are to be found. Following the lines of a similar mission held last year, a fortnight's mission is to be held from October 9 to 23. The meetings will be conducted by Mr. Frank Anderson.

Bible Readings.

Faith's Ladder.—Rom. iv. 12.

No faith (Mark iv. 40); Little faith (Matt. xiv. 36); Increased faith (Luke xvii. 5); Great faith (Matt. xv. 28); So great faith (Matt. viii. 10); Full of faith (Acts vi. 5). M. E. G.

"Be Ye also Ready."—Luke xii. 40.

Ready to every good work (Tit. iii. 1); to preach the Gospel (Rom. i. 15); to distribute (1 Tim. vi. 18); to sympathise (1 Tim. vi 19; mar. R.V.); always to answer (1 Pet. iii. 15); to die (Acts xxi. 13); to be offered (2 Tim. iv. 6). J. G. L.

Faith is the complement of reason, not its contradiction. Where facts and arguments are nearly balanced, it is faith which turns the scale.—Dr Welldon.

Exchange of Churches.—During July the minister of Grange Congregational Church, Sunderland, had his holiday. While he was away the minister of St. George's Presbyterian Church conducted the services for both churches alternately in each church on successive Sundays. During August the minister of St. George's was away, and the other pastor conducted the services of both churches alternately. Each minister has also conducted, where necessary, during the month all the required work of both congregations. A thing like this should be made known and imitated where possible. —E. D. N.

Bolivia.—The mineral wealth of Bolivia is too well known to need comment, and very liberal concessions may be obtained from the government. The field which the country offers to the dwellers in the gorged settlements of the world's populous centres presents many alluring features. She abounds in raw materials for many industries; she possesses forests that have never resounded to the stroke of the axe; she has thousands of square leagues of fertile land and far-stretching plains that only await the hoe and plough of the careful husbandman to repay his toil with a competence; beneath her surface lie treasures untold that will enrich him who brings them to the light of day.—South American Messenger.

At Camberwell-green Chapel a letter was read from Rev. Thomas Hooper, resigning his pastorate of the church, and stating that he had accepted the call to Albion Church, Ashton-under-Lyne. He proposes to close his ministry at Camberwell on Sunday, Oct. 16. The church is in a strong and healthy condition, and has a membership of about six hundred.

Ilford, Essex, is developing very rapidly. Six years ago there was a population of 11,000, to-day it is nearly 30,000. The Congregationalists, Baptists, and Presbyterians have all secured admirable sites, and are only waiting money to begin building. The Congregationalists have a school-chapel which will accommodate over 600 people. Rev. C. H. Vine is the minister. There are 130 applications for new sittings, and there is no more room.

Rev. David Kerr, late of Leslie, Fifeshire, is now in New England. He has been well employed in evangelistic work and pulpit supply in the Presbyterian, Congregational, and Baptist churches since he arrived, and expects soon to settle as pastor.

Special summer services have been started this year at Cromer by the Norfolk Baptist Association, and have been largely attended. Although as visitors leave the attendances must diminish, it is hoped that the local friends will be enabled to form the nucleus of a church. After Sept. 4 services will be continued in the Town Hall.

The work of roofing in the basement of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is being vigorously proceeded with, and the secretary of the Pastors' College informed a Press representative last week that, granted moderately fine weather, the new building would be ready for occupation at the end of October, and would provide accommodation for 1500 persons.

Methodist.

Dr. Albert E. Cope is endeavouring to form a medical missionary auxiliary amongst Free Methodist doctors and medical students.

Exceptional success at the P.M. Central Mission, Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, London, under the superintendency of Rev. J. T. Parr, is reported. During the past five years the liabilities have been reduced £3000, besides £600 raised for a branch mission in St. James's-road, and £1200 per year for various agencies connected with the mission.

Rev. Giffard Dorey, of Saddleworth, brother-in-law of Dr. Jenkins, is the oldest minister in active work, and enters on the fifty-third year of his itineraney. The oldest minister in connection with the British Conference is Rev. Richard Rymer, of Brixton, with sixty-nine years of ministerial work behind him. He is verging on his ninetieth year, but is in excellent health, active, and in full possession of all his faculties.

A scheme promoted by Mr. D. Barr, of Birmingham, for building cottage homes for Wesleyan local preachers at Fillongley was recently inaugurated in practical form by the laying of foundation-stones. These are said to be the first homes of the kind to be established in connection with Wesleyan Methodism. The estimated cost of the scheme is £1253, and close upon £300 will be needed after all the money promised or expected has come in.

It has been decided to proceed immediately with the extensive alterations of the London Wesleyan Central Mission premises at St. John's-square, Clerkenwell. Early in October the Marquis of Northampton, together with the President of the Conference and other well-known men, will lay the foundation stones. The total cost of the enlargement is expected to be £10,000, thus providing, when completed, one of the best sets of premises for religious and social work in London. Rev. J. E. Wakerley, the superintendent of the mission, and Mr. J. Crowle-Smith, the treasurer, are the treasurers of the building fund.

It has now been definitely determined by the Wesleyan Missionary Executive in London that Rev. Marshall Hartley shall leave the Mission-house for his extended official tour in the East towards the end of the present month. He will proceed by the Canadian Pacific route to Vancouver, and so via Japan to China, Ceylon, and India, and will be absent for about six months. The Missionary Committee in London have also decided to send Rev. W. R. Winston, the Burmah missionary, and Major John Smith, who for twenty years has been lay financial secretary at the Mission-house, London, as a special commission to the West Indies, to see what is best to be done to save the Methodist churches there from threatened bankruptcy owing to the failure of the sugar industry.

Last week was one of the most important of the year as regards Wesleyan Methodism in Great Britain, some 735 ministers removing to the circuits to which they were appointed by the recent conference which met at Hull. Metropolitan Methodism receives some 80 fresh appointments. Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, of Manchester, now comes to Bayswater, and Rev. William Gooderidge to the Great Queen-street circuit. The President of the Conference, Rev. H. Price Hughes, in addition to his presidential duties, will also have the chairmanship of the second London district. Rev. Walford Green, one of the ex-presidents and the chairman of the third London district, has been suffering from illness, which has necessitated cancelling all his public engagements. He is gradually getting better.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Mr. A. F. Woolley has compiled a useful book of Bible studies, outlines, and suggestive readings for Christian workers, with the title, "Tongues for Gospel Bells." (George Stoneman.)

Wireless Telegraphy, by Richard Kerr, F.G.S., is a popular explanation of one of the most recent scientific sensations. Mr. W. H. Preece, C.B., F.R.S., commends the little book in a brief preface. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Seeley & Co.)

Sunday-school workers will welcome the Complete Record of the World's Third Sunday School Convention, held in London, July 11 to 16, 1898. (3s. Sunday School Union). Those who attended the Convention will be glad to have the book, so that by consulting its pages they may revive memories of happy and profitable hours. Other workers will value the record as a compendious statement of facts and principles regarding Sunday-school effort in many lands.

The year's issues of The Temple Magazine, conducted by F. A. Atkins (Horace Marshall & Son), make a handsome volume. By the variety of its contents and the excellence of its illustrations, this monthly makes a strong appeal for popular support. Its stories are wholesome, and its sketches, whether biographical or descriptive, are full of human interest. Rev. J. Reid Howatt writes "For the Bairns," and Dr. Parker contributes "The Home Service," which are two very welcome features. A large volume like this will provide reading for months to come for all ages in the family.

There is a wealth of information and sound reflection in the attractive volume, Essays and Enigmas, by A Banker. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) About four-score in number, the chapters are true to the author's prefatorial words: "The object of these brief essays is to lead the thoughts towards the consideration of the great realities of eternity, through the channel of a popular description of various natural phenomena, or of the marvellous beauties of nature. At the same time, it is sought to direct attention to some of the numerous natural enigmas which have, so far, baffled the efforts of scientists to explain." The anonymous author has an easy style, and his thoughtful pages will be helpful to many.

Daily text-books are legion; but in many respects the latest is distinctive and special. It is entitled A Daily Message for Christian Endeavourers, and has been compiled by Mrs. Francis E. Clark. (2s. 6d. James Bowden.) The pages afford reading for the quiet hour, and yield many a gem fitted for use as a C.E. response. At the foot of each page there is space for birthday records. Dr. Clark, who edits the book, informs us in an introduction that the gatherings here brought together were messengers of God to the compiler when first placed in her scrap-book. This we can easily believe, in view of the excellent quality of the contents. The little volume may be pronounced in every way suited for presentation to a Christian Endeavourer.

CHANNELS ONLY. This hymn, for consecration and holiness meetings, by Mary E. Maxwell, set to appropriate music by Ada Rose, is published in leaflet form by Marshall Brothers. The music is in both notations. (6d. per dozen, 2s. 6d. per 100.)

A helpful book for boys is MORNING WATCHWORDS, or Daily Thoughts for Lads, by M. E. Briscoe. Rev. George Everard writes a preface to the little work, which is one that thoughtful boys will be sure to value. (Stiff paper, 4d.; limp cloth, 6d. Hazell, Watson, & Viney.)

A religious work that is likely to create considerable interest will be published this autumn by Messrs. Sands & Co. It is written by Rev. W. M. Clow, Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh, and is entitled, IN THE DAY OF THE CROSS. It consists of "a course of lectures on the men and women, and some of the notable things of the last day in the life of Jesus."

THOUGHTS FROM THE WORD OF GOD is the title of a new monthly magazine, issued in manuscript form and "manifolded." The editor states the object as "the building up of the Church with special reference to the great truths of prayer, missionary enterprise, the approaching second advent, and Bible study." (1½d., post free from P. W. Heward 14, Pier Head, Wapping, E.)

Two good booklets are: THE SURRENDER ("I am Thine," Ps. cxix. 94), by Rev. G. W. Butler, rector of West Knighton with Broad Mayne, Dorset (1d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney-road, Hackney, N.E.); and LEAVES FROM A PREACHER'S NOTE BOOK, being a collection of outlines, Bible studies, and hints for Christian workers, compiled by A. F. Woolley (2d., The Author, Mundesley, Norfolk).

ROGER'S REASONS, by Rev. John Urquhart (1d. Marshall Brothers), records a discussion on questions that are supposed to demand answers prejudicial to Scripture truth and integrity. Roger's "reasons" throw another light on matters, and amply justify confidence in the Bible. The pages should have many readers; the booklet is admirably suited for distribution among working-men who discuss atheistical notions.

NOW that the holidays are practically over, and the energies of Christian people have been braced up by rest and change for the winter's work, there is a call for earnest self-examination and spiritual preparedness for the tasks that loom before them. Renewed nerves and spirits are useful for spiritual work, but these are only the materials for a higher force, otherwise the work will not be well done. The "excellency of the power" is of God, and from Him alone can it be received. The most elaborate and perfect machinery is useless till the motive energy is poured into it; so the most abundant health and strength in the worker and the most carefully-planned organisations must fail if the power of the Holy Spirit is not sought and obtained. This is, therefore, a period for prolonged and faithful waiting on God, that He may fit his people for the tasks and conflicts before them. They that thus wait on Him "shall renew their strength."

The assassination of the Empress of Austria on Saturday afternoon by the hand of an Anarchist at Geneva adds another to the list of crowned heads who have died a violent death. No political motive seems to have instigated the crime; it was purely an act of savage and unreasoning brutality, wrought by a desperate man in order to prove to his accomplices that he was "not a coward." The sympathy of the whole world will go forth towards the stricken Emperor, whose life has been so singularly marked by domestic trouble, and who is bearing this crowning trial with his usual fortitude. The tragedy is deepened by the fact that the choice of victim by the assassin was purely accidental. This diabolical and callous lust for blood in the substratum of European society is a sad commentary on the "dignity" of human nature, and shows what a quagmire of evil still lies beneath the very foundations of civilisation. The world where such deeds are wrought truly needs the interposition of a higher power than man's to purify and regenerate it.

It is not impossible, however, to identify the causes that account for the existence of the Anarchist societies of Europe. The primary source is the practical atheism which has infected so large a section of the working classes on the Continent, especially in those countries which are the stronghold of Roman Catholicism, for there it is that these secret confederacies find their home. The depths of poverty brought by the burden of militarism, embittered by the selfish indifference of the wealthy and pleasure-seeking classes, work hand in hand with this loss of faith in God. So long as such political oppression and social despair exist, it will be in vain for governments to attempt to crush this volcanic evil by force, and the world is not unlikely to receive rude periodical reminders of its existence. The remedy lies in removing the causes, and in a renewal of true religious faith.

"Seed time and harvest shall not cease while the earth endureth." Such was the ancient promise which has been fulfilled through countless generations. The President of the British Association, in his remarkable address, has sent a rude shock throughout the community by stating authoritatively that the wheat crop of the world is rapidly falling short of the demand, and that a period of universal scarcity must soon set in. He allayed anxiety, however, by pointing out that science is on the eve of discoveries which will enable agriculturists greatly to increase the fertility of the soil, and so replenish the failing stock of cereals. His whole discourse tended to the conclusion that as yet we have scarcely touched the vast reserves of force and nourishment laid up in Nature by the Creator for our use. The old promise thus stands true for the ages of the future as it has for those of the past.

Sir William Crookes's address gave evidence that the crude materialism which reigned in the scientific world a generation since is a past phase of thought. He boldly reversed Prof. Tyndall's celebrated deliverance at Belfast twenty-five years ago, when he said that he discerned in matter the "promise and potency of all life," by saying that he would like "to reverse that apophthegm, and to say that in life he saw the promise and potency of all forms of matter." Sir William Crookes goes further when he said, speaking of certain obscure facts of nature and mind—

> Thirty years have passed since I published an account of experiments tending to show that outside our scientific knowledge there exists a force exercised by intelligence differing from the ordinary intelligence common to mortals...I have nothing to retract. I adhere to my published statements. I might add much thereto. I think I see a little further now. I have glimpses of something like coherence among the strange elusive phenomena.

The recent tendency of scientists has been to attempt to explain the highest facts of life in terms of the lowest. Here we find a return to the more rational (and spiritual) principle that the lowest is to be explained in terms of the highest. Only in the light of God can we have any light of nature.

There are signs in this remarkable address of the revival of a more optimistic view of the universe than has been the fashion of late years. The impressive peroration with which it closed bears witness to this :—

> In old Egyptian days a well-known inscription was carved over the portal of the temple of Isis—"I am whatever hath been, is, or ever will be; and my veil no man hath yet lifted." Not thus do modern seekers after truth confront Nature—the word that stands for the baffling mysteries of the universe. Steadily, unflinchingly, we strive to pierce the inmost heart of Nature, from which she is to reconstruct what she has been and to prophesy what she yet shall be. Veil after veil we have lifted, and her face grows more beautiful, august, and wonderful with every barrier that is withdrawn.

This is a return to the primitive view of nature which is preached in the Bible from beginning to end. There we are made to feel that the universe is fair and good, that the mercy of the Almighty is over all his works, and that sin alone blights the prospect of beauty and order in creation. It is a relief to find that the cloud of pessimism that has so long lain over the scientific world, and the carping criticisms of the Divine method which certain popular philosophers had been indulging in, have been lifted, and that our leading students of nature are returning to a more reverent and believing mind.

A series of articles appearing in our contemporary, The Independent, on "Romanising the Church of England," are worthy of being widely read. The writer, a Churchman, evidently is no novice in his acquaintance with the entire subject involved in the scope of his most interesting and edifying papers. He is moderate in all his criticism, at the same time clear and historical in all his assertions. His contribution, "The Law concerning Ritual," is singularly opportune and instructive. He traces the compilation of the Prayer Book from its "first shape" in 1549 to its last great revision in the reign of Charles II. in the year 1662, and after asserting its foundation upon the Bible alone, asks :—

> What, then, was the character of the Reformation if it was not a long and earnest endeavour to get back as far as was possible in a different age to the early simplicity of the Church, right away behind the Middle Ages, and come down to Christ's own teaching in his own Word?

The author's treatment of the ceremonies which have been declared illegal and the "six points" is also most lucid. His final summary of the practices various courts of law declare to be illegal brings before the mind in logical form the numerous decisions pronounced against the now Romanising tendency of the English Church ceremonial. If the clergy would only honestly carry out these decisions the questions now creating so much bitterness and division need not be long without an amicable settlement.

In the first of a series of articles on "The Reformation Settlement" the Church Times sets forth that the High Church party only objects to Rome as a ruling ecclesiastical power, not to her teaching. The writer declares that "the English Church is sacerdotal to the core." So far as the Bible and the Church are related to each other, the Church is to teach, the Bible is for proof.

> Men are to receive the teaching of the Church and to test it by the Bible; they are not to seek to determine the faith for themselves. The right of private judgment in the formation of a creed, commonly supposed to be a Reformation principle, has no warrant or place in the English Church. Private judgment even as to traditions and ceremonies (Art. xxxiv.) is forbidden; à fortiori in matters of faith. The Church, not private judgment, is our authority, and our only authority, in the first instance.

The logic of this position is curious. Men are to have no private judgment in matters of faith, yet they are to receive the teaching of the Church "in the first instance," and then test it by the Bible! But what right have they to test? It has been denied them. Then, again, how ridiculous to "receive" a thing, and afterwards "test" it! Men generally test and then reject or receive. Underneath all these positions is the doctrine of the infallibility of the Church, and in such a Church men can be only slaves.

The real drift of the present movement in doctrine and ritual in the Church of England is brought out with impressive emphasis by Mr. J. Horace Round in an article in the current Contemporary. The aim of the recent popular church histories, by Mr. Nye and Mr. Wakeman, which are circulating by scores of thousands among the young people of the Church of England, is to discount the term Protestant, and to maintain that the Church after the Reformation is continuous with what it was before in all but the supremacy of the Pope. How entirely otherwise was the case is shown by elaborate quotations from the Reformers themselves, whose chief aim was to denounce the doctrines of the mass and the priesthood, and to remove all signs and symbols of idolatry from the churches. The suppression of such concise facts from these popular histories is a serious charge against their authors and the bishops and church dignitaries who have given them their imprimatur. Suppressio veri is only a step towards suggestio falsi. It is well to have these sacerdotal methods and subterfuges exposed.

There are three important points in connection with the Czar's rescript which seem to need emphasising at this particular time. First, the high character of the Czar himself has been chiefly the cause of the favourable reception given to his proposal; not because he was the Czar, but because he was such a Czar. When the Emperor Napoleon III. proposed the same thing his doubtful reputation caused him to fail. Even kings and rulers, like commoner folk, can only build on character. Second, the present troubles in France, which can hardly fail to shake the faith of the French people in their greatest and most trusted institution, the army, may prepare them to look in another direction for satisfaction. We cannot easily imagine them turning away from military strength and military fame to less showy things, but the "unexpected comes to pass." It is a great opportunity for Christians to make the voice of reason heard. Third, this is an occasion for Christians of all lands to unite in prayer to God for a happy issue of the great proposal.

It is clear that militarism has received a severe blow in France through the latest development of the Dreyfus mystery. The position of that country just now is one of pitiable humiliation. One by one she has given up her ideals, but two things she had hitherto clung to as forlorn hopes—the hope of regaining her lost provinces, and her faith in her army. The former has been taken away from her by the publication of the Czar's "encyclical"; the latter has been shattered at a blow by the confession and suicide of Colonel Henry. But the hour of national humiliation is also the hour of opportunity. It would be well if France were to consider the futility and shame of a mere "war of revenge," and turn her national hopes elsewhere than to the corrupt and vainglorious army that has too long preyed on her finances and blinded her moral sense. There is no country in Europe in which the Czar's beneficent proposal has been received so coldly as in France; there is surely no country where its acceptance would be a more universal blessing.

After a battle is a miserable sight. Recent encounters have once more shown that war is a barbarous thing. The battles between America and Spain were horrible in their details, and sad reports are now being published of the unhealthy condition of the American camps, and of the consequent misery and death inflicted upon the victorious army. Even with the most perfect preparations that can be made such results appear to be inevitable. A battlefield like that of Omdurman, strewn with more than eleven thousand dead on one side and a hundred on the other, and from which sixteen thousand wounded on one side try to crawl away, is enough to make anyone shudder. The splendid courage of these fanatic Mohammedans strikes the mind with a kind of awe, and makes one cry out, "What splendid material for the Christian faith!" if only they could be claimed for the Saviour. Indeed, the willingness which they manifested to give their lives for a cruel despot, under the belief that he was divinely commissioned, is a standing rebuke to the lukewarmness of Christian people whose faith is so cold, and whose willingness to sacrifice anything for their religion is so faint and slow of foot. If mistaken belief can inspire to such deeds of self-devotion, what might not be done to redeem and uplift the world if the followers of the Son of God were to show a corresponding zeal and enthusiasm for their Master?

It seems that Crete is not near the end of her troubles. Concurrently with rumours of concord with Germany and disarmament from Russia the war-cloud has darkened over this unfortunate island again. The responsibility for this latest outbreak is undoubtedly due to Mohammedan fanaticism, as a result of which 300 Christians have been massacred. Three consulates were destroyed, our vice-consul was burnt in his house, and the total loss of life, as Sir Alfred Biliotti significantly hints, "cannot yet be accurately estimated." We were hoping that religious toleration, at least, would have led to peaceful understandings between Moslem and Christian. But God knows best how to effect his own purposes; and this, as other issues, we may confidently leave in his wise hands.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference has published his letter containing instructions and suggestions for the Special District Conventions, to be held throughout the country, so that the whole of Methodism will soon be preparing for these solemn meetings, on which so much may depend. Their object, as we understand it, is to seek for individuals a fuller and richer Divine life, and for the Church, as a whole, more power for service. In the ordinary language of Methodism they would be called holiness conventions. One of the most useful services is to point out wherein true holiness consists, for it is possible to use the term freely, and even to be excited about some vague idea of goodness it represents to the mind, and yet to know little of its negative and positive aspects. In the Epistles it is constantly found, but alongside it is the most careful and exhaustive enumeration of the qualities that constitute it. The fruits of the flesh are specified as things to be avoided; the fruits of the Spirit as things to be sought. The absence of the former, the presence of the latter, is holiness, the gift of God, the condition of power.

Referring to recent "Notes" on the offering of hospitality to visitors engaged in the Lord's work, a well-known Christian worker writes:—

This time of year they must rest, but a great change has taken place in Christian sociability. The cause is not far to seek. People with small means cannot invite workers to their home life to share their comforts, because they have ties to worldly customs and conditions that interfere with hospitality. Servants are scarce, and everything is advancing in expense. It would help the workers very much if they could be received by hospitable people without ceremony, and in simple, homely style. The pleasures of Christian intercourse would grow, and much happiness would be found in doing this duty. I believe the strangers received would become angels to their hosts.

The additional buildings at the Bermondsey Settlement are now ready for occupation, and there are vacancies for several additional residents. The warden, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, would be very glad to hear of any suitable men coming up to London this autumn for professional or business purposes, or as students, who would enter into residence at the Settlement. The neighbourhood is healthy, careful provision is made for the comfort of those who come into residence, and the work affords a first-class training in Christian and philanthropic effort without involving too heavy a call upon those whose time must necessarily be largely occupied with their own private business. The Settlement is within easy reach of the City, the West End, and of several of the London hospitals, especially Guy's and the London. Those coming to town this autumn would do well to correspond with Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, at the Bermondsey Settlement, Farncombe-street, S.E.

Referring to a Note on 2 Tim. iii. 16, in a recent issue, an esteemed correspondent writes:—

I would like, in support of your contention, to quote an able criticism on the R.V. of that verse which appeared some years ago. The Rev. N. West, D.D., of Syracuse, N.Y., says:—"The revisers themselves have condemned their own translation as a travesty of the laws of Greek syntax, and a violation of the true construction of the Greek text. They have openly repudiated it; they have not dared to follow it in other texts, where the form and construction of the passages are identical with the form and construction of 2 Tim. iii. 16. It is as absolute a surrender as could be desired. In 1 Tim iv. 4, Paul says, 'Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused.' Why have the revisers not applied here the same method, both passages being absolutely identical in form and construction? Had they done so it would have read, 'Every good creature of God is also nothing to be refused.' Also in Heb. iv. 13, 'All things are naked and open,' etc. Why not say, 'All naked things are also exposed to the eyes,' etc.? If it is true that some Scripture is not inspired of God, is it not equally true that some things are not naked and open, etc., and that some creature of God is not good?"

The Daily Chronicle, in a recent issue, spoke in high commendation of the Sunday League. There is, however, a darker side of the picture, as is shown by Mr. C. Boardman, of Stratford, who writes:—

The League has made seven days' work for multitudes, depriving them of the Sabbath as a rest day. Man and beast have now to work the day appointed by God for rest, to carry and provide for Sunday Leaguers. The League has demoralised the towns to which they have gone, compelling shops, etc., to open seven days.

The League has tended to loosen regard for the day of which God has said "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." This means also lessening the influence of God's Word; and may we not see its effects on the nation in increase of suicides, disregard of human life, and ruffianism accompanied with the foulest language, by those who seem not to care for God or man? Of this I can testify by personal knowledge as a Justice of the Peace, and from what I hear as I walk in the streets.

Good news comes to hand of the recent progress of the Evangelical Churches in Hungary. They are independent of the State, though the latter makes grants to the schools carried on under its patronage. Growth has in no way been hampered by the absence of State control and subsidies; on the other hand, some have thriven all the more on this account, and are at present full of vigorous and aggressive life, in spite of the predominance of the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches.

Serving for Love or Hire.

ONE of the most humiliating things to contemplate in the history of the Church of God is the violence done to plain Biblical teaching by those who have special theories to maintain. Incidental items of a parable or a paragraph have been seized upon because they seemed to support the position of the already biassed sectarian, while the soul of the teaching has been utterly overlooked.

One of our Lord's utterances which has suffered in this way is the parable of the day labourers (St. Matthew xx.). Men have fastened upon the "penny," and debated about that, contradicting each other flatly in the process. The "third hour," the "sixth hour," and the "eleventh hour" have been subjected to the same critical process, and some persons have gone so far as to build a most risky doctrine upon the incidental parabolic circumstance of some men having been hired at the eleventh hour. Meanwhile, one of the most searching and terrible truths for the Christian heart has, because of this wrangling over details, been frequently overlooked. Jesus has but one point to insist upon in telling the parable; let us apply ourselves to learn the lesson.

A superficial reading of the parable bewilders one. The householder appears in a most unfavourable light. There seems to be no justice in his action. He pays some men for one hour's work exactly what he pays others for a whole day's labour. The labourers who rebelled against this treatment seem to have a just cause. And it would appear, at first sight, as if all men were equally rewarded for service, and that those who delay until the eleventh hour fare just as well as others who toil from daybreak. Why, then, should one trouble about for God when such a recognition of work awaits one? So men have spoken. But as a matter of fact there is nothing more false than these positions. All men are not equally rewarded. Scripture asserts this again and again, and the human conscience also demands it. Neither can men delay their true lifework until a late hour, and be in the same position as those who have early submitted themselves to God. Delay in service means disaster of the most serious kind.

To understand this parable we must regard the circumstances which directly called it forth. A rich ruler had just interviewed our Lord, and after his sad departure the Saviour told his disciples that it was "easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." This statement caused the utmost astonishment amongst them, and they cried, "Who, then, can be saved?" Then it occurred to Peter that if a rich man who clung to his gold found the door of the Kingdom closed against him, surely that man who had renounced everything would merit a great reward. So he said to Jesus, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?" Peter wanted his religion to pay—he wanted good interest for his investment. His question clearly showed that he understood but in a very slight degree the true spirit of service for Jesus.

Our Lord's reply went to the quick. He said in effect, "Do not fear that you will be robbed of your reward. Your compensation is sure, but 'many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first!'" Then followed the parable of the day labourers, which is both introduced and closed with the words, "So the last shall be first, and the first last." And the parable itself shows how the first becomes the last. Was not Peter himself the first of the apostolic band, and was it not to him especially that our Lord addressed this veiled word, as if to say, "Nominally you stand first amongst the apostles, but the words you have just uttered reveal a spirit which is likely to drag you down, and to place you in the rear. See! I will show you how it may come to pass."

For what is the point of the parable? This, that those who entered the vineyard first, and who in point of time and labour might always have remained first, were, dismissed at the end of the first day. This is an important point to remember, for it has been too hastily assumed that the householder sought workmen for one day only. The whole parable is spoiled by this assumption. The householder would want his servants not for one day, but for the whole season. His method of selecting workmen on the first day, and his singular payment of them, was surely designed to test them, and to enable him to choose men who would do his work well and in the best spirit. The words of verse 16 distinctly imply this—"Many are called, but few chosen." Also the words of verse 14—"Take that thine is, and go thy way"—indicate the dismissal of the bad-spirited men.

What kind of man then does Jesus teach us is chosen for service? The answer of the parable is, not the man who serves for hire, but him who serves for love.

Now, let us look a little more closely at the parable:—

The householder, going out early in the morning, agrees with certain men to give them the usual wage for a day's work in his vineyard. It is a pure question of business—a definite bargain is made.

Later, he goes out again and arranges with more men, but this time no bargain is made at all. He simply says, "Whatsoever is right I will give you." These men were not mercenary bargainers; they trusted the honour of their employer. Last of all, the householder comes across a disconsolate group of men, and discovering that theirs is an enforced idleness—"because no man has hired them"—he sends them into his vineyard, with no promise at all about any payment (see v. 7, R.V.). In their case it was work for work's sake, and the hour being advanced, they would expect but a mere trifle, if anything at all. Now men who would consent to work in this way are exactly the kind of men with whom anybody would be disposed to deal generously. And the householder did act generously towards them. It was no question of wage, but solely

A QUESTION OF BENEVOLENCE.

Further, men who would work with little prospect of payment, rather than not work at all, were just the sort of men a householder would be glad to retain for permanent work. And this is what the man in the parable did. Those who bargained for their penny and then were not satisfied, proved that they had simply served for what they could get—in other words, they cared much more for their own interests than those of their employer. People of this temper are never desirable workmen, and so we feel that the householder did wisely in informing them that such services as theirs would not longer be required. Peter must have felt the terrible rebuke conveyed in his Lord's words—that even he might, because of his poor spirit, be shelved.

The lesson of the parable is an abiding one for all generations of Christians. It was never more needed than in our own time, when appearances form the popular standard of a man's service for God. It is not the bustler—who is always careful to exhibit his day of full work, to parade his list of "converts," to advertise his much service—that Jesus Christ cares for. The one hour with love in it outweighs, in his estimation, a whole day of self-seeking activities. Jesus always placed the most tremendous emphasis on motive. It is not so much the quantity of service that He demands as the good quality. It is possible to be overwhelmed with Christian work, while all the time the character is deteriorating, until at last the inevitable exposure comes, and the veil falls for ever.

The man who would be retained by his Lord for permanent service must abandon all bargaining about rewards, whether here or beyond. The only word that he must know is the word "sacrifice," which is the product of love. He who has learned how to sacrifice himself for Christ can never introduce into his life the pounds, shillings, and pence table. It is with our work for Christ exactly as it is with our best work for each other. All enduring work in life is accomplished by people who serve for love—the hireling is despised everywhere.

Christian brethren, what is the motive of our work? Do we serve for love or hire? If for hire, at the end of our allotted day we shall be sent on our way with an inglorious dismissal. If for love, having been already called, we shall be finally chosen.

"El-Shaddai."

WEARY with struggles long and keen
I fell asleep and dreamed a dream.

. . . .

Methought I saw, in light of gath'ring gloom,
A walléd city, dismal as the tomb;
And as my eyes peered through the barréd gate
I saw the inmates sad and desolate,
Helpless, as is the bark by tempest toss'd,
Moaning in low, deep tones, "Alas, we're lost!"

Outside the gate a maiden fair to see,
"Mercy" by name, was pleading earnestly
With "Justice," who forbade her enter in
Until the debt was paid for each one's sin.
And Mercy wailed and wept, but could not pay
The awful debt to take their sin away.

At length, across the distant plains, I see
Three shining beings speeding hastily;
They stopped, and, taking Mercy by the hand,
Asked her the price that Justice did demand;
"No gold, no silver will Him satisfy,
But He demands a perfect man to die."

Then He whose glory far outshone the sun,
Gazed on that city helpless and undone.
"Sin shall not always have the sway," He said,
"For I will bear the curse for them instead;
Mercy, go in, SALVATION preach to-day,
The King will pledge Himself the debt to pay."

. . . .

And He, who is not man that He should lie,
In the appointed time came down to die,
And cast into oblivion every sin
Of every contrite heart who trusts in Him;
Fulfilled the promise He to Mercy made,
And for that city lost the ransom paid.

. . . .

I woke, and as I pondered o'er my dream,
Life's mysteries and conflicts did but seem
The preparation for that sphere divine,
In which the conqu'ring ones as stars shall shine.
And will not He who gave Himself for me
At all times prove El-Shaddai to be?

Auricular Confession.

A PERSONAL TESTIMONY.

DEAR Sir,—May I be allowed to give a personal testimony as to the effects of auricular confession, and the means by which the young are caught in its snares? As a girl I attended what is known as a moderate high church, and was there prepared for confirmation. The candidates were carefully instructed, and, though nothing was said about confession, we were taught the power that the priest held in virtue of his office—his special gift in ordination "Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosesoever sins ye remit," etc.; his special authority to pronounce absolution at morning and evening prayer, and in the more pronounced form in the communion service; his authority to give absolution in individual cases, as in the service for the visitation of the sick.

After confirmation many of the candidates continued under the private instruction of one of the clergy, I among the number—but nothing was said about confession. In time a "sister" connected with the church made my acquaintance. "You are under the personal teaching of the vicar, are you not? Do you go to confession?" Then much protestation of affection and interest, the gift of a little book on the subject more "advanced" than any of the teaching given at the classes; more interviews and appeals to me not to shrink from the Cross which the Lord was offering; the suggestion that I should write to the vicar—and the first step was taken.

The answer came appointing an interview, though saying nothing of the object. The preparation for confession was practically the same that we had been through for confirmation, viz., a dividing it into periods, and writing down with the aid of a book of self-examination every sin one could remember from earliest childhood onwards.

On the day appointed the "priest" received me at the vestry door in his cassock, and, after asking whether I wished to say anything before making my confession, closed the vestry doors and pointed me to a kneeling stool at the table. Then closing and bolting baize doors over the others, he robed himself in a white surplice and took his seat at the table with an immense volume before him, in which he made notes as I proceeded, after the opening form of "I confess to Almighty God," etc. With the help of a few questions and my note-book I got through the confession. Then giving me some counsel and advice, part of which was that I was not to speak of having been to confession to anyone, he stood up, and pronounced the absolution authorised by the Prayer-book in the service for the visitation of the sick, and I was told to repeat the "Magnificat" in church before going home.

Soon after this the "sister" paid me a visit. Holding my hand and fixing her keen eyes upon me, she inquired, "Have you made a good confession? Nothing kept back? It is sin against the Holy Ghost to make any reserves. Then you speak not to man, but to God. Thoughts and imaginations you could not reveal to your mother must be laid bare there. Very few make a good confession the first time; sometimes it takes years, but it must be done." I will not try to describe the torture of this and similar conversations, or of the years that followed during which my soul was held in bondage.

Nor was I alone. Instinctively I knew who among my companions in church practised confession. A glance would often be sufficient to reveal to each other that we belonged to that inner circle who had "drunk more deeply of the church's teaching" than others. Inquiring after some of these recently, after more than twenty years, it is not surprising to hear that they have long ago gone over to Rome. Such, by the goodness of God, has not been my lot, for while for a time away from priestly influence I was led into light and liberty through the faithful speaking of an evangelist at a special mission.

Mine was not an "exceptional case" (see Canon Gore in The Times). It had been a sheltered life, under religious influence from childhood. Nor was my conscience burdened with any special sin, but I doubt not that hundreds of souls are bound by the same fetters to-day, unknown to the closest friends of their family circle, as the result of their preparation for confirmation.—Yours truly,

The Supremacy of Christianity—3.

BRAHMANISM.

AN army of pilgrims coming from the great tablelands of the Caspian—so long ago that in our endeavour to trace them we lose ourselves in pre-historic mists—crossed the Hindu-Kush mountains, and took forcible possession of the banks of the Indus, announcing themselves as the superior race. In order to sustain this assumption they invented the fable of Brahm issuing from the primeval egg, and creating from his head the Brahmans, from his breast the soldiers, from his loins the merchants, and from his feet the labouring class. Here was the beginning of that iron-banded system of caste which has prevailed in India for thirty centuries, crushing its best energies, like the mountain resting on Typhon's heart.

The sacred book of the Brahmans is the Rig-Veda. As to its character, we may safely accept the judgment of Max Müller, who apologises for the deficiencies of his own translation by saying that a complete rendering would have made him liable to prosecution, under the English law, against the publication of obscene literature. The three fundamental doctrines of the Veda are as follow:—

(1) The Brahm, the inconceivable One. He is so far removed from all human understanding, that "it cannot be asserted that he is known, nor yet that he is unknown."

(2) Hence the doctrine of Maya, or illusion. Nothing really exists except Brahm. Men are merely sparks from the central fire, separated for a time, to be absorbed at last. Our life, with all its varied experiences, is but "an illusory phantom, such as a conjuror calls up."

(3) Apavarga, the supreme good. This is to lose self-consciousness, in being finally merged into the ineffable One. The soul is like a drop of water, exhaled by the sun, floating for a time in vapour, at length falling into the sea.

What, then, shall the Brahman do to be saved? His only salvation is extinction. This is to be reached "by faith"; that is, by an unreserved yielding up of self to the contemplation of Brahm. If you would find a Hindu saint search for him by the roadside. You will find him there crouching upon his knees, naked, with hair uncombed, the Vedas before him. His body is smeared with ashes and dung. His countenance wears a look of utter stupidity. He is intently contemplating one of his long finger-nails. And this is the answer the Vedas give to the question: "What must I do to be saved?" He has no longer any consciousness of guilt, no passion nor appetite. He moves not, speaks not, except when, in a spiritual pride which would be grotesque were it not so unspeakably pathetic, he lifts his dreary eyes and mutters, "I am God! I am God!"

BUDDHISM.

A child was born about 500 B.C. in the royal city of Oude, who, as the oracles say, was destined for great things. At the moment of his birth he walked three paces, and in a voice like thunder proclaimed himself as the Fulfilment of Hope. The air was instantly filled with perfume, songs were heard in the distance, and lotus flowers dropped from the sky. The life of this wonderful child was thenceforth a continuous tale of marvels, until at length, in early manhood, he found himself under the sacred bo-tree. While meditating there, the great truth—which, indeed, no living man can define—came to him like a sunburst, and he went forth to work deliverance. At Benares he gathered a company of disciples about him, and, with their aid, compiled the sacred book known as Tripitika, or "The Three Baskets." It contains an amount of literature almost bewildering—about 300 volumes folio. It is chiefly devoted to the importance of self-culture, or the development of the intellectual as distinguished from the carnal life. Its three fundamental doctrines are as follow:—

(1) Buddh: that is, the all-pervading mind. The God of the Buddhists is indeed a spectre; he has no eyes to see, no heart to pity, no arms to save. He is represented as sitting aloft in an imperturbable calm, unmoved by the pain and struggle of mankind—an inactive, impersonal, valueless ghost of the God.

(2) Karma, or the law of consequences. As a man soweth so also shall he reap. There is no escape, there is no pardon—no averting the doom. The law is automatic, administering itself, constant as one's shadow.

The mills grind slow,
But they grind woe.

(3) Nirvana. This is the Buddhist's only heaven. It is defined as "the harbour of never-ending rest." It is indeed but another term for total annihilation. The faith of Nirvana is through endless transmigrations. The Buddhist's noblest wish is to shorten the period of these successive cycles of existences, and lose his personality at last. To accomplish this he must conquer all feeling, and attain to a sublime indifference to everything in life.

The moral code of Buddhism is contained in the Noble Eightfold Path, which is—Right belief, right feelings, right speech, right action, right means of livelihood, right endeavour, right memory, and right meditation. To observe this eightfold path will bring one to a final absorption of self in the soul of the universe. This is the answer which the Buddhist gives to the great question. His only conception of salvation is an utter loss of personal being, and even this is to be reached only by an absolute observance of law. In default of obedience, he must continue on the weary pilgrimage. The best that he can hope for is to breathe at last the odour of the lotus flower, and sink into oblivion like a rain-drop in the sea.

REST.

GOD'S gift of rest is not a mere negative blessing, as cessation from toil or relief from weariness. Nor is it the mere springtime of the Gospel after which the harvest is to follow. Unless it be the name of God, there is not in language a larger word than Rest.

Rest means for the body cessation from labour and ease from pain, the healthful and harmonious working together of its every member, muscle, nerve, in obedience to the spirit and the soul. It means to the soul deliverance from aching care, from vain ambition, from unsatisfied and insatiable desire, from the dominance of self in every form; the bringing of every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. It means to the spirit pardon of sin, justification, salvation from doubt or fear, reconciliation with God, union with Christ, sonship, heirship, present peace and hope of glory. It means attaining unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a full-grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ...speaking the truth in love, growing up in all things into Him who is the head, even Christ, from whom all the body fitly framed and knit together, through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in the measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body, unto the building up of itself in love.

True, the Gospel does not promise rest from pain or weariness to this body of our humiliation until it shall be fashioned like unto the body of his glory; it does not promise immunity or deliverance from the thorn in the flesh, whatever our thorn may be: but God does assure us, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

An ideal marriage union is the acme of human bliss, as it is the type of the union between the Redeemer and the redeemed, between the soul and God. When Naomi longed to see her dutiful and beloved Ruth settled in the home of a husband, she summed up all her hope in this comforting, this comprehensive, this exhaustive word: "Shall I not seek rest for thee, my daughter?" The acme of our salvation is to be the bride, the Lamb's wife; to find rest in the heavenly home of our Boaz—our God-man.

The Lord's land, the land of promise, the land good and large, flowing with milk and honey, the pleasant and glorious land, which drank water of the rain of heaven, in which the angel of the Lord was the captain of the host, and victory was gained not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord—all its blessedness, its beauty and its glory were summed up in the word Rest.

Take all the conditions of the material universe; take all the faculties with which God has endowed his manifold sentient creatures; take the infinite perfections of the Divine nature;

> Take all the glories of all the spheres, rest is the harmony of every portion with the whole; perfect balance, perfect proportion, perfect exercise of every power, every faculty, every possibility. Rest is absolute equilibrium. There is no rest but the rest of God.
> And multiply each through endless years—

God is never at unrest. When his most trusted and most highly exalted creature, Lucifer, the Shining One, aspired to be God, rebelled, and sought to sit upon the throne of the universe, the peace of God possessed the God of peace. Though He foresaw the revolt of that large minority of the angels represented by a third part of the stars of heaven, drawn by the tail of the dragon, the rest of God was not disturbed. Though He foreknew that the fall of man, made in his own image, would almost immediately follow his creation, the eternal quiet of the God of all patience remained unshaken.

> Not a surge of hurry,
> Not a shade of care,
> Not a blast of worry
> Touched his Spirit there.

This is the peace into which we are called.

When the Son of God came forth from the bosom of the Father to open the secrets of heaven and eternity, not to the wise and prudent, but to babes in wisdom; came with hands full of blessings for an oppressed and sinful and saddened world, He had no other word to express it all but rest—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

But a blessing may be given, yet not enjoyed; for rest is not a possession, but a state. Its one condition is faith in God. That, and that only, can bring the experience of rest. Neither Joshua nor David gave to the people rest. Let the circumstances be what they may, unrest is impossible with faith in God; and rest is impossible without it. Joshua and Caleb enjoyed God's rest in the wilderness; the people came short of entering into rest, even though they were in the land.

There is no rest but the rest of God, into which we enter by the obedience of faith. It is only attainable, for it only exists, in God. It could only be brought to men in the flesh by God manifested in flesh. And so the obedient Son and Servant not only said to all them that labour and are heavy laden, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest," but "Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall FIND rest unto your souls: for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." "My yoke"—not a yoke that I will lay upon you, but the yoke of my Father's will which I bear. Come under the yoke with Me—the yoke of his holy, acceptable, and perfect will. Be my yoke-fellow, and learn of Me, who am meek and lowly in heart—not like the proud usurper, who brought unrest into the universe, and whose works I have been manifested that I might destroy. And ye shall find rest unto your souls: for the yoke of his will is easy and the burden which I bear is light.

This rest is only possible in union with the risen Christ. M.

Nonconformist Marriages.—The new "Act to amend the law relating to the attendance of registrars at marriages in Nonconformist places of worship" is published by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, but can be obtained through any bookseller. It is very short, covering only five small foolscap pages, and consists of seventeen clauses, some of which contain sub-sections. The price is one penny.

Lisson-grove Mission.—Mr. G. T. Hunt writes:—May I beg the sympathy of your readers for the Lisson-grove Mission? Established in 1867, it has been ever since doing a good though unostentatious work amongst the poor of Lissongrove. Two Bible-women are constantly employed in visiting the homes of the people, ministering as only Christian women can to the needs of the sick and dying, caring for the deserving in distress, and doing generally all they can to make life brighter and happier for some. There are well-attended mission services, Sunday-schools, mothers' meeting, sewing classes, scholars' library, holiday work, and other helpful agencies. We have just been obliged to put the premises into a thorough state of repair, both inside and out, and this has involved a heavy outlay.

A Work and a Warning.

[The close of the brief article under the above title was omitted last week.]

THE annual conference at Blankenburg has come to stay, and a remark we recently made concerning the Convention at Keswick applies here also.

Leaders of Christian thought, pastors, teachers, evangelists, cannot afford to remain personally unacquainted with the intensive and extensive impression which is being made by these organised assemblages with their appeals, exhortations, and directions to a worthier Christian life.

Fifty years ago the Brethren taught the standing of believers as it was not taught in the churches, and inculcated Bible-reading as it was little practised; with the result that numbers of the most earnest, intelligent, and faithful of their members were gathered into the Brethren's assemblies.

Later on by thirty years the Salvation Army burst upon the scene, urging and inviting to aggressive evangelisation among the slums of "Darkest England." It attracted to itself a multitude of young Christians who were yearning for an outlet for their activity and energy and zeal; and most of its ablest officers were drawn from the churches which, by the unscriptural method of squeezing every spiritual and secular duty of the church into the hands of one man, were ignoring the gifts and stifling the energies of their members.

And now these organised and prayerful endeavours after a "higher life," which is nothing but the life which Jesus died and rose that we might live, bring sustenance to a famishing church which many ministers, like the lord upon whose hand the king leaned, see with their eyes but do not eat thereof. That lord had disbelieved the promise of abundant food, saying, "Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven might this thing be." He not only did not participate in it when it came, but by the thronging people he was trodden down in the gate and died. If God has opened the windows of heaven and sent down this spiritual blessing, it may well be feared that disbelieving lords of his heritage may suffer a similar fate, and die, so far as their usefulness is concerned.

Villefranche.—M. Charles Bisson carries on the Evangelical Mission and Sailors' Rest, that was started at the beginning of 1897 by Miss Adelaide Spranger. In a brief account of a year's work he speaks of some opposition, but of more encouragement. The meetings have grown, and God has given much blessing on the Word preached. Visiting the villages, distributing gospels and tracts, have occupied much of the evangelist's time. If effort among French soldiers and sailors has not been attended with much result, better things may be said of the contact with English sailors, many of whom have found the Rest to be a "home from home," where they were safe from many temptations, and surrounded by good influences. Christian friends at Nice and Cannes have helped in the work in various ways.

National Bible Society of Scotland.—At the monthly meeting of Western directors, held in Glasgow a few days ago, Rev. George Cousins, one of the secretaries of the London Missionary Society, spoke of the friendly relations between the two societies, who, especially in China, find their work mutually helpful. Mr. Archibald Orr-Ewing expressed the obligations of the China Inland Mission to the society, especially in connection with its annotated editions of the Gospels for sale through native colporteurs under missionary direction. Mr. F. R. Johnson, agent for Southern China, received a cordial welcome on his return to this country for his first furlough. A sketch map was laid on the table showing journeys effected during the past twelve months by Mr. James Murray and his sixteen colporteurs in Western China, during which they had visited 150 walled cities and a multitude of villages.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

"Fear not their fear, neither be troubled."—1 Peter iii. 14 (R.V.).

IT was a time of very real and fiery trial when Peter wrote these words. Persecution was already beginning with the house of God. The first mutterings of the awful storm which was to break in Nero's terrible atrocities were making themselves heard throughout the Roman world. The intention of this Epistle, therefore, was to encourage these scattered saints, that they might not be overwhelmed. Probably some who read these words need similar consolation.

Remember, beloved fellow-believers, that Jesus has suffered; your Lord and Master has trodden these thorns before you. See, they are flecked with his blood. Would you not desire to be fellow-partakers with Him in his sorrow, that you may share his glory? It is only in suffering that we can properly identify ourselves with the great anguish of the world, or learn to comfort and pray for others. And, probably, none know the innermost tenderness and companionship of Jesus like those who daily fill up that which is behind of his sufferings. Besides, their fear is much worse in anticipation than in actual experience. Probably God entirely delivers his martyrs from those physical tortures which to onlookers might seem unbearable.

MONDAY, September 19.

"Arm yourselves with the same mind."—1 Peter iv. 1.

The Church was redeemed in a baptism of pain; for her members to suffer, and by suffering to overcome the world, is to fulfil the forecast which Jesus gave when He said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Arm yourselves with this mind; put on this thought, this resolution, this purpose; determine that suffering at least shall never daunt you.

The reason for donning this armour.—Here we have no continuing city. In the death of Jesus we suffered in the flesh, and ceased from our connection with the world which cast Him out; and, as suffering is meted out to us, we become increasingly convinced that we can have no fellowship with its sins. The pain which the world allots to the followers of Jesus widens the chasm between them and it, pulls down the old nests in which their affections once built, and makes them more determined than ever to follow their Lord.

The choice which this armour involves.—No more the lusts of men, but the will of God. Never again to work the desire of the Gentiles, but to live according to God. Not henceforth to bow before the bondage of evil habit, but with erect and upright gaze to behold the face of Christ—such is the choice. Will you not now make it at this solemn moment, as you stand on this watershed between the two continents—here of the morning, there of the midnight? Follow the King, cost what it may.

The nature of the armour.—It is armour of Light: in which Christ's nature was encased, and on which all the shafts of man and devil broke into splinters. No weapon that was ever manufactured in any forge of earth can prevail against its heavenly temper. Put on the Lord Jesus Christ. Let this mind be in you which was also in Him.

"After that ye have suffered a little while."—1 Peter v. 10 (R.V.).

There is a limitation to our suffering. It is only for a little while; but every moment has been fixed by the immutable purpose and love of God. The hour of darkness is timed with an exact measurement. You shall not suffer one moment more than is absolutely necessary for your perfecting of God's glory; and for every moment there is an ample supply of grace. So, tired one, lie back on the bosom of God, and let Patience have her perfect work. The children of Patience are the heirs of Eternity.

But remember also that in Christ God has called you to his eternal glory. You heard that call years ago, and have been following it through days of evil and nights of pain. But the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, and He is waiting to fulfil his eternal purpose. What a banquet that will be when God will satisfy the expectations of those whom He has called to partake of it!

And the suffering is being used in ways you little understand to perfect, stablish, and strengthen you. It is from sick chambers and torture-rooms that God brings forth his veteran hosts in the day of battle. Think not so much of affliction as of the love of Christ, and the blessedness of being like Him and with Him for ever.

WEDNESDAY, September 21.

"An entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly."—2 Peter i. 11.

There are two ways of entering a port. A ship may come in, waterlogged and crazy, just kept afloat by continual working at the pumps; or it may enter with every sail set, and her pennon floating at the masthead. The latter is what the Apostle desires for himself and those whom he addresses. He desired that an abundant entrance should be ministered unto them.

An abundant entrance is really a choral entrance. The idea may be illustrated from the entrance of a Roman conqueror to his city, whence he had been sent out to war. Amid the crowds of spectators, the procession climbed slowly to the Capitol, while sweet incense was poured on the air, and music raised her sweetest and most inspiring strains. Will your entrance into heaven be like that? Will you enter it, saved so as by fire, or to receive a reward? Will you come unrecognised and unknown, or be welcomed by scores and hundreds to whom you have been the means of blessing, and who will await you? Will your coming make music right through the home of God? This is the meaning of the choral entrance. It reminds us of those words of Christ about the friends whom we have made by the right use of money welcoming us into eternal habitations.

THURSDAY, September 22.

"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly."—2 Peter ii. 9.

The following authentic story will best illustrate and enforce this text. I give it as it was given to me by a friend who had verified the circumstances, during a visit to Blankenburg.

A godly Lutheran pastor, Sander, of Elberfeld, had been compelled to rebuke an evil-liver for some gross sin; he had thereby attracted to himself his malicious hate, and the man vowed to repay him. One night the pastor was called to visit a house that could only be reached by passing over a plank which bridged an impetuous torrent. Nothing seemed easier to his enemy than to conceal himself on the bank till the man of God was returning from the opposite end of the plank, to meet him in the middle, throw him into the deep and turbid stream, leaving it to be surmised that in the darkness he had simply lost his foothold. When, however, from his hiding-place he caught sight of the pastor's figure in the dim light, he was surprised to see that he was not alone, but accompanied by another. There were two figures advancing towards him across the narrow plank, and he did not dare attempt his murderous deed. And as they passed his hiding-place, the one whom he did not know cast such a glance towards him as convinced him of the sinfulness of the act he had contemplated, and began a work in his heart which ultimately led to his conversion.

When converted, he sought out the pastor, to confess to him the murderous intention which had so nearly mastered him, and said: "It would have been your death had you not been accompanied." "Accompanied," said the other, "what do you mean? I remember the night very well; I was absolutely alone." "Nay," said the other, "there were two." Then the pastor knew that God had sent his angel, as He sent Him to bring Lot out of Sodom.

FRIDAY, September 23.

"One day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day."—2 Pet. iii. 8.

There is no succession of time with God: no past, no future; He dwells in the eternal present, as I AM. As we may look down from a lofty mountain on a stream in the valley beneath, tracing it from its source to its fall into the ocean, and feeling that each part of it is equally distant from the spot where we stand, so must time appear to the Eternal; who was, and is, and is to come.

One day is as a thousand years. He could do in a single day, if He chose, what He has at other times taken a thousand years to accomplish. Do not say that He will require so long to do this or that—to restore or convert the Jews; to introduce the millennial age; to undo the effects of the curse, and fill the years with blessing. Do not say that He must have as long to make the second heavens and earth as the first. Do not say that the overthrow of the empire of darkness, and the conversion of multitudes to God, can only be achieved by the processes which are now in vogue. All this could be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; and between sunrise and sunset God could effect the work of a thousand ordinary years.

A thousand years as one day. Periods that seem so long to our finite minds are not so to God. A thousand years in our reckoning is but a day in his. You say it is nearly two thousand years ago since Jesus died, or at least we are in the evening of the second thousand. But in God's reckoning, the Cross, the Grave, the Resurrection took place in the morning of yesterday. O children of dust, crushed before the moth, take wider views of God's horizon; believe in his mighty march throughout the centuries; He takes up the isles as a very little thing, and the centuries are the beats of the minute-hand.

SATURDAY, September 24.

"If we say...but if we walk."—1 John i. 6, 7.

In three marked passages, the beloved Apostle guards against what men are apt to say, and indicates to them what it would be better for them to substitute in thought and speech.

Men are apt to say that they have fellowship with Christ, and yet continue to walk in darkness. It is very sad that they should do so. It arises sometimes from their desire to stand well with their fellows, or because they do not realise, through blindness, how much darkness is still in their lives. But whichever be the cause, they lie and do not the truth. It is better to walk quietly in the light, so far as we have it; thus we shall secure his blessed fellowship, and that his blood will be continually at work cleansing us from sin, known and unknown, removing all hindrance on Christ's side to the free communication of his choicest gifts.

Again, men are apt to say that they have no sin (verse 8). It is a profound mistake on their part, arising from defective ideas of what sin is, or from self-ignorance. If they realised what God's standard of holiness and sinlessness is; if they understood that sin consists in coming short of his glory as much as in distinct violation of his will; if they knew that there may be sin in motive as much as in act, and even in want of love, they would not speak thus. As it is, they deceive themselves, though no one else. It is better far to confess our sins and seek cleansing, even for those of ignorance—our debts as well as our trespasses—in the precious blood of Jesus.

Again, men are apt to say that they have not sinned. Though they have fallen below their own standard, they do not like to admit it, and cling tenaciously to their position of having got beyond the range of sinning. Much better to admit it, and obtain forgiveness through the one Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous.

An American Retrospect.

THE great heat prevailing on Wednesday evening last week did not prevent New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, from being filled with eager and attentive listeners to a long and interesting account by the pastor, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of his recent experiences at Northfield and elsewhere in the United States. He said it had been to him a great and holy privilege to be the messenger of God to men and women gathered at Northfield, knowing at the same time that friends in London, united with him in the bonds of church fellowship, were "labouring together in prayer" for the messenger and his message.

The sea voyage in the Teutonic was restful and safe, also uneventful save for one little sidelight upon the ritualistic controversy at home. Questioned on the abrupt close of Church of England prayers on the Sunday morning, the officiating minister declared it was quite impossible to pronounce the benediction in the absence of an "altar"! How thankful are those who live in the heart of that benediction every day that there is no necessity to have it from the lips of a so-called priest! Yet one may feel profound sorrow for the man who can take such a view of the great verities of faith, and can materialise them into mere jugglery.

Mr. Morgan gave many details of the scope and purpose of the ministry in which he and others were engaged in the crowded and numerous meetings of the at Northfield, with its five or six hundred ministers and vast numbers of evangelists, Sunday-school teachers, Bible-readers, and lay missionaries; but we pass over much in his whole story, which will be familiar to readers of the reports we have already given. A remarkable feature, this year as last, was the way in which his own testimony and that of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor proved complementary, without anything approaching to consultative arrangement.

A memorable occasion was Sunday morning, July 31, when Major Whittle told the thrilling story of that work which Mr. Moody's characteristic generalship promptly initiated among the soldiers on the outbreak of the war; and in which work the Major, as his pitiable physical condition plainly showed, has nobly sacrificed health, strength, and almost life, for the sake of the souls of men. The circumstances of these soldier lads, under arms in camp, and liable to fever or death, naturally induced much tenderness of heart; and, on one Sunday alone, over 1500 men declared for the service of Christ. In the midst of Northfield's Sunday morning crowd listening to the tale of how from Georgia to Florida and from Porto Rico to the Philippines, the soldiers were singing the battle-hymn of the Republic, one felt as never before that the late war was indeed a righteous one.

I have seen God in the watch-fires of a hundred circling camps,
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps,
I can read his righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps—
His day is marching on!

. . . . . .

In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on!

There seems to be enshrined in the American people the spirit of liberty, rocked in the cradle of tempest, so that to-day they stand an unconquerable race. Thank God, we are likely to help in giving them a place where their voice shall be heard for righteousness in the councils of the Great Powers.

Mr. Dudley Smith, a member of New Court Chapel, accompanied Mr. Morgan for some children's meetings at Northfield; and not only were youthful lives thus won for Christ, but the methods employed were, to many spectators, a revelation as to how to deal with the young. For the encouragement of Christian workers, Mr. Morgan now referred to one occasion in Northfield, when feeling told him that his message had been a dismal failure; and yet no other of his utterances there evoked so many subsequent personal testimonies as to the voice of God speaking through his servant. It seemed a preparation for the blessing which followed next day, when from two to three hundred Christians rose to signify their desire to pass into LARGER AND FULLER SPIRITUAL LIBERTY.

The description of how two hours and a-half are employed at a Sunday morning service revealed the extensive use which is made of choir and quartette singing in American services. At Northfield Mr. Moody's influence gives a decided spiritual character to these vocal exercises, which are there engaged in only by Christian people; and he believes in giving the congregation "a solid half-hour's singing before the talking," the object of the much music thereafter being to keep the meeting sweeping along full of brightness. A very objectionable feature of the custom, in other places, is the expensive engagement of highly trained professional singers, who have the singing entirely to themselves, and take little, if any, interest in other parts of the service. Moreover, the character of the music is commonly wanting in solidity.

Once a week there was an "off-day" for the speakers at Northfield, the morning of one such day being spent in listening to Mr. Moody as he told ministers, among other things, "Thank God, dignity is not a fruit of the Spirit." He also said, concerning a certain attitude towards the Bible, "When one thinks he knows more than Jesus Christ it is time that man left the pulpit." Speaking of getting inquirers away from their feelings he declared that, in the matter of Esau, "Isaac trusted to his feelings and got fooled."

On another occasion Messrs. Macgregor and Morgan were introduced to the peculiarly American institution of giving impromptu answers to all sorts of written questions concerning their teaching as to personal spiritual life. "Do you preach the same kind of doctrine in your own church at home? If so, how does it affect your congregation?" These were queries which discovered a too common fear that declaration of the whole truth of God on such a point might thin church attendance; but, needless to say, there was no uncertain sound in the replies.

Further verbal questioning upon points of life and work from some four or five hundred ministers followed on the next afternoon. There was not a single critical, censorious, or controversial note, but an evident spirit of religious inquiry which is common to the whole country, and indicates remarkable ripeness for Divine blessing. On the other hand, the American pulpit has much more need of repentance than the British, in regard to of sensational subjects of discourse. This principle of "getting a crowd anyhow" was strongly condemned at the ministers' meeting. Further, it was pointed out that a peril to be guarded against, and one not confined to America, is the idea held by scores of men that the indwelling of the Spirit is desirable as a means to fill their churches. The result of that meeting was that many ministers went home to face their work from an entirely new spiritual outlook. The English preachers were present at the laying of the corner-stone of the new boys' chapel at Mount Hermon, for which another 10,000 dollars are required. Concerning a British contribution towards this amount, more is likely to appear shortly in the religious press. The attendance at Northfield this year was the largest on record; and many persons were met with who had received definite blessing there last year.

After leaving the Conference Mr. Morgan preached one Sunday in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church at New York; and with no stronger foundation than this bare and simple fact, a certain newspaper report gained currency next morning. The statement, under Mr. Morgan's treatment, now afforded considerable amusement to his New Court friends.

Describing his visit to Winona, it appeared that Mr. Morgan was abundant in labours among the four or five hundred Presbyterian ministers of Dr. Wilbur Chapman's Bible School, dealing with the ministerial and personal aspects of Divine truth, talking about pulpit methods, becoming transformed into "a thoroughly good Methodist" as he recited the gracious dealings of God with his own soul, and appealing to these men to "give God a chance" by the absolute surrender of their own wills. Chicago was next visited. Among other gatherings, Gospel services were held in the evenings; and although the daily temperature was ninety-three in the shade, Mr. Moody's church there was full, and over one hundred souls, mostly men, decided for Christ.

During his absence from London, Mr. Morgan has travelled over 8,500 miles, attended seventy meetings, and preached fifty-one times. In view of when America, after her war, is lifting up her head to the religious world, with wonderful tenderness of heart among her people, Mr. Morgan had been urged to undertake work in the great cities of America. Possibly two months next year may be given; but, on this point, he desired the opportunity for his church to unite with him in waiting upon God. The present condition of America also calls for special prayer at a time when that land is passing through a tremendous crisis in national history, and is emerging into a place where, if the churches of Jesus Christ are ready, an enormous work will be done for Him. Let us pray, said Mr. Morgan in conclusion, that the communities of God's saints there may stand in that true relationship to Him which is marked by dependence upon his Spirit for power in service, and that they may fully use the opportunity which He is presenting to them on that side of the water.

Christ-Balsam.*

It sprang of old for healing
Where Christ had touched the soil,
But failed of all its virtue
When grown by heathen toil.

Think ye that wondrous Balsam
No more of souls is seen?
It groweth yet in my life
Wherein the Christ hath been.

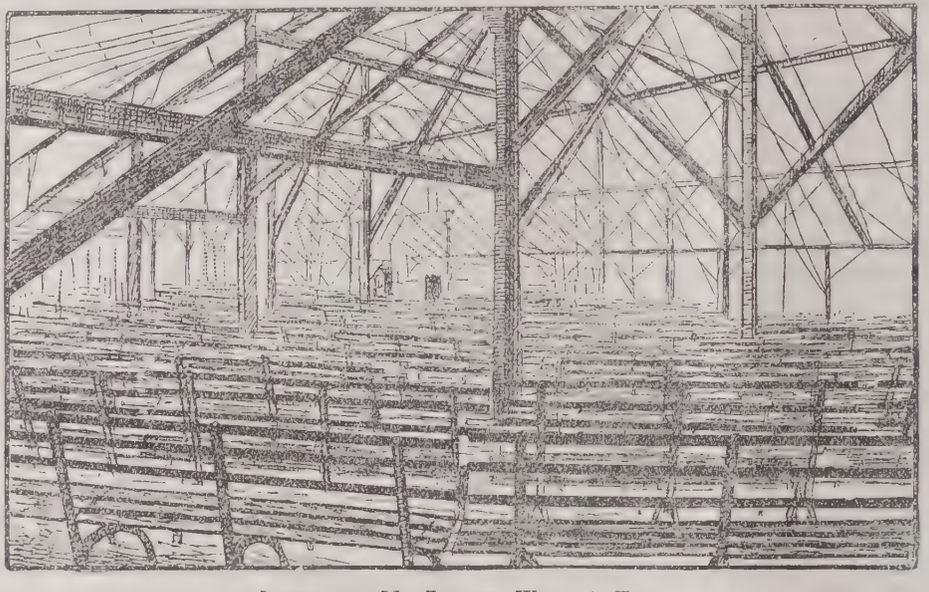
JESSIE A. ANDERSON.

Bessbrook Homes for Men.—Mr. G. Maynard writes: "Friends who know what a heavy loss we have sustained in the death of Mr. Jas. Keates will be glad to hear that Mrs. Keates is not relinquishing her part in the conduct of the homes, but hopes fully to take her share in the spiritual work going forward, while for the supervision of the business which is being carried on, I am most thankful to say that my cousin, Mr. Maynard Hare, whose name is well known in connection with Christian work, has kindly consented to give a part of his time to the direction of affairs.

Praying Away Bands.—A short article entitled "Praying Myself Away," was published in THE CHRISTIAN in December, 1891, and reprinted in leaflet form, in the hope that bands might be formed to pray members out into the foreign field. Since then 9000 leaflets have been sold privately, and 2000 have just been reprinted. The little card of membership to the Prayer Union has been issued to over 500 by the secretary, many of whom are now in the mission field. But this scarcely tabulates the number praying, as so many have formed bands independently. Mrs. Tulloch, 50, Grange Park, Ealing, would much appreciate receiving any letters, telling of existing bands, or of answers to prayer in connection with the movement.

* It is an old legend, related in Mandeville's Travels, that in a field in Egypt, where Christ had been as a child, there grew a balsam for the healing of all diseases.

Mr. Leonard Weaver's Mission.



THE AMERICAN TENT AT TOTTENHAM.

THE capacious canvas erection with which Mr. Leonard Weaver is at present touring the Metropolis was opened on Sunday last at Bruce Grove, Tottenham, in a convenient position contiguous to an extensive district chiefly occupied by people of the poorer artisan class. The population is estimated by local friends at not less than a hundred thousand souls.

Passing beneath the railway arch at Bruce Grove station, we reach the tent in the course of two or three minutes' walk. It is seven o'clock on Sunday evening, and there is yet half-an-hour to elapse before the commencement of the singing meeting which precedes the evangelistic service. Nevertheless, the orderly and increasing crowd almost fills the pavilion. By half-past seven every seat is occupied.

Meantime there is opportunity to note that the congregation includes a large percentage of average working people—the children of industry, who toil laboriously throughout the week for the bread that perisheth, but seldom cross the threshold of any place of worship. Attracted, may be, by the handbills which have been so judiciously distributed, or drawn, possibly, by the kindly word of personal invitation, they are, at any rate, here—and evidently feel—quite at home.

Mr. Weaver states, in homely terms, the object of the mission, and extends a hearty welcome to Christian workers, who have gathered in force, and to the entire congregation. With him on the platform are Mr. and Mrs. Baker, blind singers of the Gospel, who have recently arrived from Philadelphia, Mr. William Grove, and friends from the various London centres already visited by the evangelist. During the song service and the preaching, the influence of the Spirit's presence is manifest; the speaker's earnest words are owned of God, and tears spring unbidden to many eyes as the venerable Mr. Baker clasps his hands in prayer and pours forth his soul in song. It is a blessed and melting season of conviction.

INTERIOR OF MR. LEONARD WEAVER'S TENT.

In response to loving invitation, a number of the hearers express their wish to become disciples of the Lord Jesus. The after-meeting ultimately concludes with united thanksgiving.

A word as to the tent itself. Composed of four thousand yards of canvas stretched over a strong wooden framework, and provided with folding seats, it measures a hundred and fifty feet by eighty, and affords sitting accommodation for three thousand persons. Originally dedicated to mission service by Governor Beaver, of Pennsylvania, it has been erected in various parts of Great Britain, and was last at Dalston, in North London, where the workers were cheered by witnessing a large number of conversions.

It is proposed to continue the gatherings at Bruce Grove for four weeks, meetings being held each Sunday afternoon and evening, in addition to week nights; and, subsequently, to make the East-end of London the centre of work for the winter months, providing suitable pitches can be secured for so large a tent. H.

Sailors' Welcome Home, Canning Town, E.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of Naples, and Rev. W. Sears, of Willesden, were the principal speakers at the September muster of the Christian Life Boat Crew. Miss Child named the text for the month (2 Cor. v. 9, R.V.), and gave interesting accounts of the Lord's work. A special feature of the meeting was the presence of a number of Dutch seamen, who, in commemoration of the coronation of the young Queen of Holland, wore their national colours.

Young Women Travelling Abroad.

THE National Vigilance Association has issued an interesting booklet, containing a very strong warning to young women going abroad, to situations or otherwise. It is printed in four languages, and applies to foreign women coming to England, as well as English women going abroad.

The Association possesses a good deal of evidence of the existence of a body of men in Europe, whose sole business is to decoy unsuspecting young women, by fraud and false pretences, from their homes and country, and then sell them into a state of slavery, the conditions of which are appalling to contemplate. The object of the pamphlet is to warn young women of the doings of these men, and to render such help as will put them on their guard. The pamphlet bears the name of the Duke of Westminster, as President of the Association, together with the names of Mrs. Josephine Butler, Mrs. Henry Fawcett, and Mrs. Katharine Thomasson, as vice-presidents. For the first time in the history of such an effort the pamphlet includes the names of the German, French, Dutch, and Belgian Consuls-General, and also that of the Minister for Switzerland, all these gentlemen expressing their sympathy with the effort of the Association to safeguard and protect young women while travelling abroad

There are also appended the names and addresses of 167 ladies and gentlemen of recognised standing in eighty-three different towns and cities, mostly in Europe, but some in Russia and South Africa, who are ready to assist young women of any nationality who may be in trouble, and put them in communication with the London offices of the National Vigilance Association.

The Association has, with the permission of the authorities, placed on board most of the steamers leaving for Continental and other ports, a framed and glazed warning in four languages, calling attention to the booklet, copies of which have been given to the stewardesses of the various vessels for distribution. The warning can be obtained free on application to the Secretary, 267, Strand, London, W.C.

Congregational Church Aid Society.—Progress is apparent in each of the three main lines of this Society's operations, viz., the aiding of the weaker churches in the more adequate support of the ministry, the fostering of new churches, and the promotion of more strictly home missionary enterprise—all within the area of the aided county unions of England and Wales. The secretary, Mr. J. Edward Flower, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., says: "Our function is not solely, not primarily, to collect and distribute funds, but, in the broadest sense of the term, to aid the churches in their spiritual work. That aid is as truly given to the richer church by collecting and wisely disbursing its contributions, as to the poorer church that receives those contributions."

The Widow's Cry.

THE first year of widowhood, with its struggles to "make a connection" by charing or washing, whereby to provide sustenance for orphan children, is one of the most pathetic sights the life of the poor can present. Said one of these newly-made widows to us but a short time ago, "I am thankful enough for the money that has been such a help, but I am more glad to know that somebody cares what becomes of me and my little ones. Now I do not feel so alone and afraid."

Another widow says: "Nothing but constant prayer keeps me from ending my life, for I am without work and starving, and do not know what to do."

Yet another, whose life has held its tragedies of pain, says: "Forgive me for not being able to repay the loan I had. My health has been so very bad this summer; I have been compelled to give up work in consequence. Yet 'His grace is sufficient,' and I have his promises to lean upon."

What cries of widows and orphans rise by night and day to the God of the desolate and broken-hearted! We who know something of the life that is lived in courts and alleys, in back rooms and shabby genteel homes, know how often such cries seem to be unheard. How often "trembling faith has turned to fear," and fear to despair. We often think that if all who called Jesus Master and Lord sought their pleasure in carrying out the Divine will, the misery and sorrow that render the work of our own and kindred missions necessary would cease from the land.

Friendless and Fallen.

JUST as the Refuge attached to this institution is "open all-night," and affords protection and succour to young women and girls when most people are at peace and rest in their own abodes, so the five homes are sustained in full operation "all the year round."

There was recently admitted a woman whose career had led her to attempt to take her own life. She jumped into the canal, but was rescued from drowning by a gentleman who was passing at the time. He consulted his pastor, Rev. F. B. Meyer, as to what could be done to save the woman, and a lady attended the court on her behalf. The magistrate, finding she was willing to be helped, discharged her, and she is now in one of the Homes. Another recent case is that of a woman of superior education and position. She belongs to Australia, and has been in India in good service. There she made the acquaintance of an officer, whom she subsequently met in England, and with whom she lived for some years. She was recently met with in the north of London in a pitiable condition, and brought to this institution and admitted. She told the secretary that she could not have gone on much longer in her wretched career.

Yet one other case, admitted only last week—a girl aged fifteen. Her father is dead, and at the time the application for her admission was received her mother was dying. But for this institution she must have gone to the workhouse.

Mr. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W., will be glad of help to support the work, and will send to any address a small booklet recently published, entitled "Toiling and Reaping," giving instances of good accomplished by God's blessing upon the work.

Rev. John M'Neill addressed an assemblage of several thousand people on the Castle Hill, Inverness, on Sunday afternoon. In the evening he addressed a crowded meeting in the music hall.

William George Torr, LL.D., M.A.

PRINCIPAL OF WAY COLLEGE, ADELAIDE.

THE problem of religious education in elementary schools has received great attention of late years in both political and ecclesiastical circles. A question of equal urgency is the moral and religious training of the children of the upper and middle classes, though it is not difficult to find parents who, while vehemently asserting the importance of Bible knowledge for the children of the poor, pay practically no attention to this necessity in the choice of a school for their own sons and daughters. If this consideration is a serious one at home, it is no less essential in the colonies, where it is the task of the educator, in the words of the prophet, to "raise up the foundations of many generations." It is recorded in the life of Dr. Thomas Arnold that the great headmaster of Rugby felt some envy of the lot of one of his own pupils, who was appointed to establish a college in Tasmania; and those who, like the subject of our sketch, have the care of an important school in a colonial city need desire no greater opportunity for usefulness.

The early life of Dr. W. G. TORR prepared him, by its disadvantages as well as its advantages, for the position which he now fills. He was born in 1853, at Tavistock, Devon. His father emigrated a few years afterwards to South Australia, where he found employment as a working miner at the Burra. Dr. Torr is never tired of expressing his debt to the godly example of his father and mother, and to the firm but gentle discipline of the Christian home in which he spent his earliest years. The State school system of the colony gave him his chance of self-improvement. From a pupil-teachership he worked his way up to the headship of a small school at Ulooloo, and thence, by a rapid series of promotions, he was transferred to the Central Model School in Adelaide, the Practising School of the Adelaide Training College, and the new Model School at Moonta Mines—the largest State school in the colony.

While at Moonta he received a call which, if accepted, would mean the surrender of these tempting prospects and the devotion of his life to a career more laborious and, from a worldly point of view, less promising. The Bible Christian (Methodist) denomination, of which he was a member, had decided to found in Adelaide a secondary school for boys, to be called Way College, in memory of the pioneer of Bible Christian missions in Australia. An appeal was made to the head master of Moonta State School to undertake its establishment. The community at the back of this enterprise was small, and not wealthy; in the opinion of many the colony was already sufficiently provided with schools of this type, and its principal would be abandoning a sure career for an uncertainty. Mr. Torr accepted the invitation of the conference, but, as he did not possess a University degree, which he considered essential to his success in this new undertaking, he asked to be allowed first to go to England to provide himself with this equipment.

Accordingly, in 1886, he resigned his position in the Government service, and proceeded to Oxford at his own expense. For a man of thirty-three—about ten years after the period when the faculty of passing examinations is supposed to wane—to begin his education afresh and struggle with the intricacies of Greek grammar and other burdens of rote-learning, demands no ordinary pluck and perseverance. Mr. Torr, however, entered St. John's College as an undergraduate, and threw himself into his new studies with characteristic enthusiasm. He entered fully into the general life of the University, and is remembered by many of his contemporaries for the earnest share he took in the various evangelistic activities of the place. Not a few undergraduates of his time have reason to thank God that ever they came under his influence. On leaving Oxford he spent some time at Downing College, Cambridge, and Trinity College, Dublin. When he returned to Australia in 1891 he bore away from England quite a sheaf of distinctions.

After all this zealous preparation would the experiment succeed? The principal and staff had been secured, and a suitable building had been purchased in a charming suburban site. But there were still many discouraging predictions that a new secondary school would be a white elephant, especially as a measure had just passed Parliament giving free education in all the State schools of the colony. It was an anxious hour when, on a morning in January, 1892, Dr. Torr opened the doors of Way College, and awaited applications. The result was startling, even to his own buoyant faith. On that day no less than 122 names were taken, including those of thirty-two boarders. Nor did the college start at its high-water mark, for the numbers during the first six terms were 122, 147, 170, 201, 214, 229, including in the boarding-house thirty-two, thirty-nine, forty-nine, fifty-eight, sixty-four, and seventy-three respectively. Within a short time Way College had become the largest boarding-school in the colony, and was receiving pupils from all parts of Australasia.

It will be seen from this sketch of Dr. Torr's career that he possessed exceptional qualifications for the headship of a secondary school in a colony like South Australia, uniting as he did the culture of a University graduate with the practical and theoretical knowledge of educational methods in which the most brilliant University men are often entirely lacking. It was only to be expected that he would make Way College distinctive, and he has done this from the beginning by introducing a curriculum which has found first critics and then imitators. He has been practically the pioneer in South Australia of a system of education which was received less favourably eight years ago than it is to-day. As soon as a boy has passed through the Preparatory School he joins either the University School or the Practical School. If he is attached to the former he is prepared for the University of Adelaide or the Civil Service. If to the latter, he receives special training for a commercial, agricultural, or engineering career. The special feature of the college is the high value set upon the department of manual training and agronomy. It is felt by Dr. Torr that the training of the hands is important not only as helping to provide a livelihood, but for more strictly educational reasons also. The visitor to Way College will find some of the lads fashioning bridles in the harness-room, others busy at decorative clay-modelling, others welding steel at the forge, others making picture-frames in the carpenter's shop, and yet others pruning peach-trees in the orchard. In this way school-training becomes many-sided, and the boy who elsewhere, for his dislike of grammar or algebra, would be driven into a back seat, is encouraged to a wholesome self-respect by receiving credit for his skill with the hammer or the lathe.

But while Dr. Torr has made his mark in the colony as a practical expositor of the theories of "the new education," he has been no less faithful in his adherence to the oldest educational principle of all, namely, that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Any one who has been present at the opening of morning school when the Scripture lesson is being given, or at the simple evening service before supper, with its direct and homely talks on every-day morality, will have gained a new conception of the ministerial functions of the true teacher. One notable feature of the religious life of Way College is the success of the Christian Endeavour Society, of which nearly all the boarders are active members. After the Adelaide Convention of 1892, which Dr. Clark attended, Dr. Torr eagerly seized upon the movement as admirably adapted to the needs of a school in which eleven different churches were represented, and where, consequently, a denominational society would have been undesirable. Its "Sunlight" Committee was severely tested by an influenza epidemic. A penny collection each week goes to some benevolent object and correspondence is regularly maintained with old members.

Inspired by a visit from Mr. J. R. Mott, the college has also heartily taken up the programme of the Students' Christian Union. Three old pupils are already doing noble service as bush missionaries, travelling from one lonely "station" to another on their bicycles, and holding services in places where, in some instances, no prayer has been offered for years. And many other "Way Boys," while pursuing their daily occupation in city or township, are purifying the moral atmosphere of their own neighbourhood by putting into practice what they have learnt from the teaching and example of Dr. Torr.

The Trial before Caiaphas.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IT was as yet but two or three o'clock in the morning. Jerusalem was still asleep, and well it was for the foes of Jesus that no suspicion of what was on foot had breathed into the minds of the crowds of pilgrims; for, had the Galileans only known what was being done to their favourite prophet, they would have risen, and the plot must have miscarried before Jesus was handed over to the Romans. But, as the Lord said, "It was their hour and the power of darkness." The darkest hour before the dawn!

When Annas had completed his preliminary inquiry he gave orders that He should again be bound with the thongs from which He had been relieved, and led to that part of the palace specially used by Caiaphas, who was High Priest, but a mere puppet in the hands of the wily Annas. By this time the leading Pharisees, Sadducees, and priests had been got together, summoned by special messengers; and though the formal meeting of the Council was probably not held till a little later (compare Matt. xxvi. 57 with xxvii. 1, 2), the trial was really conducted at that untimely hour, and the evidence procured on which final action was taken.

They awaited the Prisoner in one of the larger halls of the palace, sitting in Oriental fashion on cushions and pillows, in a half-circle, with turbaned heads, crossed legs, and bare feet; the High Priest in the centre, the others, on either side, according to age.

All the rules of justice were violated. The judge was chief inquisitor; witnesses against the Prisoner were alone summoned; and the Court set itself from the first to get evidence to put the accused to death.

At last two witnesses appeared who seemed likely to agree on a very momentous charge. They said they had heard Him utter, more than two years ago, words which seemed to threaten the very existence of the temple. But, when more closely questioned, their witness also broke down utterly. It seemed as though Jesus was not to die, except on his own testimony to his own supreme claims. All lesser counts failed.

All this time, as witness after witness was brought in, our Lord maintained an unbroken silence. He seemed as though He heard not, but was absorbed in some other scenes from those transpiring around. What need was there for Him to interpose, when all the charges proved abortive? He was, moreover, waiting till the Father gave Him the signal to open his lips.

At last Caiaphas could restrain his impatience no longer; he sprang to his feet, and with unconcealed fury fixed his eyes on Jesus and said: "Answerest Thou nothing? Hast Thou nothing to say, no question to put, no explanation to offer as to what these witnesses say?" Jesus quietly returned the look, but held his peace. There are times when it is treason to hold our peace, when God demands of us to raise our voice and cry like a trumpet. But when it is clear that high-handed wrong is bent on securing the condemnation of the innocent, and that the case is prejudged, it is the highest wisdom to be as a lamb dumb before its shearers, and not open the mouth.

There was a last alternative. Caiaphas might put Jesus on his oath, and extort from his own lips the charge on which to condemn Him; but he was evidently reluctant to do it, and only availed himself of this process as a last resource. It was well known to this astute and cunning priest that Jesus on more than one occasion had claimed, not only to be the long-expected Messiah, but to stand to God in the unique relationship of Son. Nearly two years before He had called God his [illegible] Himself equal with God [illegible], comparatively recently, at the Feast of Dedication, He had claimed that He and the Father were one; in consequence of which the bystanders threatened to take his life because that, being a man, He made Himself God (x. 31-33). Gathering, therefore, the two claims in one, and in the most solemn form, putting Jesus on his oath, the High Priest said unto Him, "I adjure Thee by the Living God, that Thou tell us whether Thou be the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?" (Matt. xxvi. 63; Mark xiv. 61). There was no need for further hesitation. Charged in this way, in the highest court of his nation, and by the representative of his people, He could not hold his peace without inconsistency with the whole tenour of his life and teaching. John, representing his disciples and friend, must be assured that his master did not vacillate by a hairsbreadth at that supreme moment. Those high officials must understand, beyond the smallest possibility of doubt, that if they put Him to death He would die on the supreme count of his Messianic and Divine claims; and, therefore, amid the breathless silence of the court, without a falter in the calm, clear voice, Jesus said, "I AM." The Father that sent Him was with Him; He had not left Him in that awful moment alone, and it was a great pleasure to the Saviour to be able publicly to avow the relationship, which was shedding its radiance through his soul. Then, with evident allusion to the sublime vision of Daniel, he added, "Ye shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming with the clouds of Heaven." Though Son of God, He was not less the Son of Man; and though one with the Father, before the worlds were made, was yet prepared to exercise the functions of the expected Prince of the House of Israel. This is the force of nevertheless in Matt. xxvi. 64, "I am Son of God: nevertheless, ye shall see the Son of Man sitting at the right hand of power."

The words were very grateful to the ears of Caiaphas and his confederates, as they afforded ground for the double charge they needed. For a man to claim to be Son of God would make him guilty of blasphemy, and he must be put to death according to Jewish law; whilst if there was a prospect of his setting up a kingdom, the Roman's suspicions would be at once aroused. But in their glee to have entrapped their victim they must not forget to show a decorous horror of his crime. In well-assumed dismay the High Priest rent his clothes, saying, "He hath spoken blasphemy: what further need have we of witnesses? Behold, now ye have heard the blasphemy." And then came the decisive question which the judge was wont to put to his co-assessors, "What think ye?" And they all condemned Him to be worthy of death.

Then ensued a brief interval, until the early formal session of the Sanhedrim could be held: and during this recess the disgraceful scenes were repeated which had already taken place in the hall of Annas. Luke tells us that the men that held Jesus mocked Him, beat Him, and asked Him to prophesy who it was that smote Him. Matthew adds that they spat in his face. But Mark lets in still more light on the horror of the scene, when he appears to distinguish between some who began to spit on Him, and to cover his face, and the officers who received Him with blows of their hands. And the expression some occurs so immediately after the record of their condemning Him, that the suggestion seems irresistible that several of these reverend dignitaries did not hesitate to disgrace their grey hairs in personally insulting the meek and holy sufferer, venting their spleen on one who gave no show of retaliation, though one word from those pale compressed lips would have laid them low in death, o withdrawn the veil of eternity, behind which legions of angels were waiting impatient to burst upon the impious scene. But do not condemn them as though they were sinners beyond all others; remember that we have all the same evil human heart.

At last the morning broke, and as soon as it was day the assembly of the elders of the people was gathered together, both chief priests and scribes; and they led Jesus away into their council (Luke xxii. 66). This scene had already been so well rehearsed that it probably did not take many minutes to run through the necessary stages, according to the precise formulæ of Jewish procedure. The method that had already proved so valuable was quickly repeated. Questioning Him first as to his Messiahship, Caiaphas, as spokesman of the rest, said formally, "If Thou art Christ, tell us."

It was a sorry figure that stood before them. Dishevelled and in disarray, with disordered garments, the spittle still hanging about his face, and the marks of the awful storm and mental anguish stamped on every feature, the innate dignity and glory of Jesus shone out in his every movement, and notably in his majestic answer, "What do you ask Me? You have no real desire to know! If I tell you, ye are in no mood to believe! And if I ask you your warrant for refusing to believe, if I argue with you, if I adduce Scripture to support my claims, ye will not answer; but though I read the motive of your inquiry, I will give you all the evidence you desire. From henceforth shall the Son of Man be seated at the right hand of God."

As to the other charge, involving his Divine nature, the admission of which involved the crime of blasphemy, they were too eager to wait for Caiaphas; but with swollen faces, excited gestures, loud cries, rising from their seats, and gesticulating with the fury of religious frenzy, they all said, "Art Thou then the Son of God?" And He said unto them, solemnly and emphatically, "Ye say that which I am."

Then they turned to one another and said, "What further need have we of witness? for we have heard from his own mouth." The inquiry was at an end so far as Jesus was concerned. But they held a further council against Him, how to construct the indictment which would compel Pilate to inflict death; for the execution of the sentence of death was kept resolutely by the Roman Procurator in his own hands.

Finally, as soon as they dared disturb him, they led Jesus from Caiaphas into the Prætorium, the palace of the Roman governor, who, in accordance with his custom, had come up from his usual residence at Cæsarea to the Jewish capital, partly to keep order amid the vast crowds that gathered there at the feast, seething with religious fanaticism, and partly to try the cases which awaited his decision. The Jewish authorities anticipated no great difficulty in securing from him the necessary ratification of the death sentence. It surely would not matter to him to add another to the long tale of robbers and revolutionaries which were awaiting the cross, the more especially as they were able to prefer a charge of treason against the Roman power substantiated by the prisoner's own admissions made recently in their presence.

It is an awful spectacle, and one over which we would fain draw a veil; but let us dare to stay to watch the evolution of the diabolical plot to the end. Whilst Jesus stands before his judges, He will judge them, the secrets of many hearts will be disclosed, those that fall on Him will be ground to powder; whilst others built on Him as the sure corner-stone will become stones in an eternal structure. This, at least, will become manifest, that Jesus died because He claimed to be the Son of God, in the unique sense of oneness with the Father, that made Him equal with God, and constituted blasphemy in the eye of Jewish law. And He who has taught the world of men Truth could neither have been a deceiver, nor deceived, in this high claim.

Romanism:

ITS CAUSES AND ITS CURE.

WHILE much anxiety is being felt amongst Christians as to the development of Ritualism, and various means, mostly I fear in human energy, are suggested to arrest its growth, scarcely any one seems to be considering why it is that in some 4000 parishes the sacerdotal system has proved so attractive. He is indeed a poor physician who tries to cure a disease when he does not know its cause.

Let me try to present to your readers what is, I believe, going on in the minds of thousands in England. They have, from a variety of causes happily, got a high ideal of Christian life, and they expect that recognised teachers of religion should be men of lofty ideal and of saintly lives. They look not only for unworldliness, but a life of self-sacrifice and a humility which would efface self in the service of God. They also expect that the Church of Christ should have unity in its teaching and its action.

Now, what do they find in too many places in England? They look to the Church, and they too often find the clergyman hard-working, perhaps, but not with an other-world stamp. If it is in a town they find several Churches teaching different doctrines, and with but little spiritual sympathy for anything outside of their own congregation. They turn to the Dissenters, and they too often find a minister with much self-assertion, whose sermons, while lacking in spirituality, are little more than a highly laboured attempt at intellectua display, garnished with quotations of poetry. They find often that the pulpit is diverted from its true tunction of making known the glorious Gospel of he cross of Christ Jesus, to become a platform from whence a self-confident young man puts forth crude ideas as to social progress and political reform, while his prayers, it is painfully evident, are too often offered not to God, but for the approval of the audience.

They then hear of a body called Brethren, who desire to be separated more than others from the world, and who stand aloof from the followers of ecclesiastical system or the turgid eloquence of the dissenting minister. But soon they find the Brethren, who profess to be guided more surely than others, while zealous and unworldly, are split into sections which mutually denounce one another, while few have the love for the brethren which by our Lord's teaching was to be the mark that they were his disciples. I think those who know something of the state of England to-day will own that this is a sadly common case.

The seekers after truth feel instinctively tha there is something wrong. They have read of the saintly lives of children of God in the Church of Rome, such as St. Augustine, Savonarola, Madame Guyon, and many others which correspond to their ideals.

At this time they see some men of great devotedness, and living on very small incomes, who profess to represent the Church of Christ, whose appeal is not to their own personality, but to "The Church," and who display a zeal which is most remarkable, while in the Mass they present as they affirm th Real Presence of our Lord as an object of worship and in the service of worship no attempt at tawdry eloquence, no voice of man's personal teaching, i allowed to distract the mind from the contempla tion and adoration of God, while the very attitude of the priest appears to indicate that he too takes the place of a worshipper whose personality is effaced before the Real Presence. Is it to be wondered at that tens of thousands are being attracted to a system which for fifteen centuries held the great majority of Christendom in its power? Is it not probable that in the present condition of the Church of Christ in England, a system which seems so holy and attractive should attract the great majority who do not known the hidden life, and therefore do not know that "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation" and outward show?

How has that most attractive and subtle error been met hitherto? I am afraid too often by abuse, or by invoking the secular power, or stirring up the passions of the people. The result could have been foreseen by those who had read, "Woe to them that go down to Egypt," "The Egyptians shall help in vain," "Cursed is the man that maketh flesh his aim," and "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal but mighty (efficacious) through God to the pulling down of strongholds." Since Lord Beaconsfield brought in his Bill twenty years ago to "put down Ritualism," what has been the success of that measure? Sacerdotalism has increased at least tenfold. "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword" will soon be fulfilled in the Papacy itself, and yet those who oppose it are falling into the same grave disobedience which they condemn in Rome!

What, then, is to be the remedy? "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." "The salt" is only "trodden under foot of men" when it has "lost its savour." Fleshly, scheming wrestling Jacob cannot overcome, but Israel, Prince of God, emptied of all natural power and receiving power from on high, has power with God and with men. If, instead of relying on the Saul's armour, "attractive services," "choirs," "intellectual sermons," "social entertainments," "influential supporters," we are identified in a deeper sens with the Crucified One, men will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus, and as He is afresh "lifted up" in us as well as by us, He will "draw all men unto Him," and they will learn to rest, not on an ecclesiastical system for the transmission of grace through eighteen centuries of human labour, but on Him who said, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And they will find Him the Priest and the Sacrifice all in all.

Colonial Missionary Society.—At a meeting held last week at the Memorial Hall, London, Mr. John Elliott spoke on Western Australia, with which he had been connected for many years, and on the impetus given to Congregationalism there by the Colonial Missionary Society. He instanced the case of Perth. When he settled there they had sometimes a congregation of a dozen persons; now their church accommodated 900 persons, and they often had 1000 crowded into it. Quite a number of new churches and mission stations had sprung up. Often they were placed in difficult positions owing to the migratory character of the settlers, but he believed there was a splendid future before their churches in the colony, which in a few years had increased its population sevenfold.

A Missionary Farewell.

THE departure of a large body of workers for Christian service in a foreign and distant land is always an event fitted to call forth the sympathy and interest of their fellow-believers.

Such an interesting occasion was that of Tuesday evening last week at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, when a goodly company came together to give a send-off to a large number of missionaries leaving for China in the closing months of this year, in connection with the China Inland Mission. It may be interesting to many readers throughout the country to give the

Those marked * are returning.

At the meeting of last week probably a small proportion of the outgoing friends were present, and of course only a few could find time to speak; but earnest prayer was made for all in petitions presented at different stages of the proceedings by Rev. J. J. Luce, Mr. B. Broomhall, and Mr. Albert Head. China itself and its rulers, surrounded at this juncture of national history by such difficult circumstances, were not forgotten in the prayers of these friends.

The chairman, Mr. VICTOR BUXTON, expressed much kindly interest in the work of the C.I.M., and also acknowledged the indebtedness of the C.M.S., of whose committee he is a member. He regarded the present national and political upheaval in China as affording a great opportunity of seeking to spread Gospel truth in that land.

Short addresses were given by five of the outgoing missionaries, and each utterance was of a stimulating and impressive character. The only speaker who could draw upon experience of foreign work was Rev. E. O. WILLIAMS, who is returning to China after furlough, having already spent some eight years in mission work there. Of course he was able to emphasise from personal knowledge the great spiritual destitution of the Chinese people and the need for many more messengers of the Cross. He spoke, too, of the deep importance of united intercessory prayer on the part of Christian friends at home, in order that the hands of isolated workers in the field might be sustained.

Two young City men, Mr. J. B. MARTIN and Mr. GORDON HARDING, going out for the first time, told how God's call had come to them, and how He had guided them in the time of waiting and preparation. Two ladies, Miss W. J. COXON and Miss M. DARROCH, related their experiences in the same line. The first said she had been led gladly to relinquish an art career for Gospel work in China. Her special message of exhortation was to any who might be desiring to make a great name in the world; the true wisdom was to put their future into God's hands and let Him choose their life work. Miss Darroch, whose broad Scotch accent and unusually fervid manner were quite refreshing, had experienced a long period of waiting before God set her free to go to China, but his time had now come, and she seemed to exult in the prospect before her. So, indeed, did all these young friends entering on the high calling of an ambassador of God to a heathen land.

Last of all came Rev. W. COOPER, deputy director of the mission in China. By the aid of a large map he unfolded to the audience, in very fitting and impressive words, the superlative claims of China on the attention and the practical sympathy of the home Churches. We shall be surprised if the meeting of last week does not in due time recruit the ranks of the C.I.M.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Conference in Copenhagen.

By Mdme. E. de Ramsay.

It is not often that we read anything in The Christian from Denmark, so much the more it ought to be appreciated if one has been happy enough to gather a few sweet-scented flowers from the Danish islands folded among the leaves of memory.

In July there was a large conference, long beforehand planned, in Denmark, for all who are actively engaged in work among our afflicted fellow-creatures—deaf and dumb, blind, crippled, epileptic, and weak-minded. It was the fourth conference of the kind for Scandinavia, and at each the numbers attending have been doubled; this year about 700 had given in their names from the four northern kingdoms—Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Finland.

In a handsome music-hall in Copenhagen the guests met. A beautiful cantata, with verses composed for the occasion, was sung, and an earnest clergyman of the Danish "Folk Kirke" prayed, pleading earnestly with God that the discussions might be carried on in a meek and quiet spirit. Divers opinions make themselves heard and a great blessing ensues to unfortunate fellow-creatures as methods were proposed, partly new, partly remoulded. The prayer was heard. During a whole week the Conference members met in sections several times a day, and once or twice a day all in the large hall, and nothing could be more pleasant and more harmonious than the discussions on all possible topics related to the object of the Conference—more help, light, benefit to the weak and deficient in any of our five senses.

Much hospitality was shown to the strangers in a simple and amiable way, and there were excursions daily planned to the various institutions in the capital or outside of it, for which Denmark merits special honour. In most of these efforts for abnormal children, the Danish people have generally preceded other nations. Epileptic homes have as yet been started only in Sweden, and at Wilhelmsro by the writer of these lines, who also prevailed upon friends in Stockholm to begin one in the suburbs of Sundbyberg. It was quoted as a sad fact that though thousands of epileptics, with all the sorrowful consequences of that awful illness, were to be found in the four kingdoms, only the two Swedish homes, with seventy-five children, provided some solace to the sufferers.

The Danish Royalties take a kindly interest in all that is done for the afflicted in their country, and also expressed their sympathy in the Conference. The Diet had voted a liberal sum of money to show hospitality to the strangers. The next Conference was fixed to meet in Stockholm, 1903.

Personally, the founder of Wilhelmsro had the honour to be considered as a jubilee member, having worked for fifty years among all kinds of afflicted children, and twenty-five at Wilhelmsro, continuing to this day in it. Of course, at seventy, one's days of work are almost past, but it has been given to the writer to rejoice in Wilhelmsro's future secured, Government having voted a yearly grant for its support.

Deacon Abraham's Work.

An English friend writes from Geog Tapa, Oroomiah, Persia:—"My heart aches at the sight of the poor refugees who call at the Orphanage. How I wish the funds would allow more children to be taken; some travel many days' journey in hope. I find everything is most economically managed at the Orphanage. The Deacon works hard, and has a splendid helpmeet in his wife Esther. The living and dress are simple; but, best of all, there is true devotion to the Lord Jesus.

"At present the Deacon has charge of Geog Tapa church, the pastor being away. There are fifty-five orphans, and some men employed in the fields, together with teachers, etc., make up seventy-two. The mission work of giving the Gospel to the daily callers is a good one. I understand that in the winter the yard is quite full of refugees. I trust we shall not have to send them empty away."

The Movement in France.

The anti-Protestant campaign continues in the French provinces of North Africa. The civil authorities do the work of Rome, and denounce the Protestant missionaries as the greatest enemies of the country.

If, on the one hand, there is this discouragement, on the other there are signs of awakening in Roman Catholic communities. M. Philippot, one of the ex-abbés whose movements we have from time to time recorded, recently visited the parishes of Jeantes and Plomion, in Aisne, where he officiated while in the Romish priesthood. Under the presidency of the mayor, he delivered an address in the school playground. The people gathered to the number of 250, and listened with much sympathy; in fact, they applauded his boldest statements on unfettered religion. In the course of his lecture he said:—

"The audacity of the priests is greater than ever. When they see God condescending to give peace and pardon to some trembling soul, rescuing that soul from misery and raising it to Himself, they hurry up with a 'Halt!' and say, 'Thou, Lord, reignest in the heavens; on earth it is we, the priests, who govern. Thou art but a constitutional ruler. If Thou wishest to make any decrees, and to have them valid or effective, they must be countersigned by thy ministers—and we are they! If Thou hast anything to say to the people, commit thy message to us; we will read it, we will explain it, we will interpret it; we will make Thee say just what we wish!'"

Needless to add, this scathing utterance was greatly cheered. The report says that all the employés of the parish church were present. It is also said that since M. Philippot's visit the church has been closed, the curé having left because no one attended upon his ministry.

Famine on the Persian Frontier.

In a letter from Oroomiah, Rev. B. W. Labaree, who has just concluded a tour in Turkey and Persia, gives some particulars of the condition of the Nestorians residing in the mountain country through which he passed. He says:—

"In the neighbourhood of Ravenduz, where we first entered Turkey, we found the people living on bread made out of barley and acorns ground together, and this in limited quantities. In the vast plain around Mosul we found bread twice the cost of what it is here. For three successive years, as the wheat and barley have headed out, an insect called the 'sinnic' has appeared in vast numbers and sucked out the milk of the soft kernels, leaving an empty hull. It has rivalled the locust in its destructiveness. We met immense caravans of donkeys going to Diarbekir, a distance of not less than ten days' travelling, in order to get grain for Mosul. This week I have received a letter from Mosul, from our church there, saying that owing to lack of rain and the presence in some districts of the above-mentioned insects, this year's harvest is again a failure. Many are selling their girls and boys to Moslems in Mosul that they themselves may live! Our brethren there ask most earnestly that we help them to alleviate this suffering. In Mardin I was told that crowds swarmed around the flour shops, but there was none to be sold. In Bothan the people were able to pull through the past winter with the aid of an unusual crop of acorns and juniper berries.

"Entering the mountains we found that the 'sinnic' had extended its ravages there, and not more than a dozen people in a large district had any wheat bread to eat, having lived on rice and the poorest of grain food, millet. Large numbers of the Bas and Jelu people go down to the plains every fall and work through the winter and spring as masons, blacksmiths, and basket weavers, but the stagnation in trade throughout Turkey for the past few years has prevented their earning anything, so that they return having barely paid their expenses. They are being shut up to their mountain homes for a living. Their valleys are so narrow and rugged that their fields are made with the greatest of difficulty. Some place on the mountain side is selected, and a wall of stone built on the lower side. Behind this, stone is filled in to a certain depth, for earth is too scarce; and then earth is scraped from various places, and thrown on the top of the stones, and the field is completed. Never is it a quarter of an acre in size, and seldom is it larger than a room. Here they plant the most prolific bearing cereals—maize, corn, rye, and varieties of millet. But seldom has a family enough fields to provide for its own wants, and even here, in the mountains, the 'sinnic' has found its way. To make matters worse, in some villages the Koords had carried off the sheep and the people had no milk. We sometimes had difficulty in getting food to eat ourselves. And as for the Government, it is forcing the people to pay up back taxes at an unjust rate.

"What the people have planted is not enough for the wants of the country, and that little is being rapidly eaten by the locusts, which are there in swarms—the ground was actually black with them in many places. In one village that I visited probably not more than three or four carpets could be found, everyone sleeping with grass for a bed and for a covering. Many women were so ragged that they could not leave their homes, and many children did I see out in the broiling sun with only a few rags around their loins. Many families have eaten nothing but herbs for weeks. It was not simply that grain was at famine prices, but there was none to be had. We are telling people from Gawer that under no circumstances are they to come here; if we have any help, we will send it to them. But we know that, as winter approaches, the people will flock here in spite of our statements."

Work among the Bheels.

Mr. Jai Bhai, of the Indian Christian Realm, writes:—"Eight months have passed by since we felt God direct our steps to the field which we have now entered. The Bheels of the North Konkan had for years been on our hearts, and at last an opportunity presented itself for us to take the Gospel to them. The three centres chosen for work, when the Lord should send workers, were Broach, Anklesvar, and the Rajpipla State. The last-named is the district in which we especially longed to tell of God's salvation, for in the native State of Rajpipla there has, to our knowledge, been no Christian work done; and, so far as we know, there is not a resident Christian in the State.

"In the city of Broach itself the missionaries of the Irish Presbyterian Mission have laboured for some years and have a successful work. With the city, however, we have little to do; our work lying entirely with the Bheels of the outlying villages. Anklesvar district, like the Rajpipla State, was, previous to our settling there, without a Christian worker. Mr. Isu Charan, who has done much pioneering work among the aboriginal tribes of Western India, first toured through the district in January of the present year. He was accompanied by an old Indian Christian friend; they travelled as Christian religious mendicants, and met with many difficulties. At length, however, the influence of their lives and works began to tell upon the people. The spirit of prayer and supplication was outpoured among the workers; and in March, three months after our arrival on the field, three or four Bheels surrendered their hearts and lives to the Saviour. Little by little this number grew, till there is now a little band of servants of Christ in this heretofore dark corner of the earth. The labourers who have been most used in this work are all Hindus, a converted Brahmin from Benares, an ex-Mohammedan from North India, and a faithful ex-Buddhist sister from Ceylon.

"We have now nine Bheels in our training institute, who will, we trust, at the expiration of their term of training (which will be for the least one year, and a longer period if possible), be a great blessing to their fellow-tribesmen. Six men, with their wives, of the Talaria caste, the other aboriginal tribe among whom we are working, have applied to come into training; but we have had to postpone taking them for lack of funds. We are now warmly welcomed by the people of many villages, and the village that at first so greatly oppressed us is now, perhaps, the most promising one we work. The headman of this village sent a party of his people to our training institute to report as to our work, etc. They came and spent a couple of days at the institute; and they returned to the headman with the most favourable of reports. All has been smooth sailing in that village since.

"Our great needs for this work are:—(1) Friends to support the six applicants for work above referred to; £8 will support a man and wife in training for twelve months. (2) £100 to purchase property for the permanent training institute, and for the general use of the Mission. (3) £150 to enable us to provide a hospital, there not being one for many miles round, to provide necessary medical outfit, and also to pay passages of two nurses to take charge. (4) The prayers of all God's children that the work may go on; that the spirituality of the converts may increase, and that the Holy Spirit may specially teach and inspire the Bheel brethren in our Training Institute. Communications may be addressed to the secretary in London, Mr. H. Page, 35, Tollington-road, N."

Christian Liberty in Saxony.

IN company with Dr. Baedeker, I have been on a visit to Dresden, to the Baptist congregation and their devoted pastor, Karl Mascher. We knew that our brethren were sorely tried by annoying hindrances, by the frequent imposition of fines, by the forced sale of their goods, and by threats of imprisonment. We had in our hands documents which made it plain that our suffering brethren were being treated unconstitutionally; that in cases where it had been possible to obtain the interposition of the civil courts, the decisions of the ecclesiastical authorities had been overruled. We knew that the troubles still continued. We sat on chairs in the pastor's modest home on which was the yellow seal of confiscation, and, looking round, saw other articles of furniture having the same seal, and to be carried off and sold to meet fines for various invented offences. The three principal offences were the singing of a hymn, the offering of audible prayers at a religious meeting, and the presence at the meeting of persons not formally separated from the State Church.

We were present at a lecture in the hall of the Baptist Church, for which formal permission had been granted by the police. In accordance with the terms of the certificate we dared neither sing nor pray. We saw two police detectives watching and taking notes, and we know that, while the terrible offences of praise and prayer were not committed, there were present some 150 persons, not declared dissenters from the Lutheran Church, for whose presence there a fine of fifty marks for every one might be imposed by the Lutheran authorities.

We read with our own eyes the latest judgments given in such cases—dated in August, and signed by the Minister of Worship, to whom appeal had been made against the action of the police. The Minister of Worship declares therein that the Baptists in Saxony are persons "without existence," and therefore without legal rights; that their assemblies are not meetings for "pious purposes," and that therefore no provisions as to liberty contained in the laws of the Kingdom of Saxony apply to them; that the Lutheran authorities are correct in refusing them recognition, and that the police have been just in their imposition of fines; that these fines cannot be remitted, and that the goods of the Baptists are rightly confiscated to pay them; and, finally, that non-payment of the fines will be visited with imprisonment. These decisions affect five churches, six assemblies not yet organised, and nearly 1000 persons in various parts of Royal Saxony.

We were able to take much counsel on these matters with men learned in Saxon law, ecclesiastical and civil. We waited on the Lord in prayer, and came to conclusions as to the steps needed to be taken in the immediate future. These steps will entail expense. It may be some lovers of truth and of civil and religious liberty will be willing to help herein. Any sums may be sent to Pastor Fuller Gooch, Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, S.E.; or to Dr. John Gritton, 131, Richmond-road, Hackney, London, N.E.

We found our Dresden brethren far from discouraged. The attendance increases at their services; there is a good spirit among the church members and among those who would become members could they obtain the certificate of nonconformity to the State Church, which must be signed by the Lutheran clergyman of their parish and countersigned by the police. Various obstacles are interposed to the issuing of this certificate of nonconformity, so that months—sometimes many months—are spent in obtaining it.

There are evidences of faithful preaching and believing hearing, and of the Holy Spirit of God being mighty in the exhibition to men of the crucified and risen Jesus.

We attended the anniversary of the church on Sunday, September 4, and took part in the most interesting services of the day. J. G.

Education in China.

DEAR SIR,—You are doubtless aware of the great opportunities in India for English education. It is only lately that such opportunities are opening in China, and serious persons, who look at the question with an open mind, will be glad to know that this method is a great auxiliary for influencing the natives towards the kingdom of Christ.

We observe an awakening of conscience in the pupils, although they need constant training. Although they have not been hurried into an open confession of Christ, yet they attend Christian services, and value the Scriptures and hymns. They acquire the knowledge and habit of prayer.

A striking change has been noted in the life of some of them; they exert a happy influence on young companions.

The news from Foochow, where Anglo-Chinese work has long been going on, is most encouraging; some of the students not only act as evangelists near at home, but even go as far as the province of Hunan to make known Christ, and this without any settled income. Likewise from Pekin news is that quite a number of students have entered the native ministry. From all these reasons we may well take courage, and the Lord's stewards may confidently help forward a work which at present is only borne by a few. I have just been reading of a native scholar who in the Imperial examinations obtained a degree because of his proficiency in the knowledge of the Ten Commandments. We are repeatedly hearing of mandarins quoting Scripture. There is every encouragement to open our hearts for the prosecution of all forms of work which the Master points out.—Yours faithfully,

Amoy. Jas. Sadler.

Movements in China.

THIS province (Chekiang) is one of the first that was opened to the Gospel in China. Ning-po, its chief port, was one of the first "open ports," and it has been one of the best centres of work in China. People in the home lands look on the map of China, and see Chekiang dotted all over with stations, and think that mission work must be about finished in this province. That is the way it struck me before I came to China. But the fact is that the province has only been touched slightly in spots, and one large prefecture, with its six large counties, is yet unopened.

In our district, which is one of the oldest mission districts of the China Inland Mission, there are three large counties, with about 5,600 square miles of territory, and having a population of about one million. Still, we have only two stations and five out-stations — seven little churches, with about two hundred members all together. Our working force consists of our seven missionaries, six native preachers, four native colporteurs, and four Biblewomen. But our work is prospering. New places are opening up, and new people are becoming interested in the Gospel.

Just now Chekiang province seems to be in quite a disturbed condition. In some places a house tax has been levied, also a tax on rice, fuel, and some other things that have not been taxed before, and the duty on opium has been largely increased, while the "li-kin" tax on native goods—the native customs—of this province has been turned over to the Imperial customs, under foreign supervision. All these causes uniting have caused the people to rise up in rebellion in several provinces. Shao-hsing, Wen-chow, and Ning-po have all had quite serious riots. But in none of these riots has any harm been done to the foreigners, not even any serious threats made against them; all seemed to be aimed at the Chinese officials. We do not know what the end may be, but we do know that God's work will go right on.

People attend our meetings and listen to the Gospel in a way they have not done before. I hear the same encouraging report from other parts of the province. The literati are giving more heed to the Gospel. These are good signs, I think.

Sunshine and Shadow in Malabar

IN a recent letter from Chombala, Malabar, Rev. J. L. Weissmann, of the Basle Missionary Society, says:—

"Our gracious Lord and Saviour has been granting us such a harvest of souls from the heathen, that our days have been too short to carry out al the new tasks which came along with the care of these persecuted souls. They have had to be instructed, and employment and maintenance found for them as well, the heathen refusing to give work to those who had turned their backs on their idols and received our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ.

"My present letter ought to have been full of glad tidings of all the goodness shown to me, but, instead of rejoicing, my lot is to weep. An awful disaster happened to me and my poor flock last Monday night. Torrents of rain falling, and the storm of the monsoon raging, the belfry of our new church was blown down, and along with it the front wall to which it was attached. Oh, what a day of sorrow and grief for us and our dear Christians, who, offering all they had, and giving often more than they could afford, exhausting their funds; yet they see no way to rebuild that which in one night has been ruined! We cannot ask our Home Committee for help, as they are in financial difficulties; nor can we ask the Malabar Christians, as they are all in distress, food being only obtained at famine prices. We can only look up to the Lord, whose mercy is revealed even when He chastises his own. Self-help being impossible, He may speak for us to some of our fellow-Christians, less afflicted, less poor than we are."

It seems that the sum of £100 will meet the cost of rebuilding the fallen walls—as Mr. Weissmann remarks, "a small sum for the rich, but with us an impossible amount." Communications regarding the undertaking may be sent to Miss Oliver, Mayfield, Hawick, N.B.

Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres.

THE work in the Boca continues under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, and is exerting a wider influence than ever. More than 300 boys are enrolled in the free day-school. The English day-school continues, though small in numbers, owing to the withdrawal of many English families in that portion of the city. English and Spanish Sunday-schools and religious services are well maintained. The undercurrent of hostility which formerly led to many attempts to disturb the Spanish services seems to have lost its force. The attendance is now large and respectful, and there are many witnesses to the power of the Gospel.

The work is now in charge of Mr. Ramon Blanco, a native Spaniard, converted in this city whilst employed in the Police service. He engaged in earnest efforts to acquire knowledge and to become useful in the service of the Mission. He is full of enthusiasm, highly respected in the Boca, and has carried the influence of the Gospel into many circles which had until recently been inaccessible. An instance of what I have stated is to be found in the change which has been effected in the character of at least one of the many socialistic and unbelieving societies that exist among the Italians of the Boca. Members of a society called the "Rosales" became so much interested in our Gospel work, and so exerted their influence upon other associates, that the society as a body invited the establishment of a Sunday-school and other religious services in their hall, and changed their regulations so as to exclude strong drink, gambling, and dancing from their social gatherings. It has become practically an Evangelical society, and makes a second centre of reunion, situated about three-quarters of a mile from the Boca Mission Hall.

Owing to changes in the street levels and the undertaking of a new system of drainage and water supply in the Boca, we have been obliged to incur an outlay equivalent to about £350. This was imposed upon us by the municipal authorities, and we were obliged to meet it. Any assistance coming to the Boca Mission at this time would be particularly welcome and helpful. Chas. W. Drees.

Christ and Childhood.

VI.—The Children's Service.

It is beautiful to know that Jesus loved the children, and called them to Himself, that He blessed them, healed them, and worked for them as much as He did for the greatest of the disciples, but there is something even more beautiful in the fact that Jesus accepted the children's service, that He found a place for their help in his life.

When Jesus had told his disciples to give the hungry five thousand something to eat, and they said that two hundred pennyworth (or five or six pounds worth of our money) would not be enough to buy bread for all, John vi. 7 tells us Andrew, Peter's brother, said to Jesus, "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes."

We know nothing about this boy, but we can almost see him with that little basket in which were the five small cobs of bread or flat oaten cakes, and the two fish that he may have caught in the lake and dried in the sun, somewhat smaller than whiting and rather larger than sardines, which formed a nice relish with the bread. How he came there, and who he was, we are not told; we have not even his name, but he was a boy in the right place, just where he was wanted. He was willing to be made use of; he was ready to help Jesus, and do all Christ asks.

Jesus said to the boy, "Bring them hither to me." So all that he had the lad gives to Christ; and there he stands with his empty basket wondering what Jesus will do. There is little more than a good meal for one or two. What will the Master do with the bread and fish? Will He keep them for Himself? It is when we give our all to Jesus, whether it be much or little—then He will use it for blessing others. For those small provisions Jesus gives thanks, and begins to break and give to his disciples, when lo! the little store seems to grow, and in Christ's hands it feeds the multitude until all are satisfied, even to the children in the crowd. None were forgotten, everyone had enough. And of the broken fragments and crumbs that remained over twelve baskets were filled, so that the disciples had more than enough for themselves. Doubtless one of the very baskets used was the lad's. It was filled again. He had lost nothing by giving his all to Jesus.

So the Saviour can still use the children's store. It may seem very small, but when He blesses the child's little it becomes much. If only the boys and girls give their all to Jesus for his service, his love and power will make of it a great harvest for good. There are many lads to-day who have not much of wealth or means, but if they empty all they have in heart and life for the Saviour's work they will become his servants, and may be great missionaries, teachers, and ministers for Him to the hungry world dying for the bread of life.

Once more we read, in Matt. xxi. 15, how Jesus accepted the children's ministry, and this time it is a service of praise. In the triumph on Palm Sunday, after Jesus had beheld the city and wept over it, when He had entered the temple, and the blind and lame came to Him to be healed for the last recorded time, before the day of triumph and of tears had closed, the children came and sang "Hosanna to the Son of David," chanting fragments of the great Hallel Psalm, as the crowd had done in the earlier part of the day, when Jesus came from Bethany to Jerusalem by the Mount of Olives. The sweet voices of the children in this evening hymn of praise must have been full of hope and comfort to the heart of Jesus.

The chief priests and scribes, when they saw the wonderful things He did, and heard the children singing, were sore displeased. The pathos of the scene and the psalm of love and praise from tender lips could not touch their hard hearts, for all they felt was hatred to Jesus and resentment to the children for their unconscious rebuke of the unbelief of the rulers, so they exclaimed, "Hearest Thou what these say?" And Jesus replied to them and said, "Yea; have ye never read (Ps. viii. 2) 'Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast Thou perfected praise.'" They were silenced, and had nothing more to say.

It was a bright close to that great and memorable day, when the children sang the benediction ere Jesus went back to Bethany. How much had passed since Jesus was a boy of twelve and had first come to his father's house? At his coming to earth the angels from heaven had sung; at his going from the temple it is the children of the earth who give Him praise. Not from the choir on high, but from children's lips went forth that evening hymn.

Her Secret.

Once in an Eastern palace wide
A little child sat weaving;
So patiently her task she plied
The men and women at her side
Flocked round her, almost grieving.

"How is it, little one," they said,
"You always work so cheer'ly?
You never seem to break your thread,
Or snarl or tangle it. Instead
Of working smooth and clearly,

"Our weaving gets so worn and soiled,
Our silks so frayed and broken;
For all we've fretted, wept, and toiled,
We know the lovely pattern's spoiled
Before the King has spoken."

"I only go and tell the King,"
She said, abashed and meekly;
"You know He said, 'In everything'"—
"Why, so do we!" they cried; "we bring Him all our troubles weekly!"

She turned her little head aside;
A moment let them wrangle;
"Ah, but," she softly then replied,
"I go and get the knot untied
At the first little tangle!"

O, little children—weavers all—
Our broidery we spangle
With many a tear that need not fall,
If on our King we would but call
At the first little tangle!—Selected.

Optional Lesson — Varied Talents.—Matt. xxv. 14-30.

Golden Text.—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

POINT out Christ's method of teaching by parable. Like windows in a building. To let in light upon subject. Reason why the common people heard Him gladly. They could understand what He said.

A talent—£340 (15).

Christ the Master going away from earth leaves his servants with certain powers. The use multiplies the powers. He will come again and demand an account.

A Servant of Christ (14).

This is one definition of a Christian. No one can be a true Christian unless he is a servant of Jesus.

Christ has a will concerning each one of us—young and old. Certain work He wishes us to do. Has given us the strength, brain and time to do it. We must use these powers under his guidance.

Differing Talents (xv. 19.)

(1) Different in quantity. Some five, some one. Christianity does not make the slow man clever, but it tells him to use the one talent he has; always danger of neglecting the one talent.

The world applauds the clever man until the tenth talent is brought into the field. But it despises the man with one talent. We are watched by kindlier eyes than those of the cold world.

Our frail memorial, if sincere,
Will not be scorned in heaven,
Tho' little noticed here.

2. Different in kind.—May be gold, or lands, or brains. So think out deep things about God and make men worship Him—or power to sympathise with those who suffer—or power to speak words of inspiration—or in cheerful disposition.

Illustration.—In a great engine, every wheel and pipe and screw has its special work to do. We do not blame the wheel because it cannot do the work of the screw or piston. So God does not expects us to do the work of other people—enough if we do our own.

Doing Nothing (24-26).

The condemnation of Christ fell on this man; not because he was a thief or a murderer, but because he had done nothing. Idleness is the enemy that ruins thousands. They do not abuse or misuse their powers. They simply do nothing with them. "Thou wicked and slothful servant."

How Talents Grow (21).

The blacksmith's arm grows big and strong by using it.

Runners, cyclists, and swimmers become adepts by practising—using their powers. So every spiritual and mental gift grows by using it.

The five become ten.

Why so many lads fail in life where one succeeds—same home, school, parents; but the one uses his powers while the others idle time and talent.

If we do not use them (28).

If we do not use our talents they are taken from us. If you do not learn to read when young, time comes when you cannot learn. If you do not practise to pray, time will come when you wish to pray but cannot. If you do not honour your parents now, time will come when you wish to have them back in this world to honour, but it is then too late. If you do not listen to the voice of God when He speaks, time will come when you will long for that voice but not be able to hear it.

Illustration.—Fishes in the caves of Kentucky have lived in the dark for so many generations that their eyes have disappeared. They cannot see if you bring them out to the light.

"Take therefore the talent from him, for from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Well Done.

God does not ask great things of us, but faithfulness in the small things of our daily life. His verdict is not "Much done," but "Well done!"

St. Giles's Christian Mission.

DURING twenty years of its much longer existence this Mission has provided 320,000 free breakfasts to discharged prisoners, and has supplied 80,000 ex-prisoners with tools, clothing, or employment. The whole of the guests had God's Word read and expounded to them while they were eating and drinking. These strange Gospel services have been marked by a quiet and decorum which would do credit to a regular place of worship. Results are not to be measured; they are with God, and eternity alone will reveal them.

This prison work, and the effort which deals so successfully with friendless juvenile offenders, are operations widely known and very generally commended; but the merciful and manifold ministry carried on among the poor, old and young, is no less helpful and encouraging. The wives and children of prisoners seem to lay one hand upon the "dangerous classes" and the other upon the poor but honest community: Those who love the offender have to prove how far-reaching is his punishment, and they suffer not only morally but physically. One has well said that "the men who go and visit these temporarily widowed wives and temporarily fatherless children are doing the very best of kindness. Not only are they showing charity, but they may also manage to keep the home together, and that may be the greatest incentive when the prisoner returns, to make him use well the help given him by this mission."

One of the most promising phases of the Mission is the fact that the spiritual need of everyone receiving assistance is thought of, and upon the whole of the work the blessing of God is sought, so that whether it be amongst adult ex-prisoners partaking of the free breakfast near the prison gates; amongst the sick and dying, in poor homes; amongst the Sunday-school scholars; amongst the inmates of the Women's Home; amongst the inmates of the Orphanage, or, in fact, wherever the Mission carries on its work at all; that work does not concern itself only with the bodies of the fallen and suffering, but strives to be, by God's blessing, of some benefit to the souls of men, women, and children.

The work has long been ably superintended by Mr. W. Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent's-square, W.C.

Doncaster Races.

FROM September 3 to 9 a campaign fraught with incidents of deepest interest was conducted at this great racing resort by sixteen evangelists of the Open-Air Mission, including Major Mackinlay (hon. secretary), Lieut. Kingscote, R.N., Sergeant Pullinger, Mr. B. Barry Wake, etc.

At the very first open-air service, on Saturday evening, there were signs of blessing. On Sunday several professedly yielded to Christ's call, as sounded forth in the large services held on the racecourse and in the town; and throughout the ensuing five days such signs multiplied, filling the hearts of the workers with gladness and causing much thanksgiving to God.

The outstanding feature of this great work was, perhaps, the deepening sense of awe which seemed to settle upon the people day by day. At the morning meeting in the Market-place (a resort of tipsters and the like), all the forenoon on the racecourse itself while the dense multitudes were assembling, and in the evening in the town, where two or three different stations were taken up), crowds of godless men, whose countenances all too sadly attested the sinfulness of their lives, listened with much attention to the earnest preaching of the Gospel and its sweet presentation in song.

Weeping eyes were often seen, penitent men were prayed with, "bookmakers" for a time forsook their avocation and stood quietly listening to the message of love, names and addresses of anxious ones were taken for further communication, and 60,000 specially published booklets and striking cards received eager reception.

The sight at the Obelisk, where the distribution of literature was carried on each afternoon, as the crowds returned from the course, will never be forgotten.

Dr. A. Christy Wilson, the head of the local organisation, placed his house at the disposal of the Mission as its headquarters during the week, and here each day two prayer-meetings were held, when the Spirit of God was poured out upon the workers. Many local helpers rallied nobly round the meetings, and several ladies and gentlemen, including the Rev. Canon Tebbutt, vicar of Doncaster, and Alderman J. F. Clark showed Christian hospitality to the evangelists.

Truly in these vast fields the need is great but the labourers are few! There is a great opportunity to go up against these great fortresses of evil in the name of the Lord, and "lift up a standard for the people." Will not Christian friends come forward in a generous spirit and double the income of the Mission forthwith?

The National Refuges.

A NOBLE motto—"The Children for God"—dominates all the operations of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, now entered upon their fifty-sixth year, and centering in the training ships "Arethusa" and "Chichester" as well as in farm schools and homes for boys and girls. From the commencement of the work, the founder of this society, the late Mr. William Williams, endeavoured to appoint only such workers as were in sympathy with efforts to bring the children into personal relationship with our Lord Jesus Christ; and he was equally particular on this point whether he was engaging a superintendent or a trade instructor. The committee at this time are following precisely the same lines.

Every day the Homes are the scenes of busy labourers preparing for the battle of life. The children, for the most part, spend half their time in school, which is under the supervision of the Education Department, and during the other half the boys are industrially employed as tailors, shoemakers, carpenters, farmers, gardeners, bakers, and band boys; while the girls are trained for domestic service, and the lads on the training ships for the Royal Navy or merchant service. The usefulness and even economy of the boys making and mending all clothes, repairing the buildings, assisting in the garden, etc., must be apparent, and being thereby taught to use their hands they are the better prepared for honest toil when the time arrives for their leaving the schools. The old adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is not lost sight of, and many are the efforts put forth to make the children's lives really happy and bright. These efforts, combined with plenty of wholesome fun, cause the children in after-life to regard the time spent in the homes with affectionate and pleasant remembrance.

Mr. H. Bristow Wallen is secretary; and the London Home and offices are at 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C. The best time to see the kind of applicants who seek admission, and when the process of sifting the cases take place, is between 11 and 12 o'clock each morning; but the Home is open for inspection at any hour of the day. In addition to the ever-recurring needs of the 840 children in the homes and ships, there is a debt of £5,500 upon the institutions.

Blessings for Prisoners.

FOR many years the Prison Mission has prayed for freedom in the prisons of our country to deal with prisoners for spiritual things, and at last prayer is answered. The authorities now give leave to several agencies to enter without reserve on the work of soul-healing in the great centres of criminal penal discipline. The new rules that are at work are distinctly given as blessings for these sinners from God.

The work that we have to do for discharged prison women is simplified and extended, and we believe that much more advantage will be granted to these sad and sorrowful beings. Their children are daily being delivered from the chains of crime, and set free in Christ to be his servants instead of Satan's. We who have laboured so many years in this service are now rejoicing in the new openings and powers to aid them. We and those who work with us ask for praise for these things. S. M.

The Church Army.—An anonymous donation of £500 and a donation of £200 from "A Lincoln Churchman" have been sent to the Church Army in aid of the society's work among the outcast and destitute in London and the provinces. The Army has acquired from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners a block of buildings in Westminster, where a branch of the society's work amongst women and girls will be carried on.

Obituary.

MR. CHATTERTON DIX.

On Friday last there passed away the author of three of the most popular hymns in modern collections. Mr. William Chatterton Dix was sixty-one years old, and died at Cheddar, in Somersetshire. His gift in hymn composition began to be exercised when he was quite young, and he had a great knowledge of anthology. Most people are familiar with Mr. Dix's hymn commencing "As with gladness men of old," sung so frequently during Epiphany to Kocher's tune, which he named "Dix," in compliment to the composer of the hymn. Then the hymn "Come unto Me, ye weary," is another which we owe to Mr. Dix. Both of the foregoing find a place in most hymn collections, A third hymn by Mr. Dix begins "To Thee, O Lord, our hearts we raise." He was not only a poet, but also a constant contributor to various religious periodicals.

REV. J. DOUGLAS WATTERS.

Many will hear with sorrow of the sudden and unexpected death of Rev. J. Douglas Watters, M.A., minister of the Presbyterian church in Windsor-place, Cardiff. He had been in bad health for a long time, but his friends hoped he would soon be able to resume work. A native of Paisley, Mr. Watters received his early education at Aberdeen, and, after a distinguished University career, became one of the most eloquent preachers connected with the English Presbyterian Church. He had travelled much, and gained a wide and practical knowledge of educational matters, not only in this country but on the Continent. The University of Wales and the college at Cardiff lose in him one of their warmest friends. Mr. Watters took an active part in opposing the College removal scheme. He was a witty speaker and a conscientious worker. It is largely owing to his efforts that the new church extension charge at Roath Park, Cardiff, has come into existence. His loss will be sincerely mourned by a large number of friends.

"PILGRIM" MORRISON.

Many workers all over Scotland, and in many parts of Ireland and the foreign field, will learn with sorrow of the death, at the early age of thirty-two years, of this brother, which took place at Port Stewart, Ireland, on the 8th inst. Twelve years ago the late J. M. Scroggie conducted meetings in Dunfermline, which young Morrison and a companion attended. The conversion of his companion at these meetings resulted in Morrison also deciding for Christ. He boldly took his stand for Jesus among his companions and work-fellows. Later on he received great blessing through meetings conducted by Mr. J. G. Govan, of the Faith Mission, and in 1888 joined the organisation as one of the first pilgrims or evangelists. He conducted many missions in various parts of Scotland and Ireland, where he was much used of God, especially delighting in open-air meetings and children's services. Our brother was not distinguished for learning, wisdom, or eloquence, but he was conspicuous for Christlike simplicity and holiness of character, with an earnest desire to win souls for Jesus. Five years ago his health gave way, but his interest and desire to further the work never abated. He passed peacefully away, the disease from which he suffered—consumption—having been very rapid in its later stages. There are many who will long remember him for his kindly, earnest, simple Christian character.

MR. MATTHEW HALL.

On Sept. 2 there peacefully entered into rest at Mill Hill Mr. M. Hall, at the ripe age of eighty-three. Until the last few months, when he was attacked by influenza, it might be said of him as of Moses, "His eye was not dim nor his natural force abated." For over sixty years he was a sincere and consistent Christian, one who recommended his religion by his life; his workpeople and friends loved and respected him. His early life was spent at Sidmouth, and here, though engaged in business closely all the week, he walked a distance of three miles and back each Sunday to superintend the Sunday-school at Newton Popplеford. His wife, formerly Miss Jane Evans, of Ottery St. Mary, was a true helpmeet to him, and their large family were trained in the best of all places, a loving Christian home. Several of them are now engaged in various departments of Christian work. Visitors at his house were always struck by the family prayers, where all the household assembled, and after the reverent reading of the Scriptures the head of the household offereda simple and earnest prayer. One felt that Mr. Hall was speaking out of a full heart to his heavenly Father, and many from that family altar went out strengthened for the battle of life. In their various homes in Sidmouth, London, Chepstow, Tunbridge Wells, and lately at Mill Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Hall were identified with the Christian work of the town, and by their hospitality and generosity did much to cheer others on the onward way.

Oxford Letter.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

THE Oxford and District Christian Endeavour Union held their fourth Summer Convention on Thursday at Woodstock. Upwards of two hundred delegates were present.

Principal Chavasse preached to a crowded congregation in Hannington Hall on Sunday week. His subject was "Influence," and he dwelt at length on the secret, the power, and the source of Christian influence. Speaking of the secret of Christian influence, he showed that it lay more in being than in doing.

The friends of the Wesleyan Chapel, Walton-street, welcomed their new pastor, Rev. John Pellon, from Ilfracombe, on Monday week. Rev. J. Hutton, superintendent of the circuit, occupied the chair. In a series of warm addresses Mr. Pellon was assured of the sympathy, prayers, and co-operation of the people among whom he had come to minister.

Rev. C. J. Casher, curate of St. Aldate's, was again noticed in the fair, and did a good business in the sale of books. It is well that amid so much that tends to shut out God from the thoughts, visitors should be reminded that they who live in pleasure are dead while they live. On Wednesday morning all that was visible where for two days there had been noise and excitement were the paper and refuse strewn about. What a picture of the emptiness of worldly pleasure. "It passeth away."

The Y.M.C.A.

A new building, at a cost of £4000, is to be erected at Crosstone, near Motherwell.

About forty members of the Nottingham Association have been camping at Mablethorpe.

The annual conference of the Manchester District will be held at Blackpool in October.

Chester now has one hundred and twenty-six members, and an interesting all-round work is being carried on.

In the North Midland District arrangements are being made for a series of simultaneous missions to men in several of the larger towns.

A second member of the Ashton-under-Lyne Association is going into the foreign mission field. He will be entirely supported by members of the Ashton branches of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s.

For the purpose of inaugurating the work of the forthcoming winter session, the district and travelling secretaries and other officers of the associations, in various parts of the country, were invited to meet together for conference at Exeter Hall on Friday morning. Sir George Williams occupied the chair, and there was a large gathering of general secretaries and hon. officers, who, after a season of prayer, discussed the arrangements for the work of the ensuing winter months. Great progress was shown to have been made in several districts, particularly Lancashire, the North Midland, the Midland, and the North and South Wales districts. The British Committee made preliminary arrangements for the Conference of British Associations in Dublin in June next. Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL.B., of Tralee, accepted the council's invitation to take up work for young men in Rangoon, as the council's representative through Burmah. The question was also considered of the development of work for boys amongst the English Associations. About one hundred and fifty members of the newly-formed Darwen Association were present on Saturday afternoon, September 3, at a garden party given by the president, Mr. T. P. Davies. Lord Kinnaird has promised to open the new rooms of the Association on November 5.

The Evangelistic Field.

Sergeant Pullinger hopes to be at Weybridge, Sunday, September 18.

Mr. Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, has for some weeks been conducting a Tent Mission in Stirling. The congregations' interest and power have grown from day to day, and there have been manifest signs of the Lord's presence in blessing to believers, and the awakening and conversion of the unsaved.

Mr. Malcolm Ferguson, evangelist of the Lanarkshire Christian Union, is at present conducting a Tent Mission at Cambuslang. He is being assisted by Sisters McKenzie and Telfer, and the meetings will continue till the end of September. The attendance is good and the interest and evident blessing are very cheering.

Mr. W. D. Dunn is having wonderful times of blessing in Dundee. Crowds are flocking to hear him, and many (says a correspondent) are finding the Saviour. We Christians here have not witnessed anything like it for years. Kindly pray for the fruits of this revival; also for our Christian conference, which is to be held next week.

Mr. J. J. Sims has concluded a fortnight's meetings in connection with the Railway Mission (Abbey Hill Branch), Edinburgh. Every afternoon Mr. Sims gave Bible readings, and there were special addresses to workers and young people. While there have not been the same evident signs of blessing as in previous missions, it is believed that there will yet be fruit found.

Mr. James Shields, of the Evangelisation Society, is at present engaged in a most successful tent mission at Rishton, near Blackburn. The attendances are good, and the cases of blessing many. Last Sunday afternoon and evening, with a view to helping the Christians, a convention was held, when addresses were delivered by Mr. Shields on the "Abiding Life"; by Rev. R. Railton (Wesleyan, Clayton-le-Moors), on "Soul-winning"; and by Rev. Hugh C. Wallace (of Westgate Congregational Church, Burnley), on "The Christian's Seven-fold Responsibility." The day's meetings were most helpful.

Mr. Charles Inglis, Carlisle, Oct. 2 to 14; Canning Town, Oct. 16 to 30; Liverpool, Nov. 1 to 14.

Holloway Ragged Schools and Mission.—A good work has been done for many years past in the Forster Board School, Hornsey-road, N. There is a Sunday afternoon school, attended by 140 children. The evening school for boys is carried on under much difficulty, owing to the scarcity of gentlemen teachers, and while the girls' evening school is more fortunate, additional help would be welcomed. On Monday evenings some thirty girls assemble to make garments for themselves and their friends, and a boys' club and gymnasium has been the means of old scholars renewing their acquaintance with the work, some being now quite men, and taking an interest in the younger attendants. Among other features is a well-sustained Band of Hope. Superintendent, Mr. Henry Jackson, 9, Dalmeny-road, Tufnell Park, N.

Educated women, she said, had to deal with and influence especially the upper and middle classes, as well as to leaven the great mass of Christian people, and all could use the talent of prayer. Mr. Tennyson Smith dwelt on the ideal which Christian people ought to have, of a Christian Church free from all connection with the liquor traffic, or with anything that caused suffering and degradation.

Funds are urgently needed to carry on this work. Mr. H. A. Maw, 4, Harrington-street, Liverpool, is hon. treasurer.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Many who attended the Keswick Convention will be glad to possess The Keswick Week, 1898, edited by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins (2s. nett. Marshall Bros.). Others also, who did not attend, will find pleasure and profit in the perusal of the many addresses that are reported at length in these clearly printed pages.

A monthly in every way opportune is The Beacon Fire: A Protestant periodical for the present crisis, edited by Rev. J. C. Wilcox, B.A., vicar of Shepscombe, Glos. The first number appeared in June, and it has been succeeded by others full of good things of their kind. That kind is the bold exposure of Ritualistic error and the uncompromising assertion of Evangelical truth. (1d. monthly. John Kensit.)

Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s interesting serial, Sacred Art, is now completed, and constitutes a deeply-interesting collection of pictures by eminent modern artists, illustrating the Bible narrative. Of course, artistic imagination has been allowed free scope, but that was inevitable. The latest part of The Queen's Empire illustrates the various methods of law and order throughout Her Majesty's dominions.

The annual volume of The Young Woman (Horace Marshall & Son) contains a really wonderful assortment of readable material for the delectation of intelligent young women. All their legitimate tastes and interests seem to be catered for in the matter of story, essay, travel, biography, friendly chat, and a host of other topics besides. The illustrations are quite up to date, and the magazine holds its own against all competitors.

The eleventh volume of The Christian Pictorial contains the weekly parts from March 3 to August 25. In its own field this paper stands alone. For reference the volumes are of great utility, while in village libraries and on the tables of reading rooms they cannot but be very popular. Rev. David Davies is to be complimented upon the success which has attended his efforts to supply us with an illustrated religious weekly. (4s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard.)

A useful contribution to a familiar discussion has been made by Mr. Duncan Graham in Is Natural Selection the Creator of Species? (6s. Digby, Long & Co.) The author shows himself familiar with modern theories, and able to indicate their logical issues. He maintains that the condition of the earth and its inhabitants cannot be explained by the action of physical forces, independent of support and direction from an intelligent power. He holds evolution by natural selection to be a delusion, and shows that as that much-vaunted process is a result and not an effective agency it can produce nothing. The very name "natural selection," or the survival of the fittest, implies that it is only organisms already in existence that continue to exist. All these points have been discussed before, but rarely with such clearness as Mr. Graham displays in this very readable book, which presents the Theistic argument with much cogency and force.

OUR LEADER'S LEGACY is a pamphlet of extracts from Mr. Gladstone's writings and speeches, compiled by G. W. E. Russell. (Elliot Stock.)

Dr. W. H. Brazil's booklet for boys, THE IMAGE OF A KING (Eikon Basilike), has been issued in a second edition. (4d. Marshall Bros.) It should be placed in the hands of intelligent lads; and as it is not too large for an ordinary envelope, it may easily be enclosed in a letter.

A new illustrated monthly is THE TRADE UNIONIST. Its scope is indicated by its name. There are fifty-two well-printed pages of varied matter interesting to the general reader, as well as to the special constituency to which the journal appeals. (3d. Ideal Publishing Co., 33, Paternoster-row.)

Mr. G. D. Shipley, well known for his work in the villages of our land, recommends tracts pointed in substance, out of the common as to shape, and distributed in envelopes addressed "To You." He has written a series of GOSPEL LETTERS, which may be had in small or large quantities from him at the Mission House, Marcham, Abingdon, Berks.

POPERY IN THE PRAYER BOOK: The Source of the So-called Catholic Revival. Considered in a letter to Revs. F. J. Chavasse, B.D., H. C. G. Moule, D.D., and C. H. Waller, D.D. A Remonstrance by Charles Stirling, M.A. (3d. C. J. Thynne.) A Protestant appeal to Evangelical leaders in the Church of England. The Protestant sincerity of the aged author is widely and deservedly recognised.

Dean Farrar, preaching in York Minster, said that among the many sources of anxiety for England and for the Church of England at this moment the greatest and most ominous was the widespread and, he feared, the growing indifference shown by the greater part of the laity to the most urgent needs of the Church.

The Bishop of Worcester has issued a circular to the Church people of Birmingham calling attention to a general Church mission to be held in that city early in November. He describes the religious condition of the city as "appalling," and pleads for the assistance of men of influence, and especially employers of labour, in making the coming mission successful.

The number of C.E. Zenana M.S. missionaries ready to go out to the mission-field this autumn is thirty-six. Of these eighteen are returning after furlough and eighteen are new missionaries lately accepted after probation and training. Every one of the seventy-two stations has appealed for reinforcements; yet one new worker to one in four missions only is all that the society is able to send.

The Church Missionary Van is welcomed everywhere. During the five months since the van was dedicated the evangelist and his helpers have visited twenty-seven parishes, have given eighteen addresses in church, thirty-one in day or Sunday-schools, sixty-six in the open air, and seventy-one at meetings, or 186 addresses in all. In this way nearly 12,000 persons have been reached, besides over 4000 children in the schools. The Bishop of Manchester has visited the van, and expressed his appreciation of the work.

On Wednesday last week the third anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. J. Beck at Little Waltham, was observed. The report of the year's work showed a net increase of fourteen members added to the church, and also increased attendances in the Sunday-school and the Bible-classes for men and women.

In connection with the approaching Autumnal Assembly of the Congregational Union, to be held at Halifax, October 10 to 14, arrangements are being made for a special express train to be run from London and Peterborough to Halifax for about half the usual third-class fare. The train will leave London late enough to enable those from the South Coast to make use of it. Mr. Henry Broadhurst, M.P., has promised to be one of the speakers.

The Council of the Young People's Union announce that the annual examinations will be conducted in the English churches of England and Wales on Tuesday, January 31, 1899. The names of successful candidates will be placed in three divisions. Every candidate obtaining 90 per cent. of the total marks will be entitled to a prize. Two special prizes will be awarded to the two most successful competitors who, in addition to undergoing the examination, have also sent in essays upon the Principles of the Reformation. All communications and inquiries to be addressed to Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A., of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Baptist.

Rev. Charles Davies (Cardiff) has been elected president of the Welsh Baptist Union.

Rev. W. Hogan, of Bristol College, has received a call to Corn Exchange church, Gloucester.

A correspondent writes very enthusiastically of the Saturday evening prayer meeting at Westbourne Grove chapel as being well attended, and most profitable.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., has accepted a renewed nomination to the secretaryship of the Baptist Union, and if elected by the Assembly at Nottingham this month he will probably enter upon the duties of the office in November.

A revival has occurred in connection with the Baptist cause in St. Helens. The stirring seems to have commenced among the soldiers of the garrison, several of whom, by the earnest efforts of Christian comrades, have been awakened to a new life.

The Young People's Missionary Association, whose purpose is to aid the Baptist Missionary Society, announces a special gathering in the Library, 19, Furnival-street, Holburn, on Tuesday next, Sept. 20, at 7.30. Leave is to be taken of Rev. W. J. Price, who, on returning to the scene of his former labours in India, vacates the position of secretary, and a welcome will be extended to Rev. R. Wright Hay, who succeeds to the secretaryship.

Methodist.

Baillie-street United Methodist Sunday-school, Rochdale, defrays the whole cost of the maintenance at Ning Po, China, of a native Biblewoman, who is doing much valued work.

The Primitive Methodists are to be congratulated on the genuine success which has attended their first year's effort in connection with the Working Lads' Institute at Whitechapel. Its income from all sources reached £701. No less than 312 lads have been enrolled as members.

The annual district-synods of the Wesleyan church were held last week, and at each of them arrangements were made for carrying on throughout the country during the autumn and winter a vigorous evangelistic campaign, with the view of trying to reach many of the unsaved and lead them to live for God.

Bearsted (Kent) magistrates have again convicted a Wesleyan local preacher for singing at an open-air service. The defendant was Mr. Jesse Norris, a well-known local preacher in Maidstone Circuit, and the person making the complaint was the landlord of the Ten Bells public-house, Leeds. A fine of £1 and 13s. costs was imposed.

Recently, with secrecy and haste, the Legislative Council of Jamaica passed a Bill to increase their income by multiplying the facilities for the sale of spirits. Led by Mrs. R. E. Aberorombie, widow of a Lancashire Methodist Free Church minister, a vigorous opposition was started. The Queen has declined to confirm the Bill, and so it has fallen through.

The Wesleyan Committee of Privileges is taking up the question of the formal recognition of Wesleyan ministers as chaplains in workhouses and gaols. The electoral disadvantages to which Wesleyan Methodist ministers are subject in consequence of the itinerancy is to receive further consideration, and such legal action is to be taken as will sooner or later remove these disadvantages.

At a meeting held to welcome Rev. G. Mackenzie Cobban to the Grosvenor-street Wesleyan circuit, Manchester, the following resolution was passed:—"That this meeting of Wesleyan Methodists of the Grosvenor-street circuit desires to express its deep concern at the attempt to introduce the playing of music in the public parks of this city on Sunday afternoons, and earnestly hopes that the Parks Committee will discountenance and discourage any such attempt."

Considerable interest is taken in the Conventions which Rev. H. Price Hughes, President of the Conference, proposes to hold during the autumn, winter, and spring. The proposed order is as follows:—Cardiff and Swansea, Sept. 25; Birmingham and Shrewsbury, Oct. 16; Manchester, Oct. 30; Nottingham and Derby, Nov. 13; Halifax and Bradford, Nov. 27; Liverpool, Dec. 11; the three London districts, Jan. 22; Bristol and Bath, Feb. 5; Cornwall, Feb. 19; Leeds, March 5; Newcastle-on-Tyne, March 19; York, April 2; Sheffield, April 16; Macclesfield, May 21.

The following completed returns, now for the first time made public, present in a condensed form the present numerical strength of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Great Britain and abroad:—In Great Britain, 442,248 members, 32,005 on trial, 2135 ministers; Irish Methodism, 27,180 members, 775 on trial, 238 ministers; Foreign Missions, 44,640 members, 11,167 on trial, 392 ministers; French Conference, 1770 members, 136 on trial, 43 ministers; South African Conference, 51,906 members, 23,544 on trial, 204 ministers; West Indian Conferences, 44,692 members, 3578 on trial, 100 ministers. Totals, 612,436 members, 71,205 on trial, 3112 ministers. The foregoing returns do not include the number of ministers and members in the Australasian Wesleyan Church and in the Wesleyan Church of Canada. Nor do the English membership returns include the 76,484 young persons enrolled in Junior Society classes.

Presbyterian.

Mr. Wm. Iniskelly, a licentiate of the Belfast Presbytery, has been ordained, and is about to go out to China as a missionary.

The late Principal Caird has left a considerable quantity of manuscript, which is being prepared for the press by his brother, the Master of Balliol.

The Regent-square congregation have commenced pulling down houses at the back of their church for the erection of their new mission premises, upon which £7000 will be expended. This sum was contributed by the congregation.

Dr. Cuyler's lame right hand makes writing not so easy as he could wish, and he is much away from home, preaching and delivering addresses. He begins his "fall campaign" of work with preaching at Princeton University, and delivering the address at the dedication of the new Presbyterian Theological Seminary buildings, at Richmond, Virginia.

A deeply interesting meeting was held last week in Regent-square Church to bid farewell to Rev. Alex. Connell, prior to his sailing from Liverpool for America, on his way to China. A sincere, tender, and affectionate personal regard for Mr. Connell and a deep-seated love for the work of foreign missions was the key-note of the meeting. Although somewhat indisposed, Dr. Dykes presided, and addressed the large congregation.

Salvation Army.

While in Adelaide Commandant Herbert Booth had friendly interviews with Sir Thomas F. Buxton, the Governor of South Australia.

Commander Booth-Tucker has sanctioned the taking over of Madison House, in Cincinnati, which hereafter will be run as a Salvation Army hotel.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, the General's eldest daughter, has been conducting a series of meetings in the principal hotels of Amsterdam and other important Dutch cities.

Captain Spicer, in charge of the Westminster corps, is serving a month's imprisonment for causing an obstruction by street singing outside the Barley Mow public-house, Horseferry-road, Westminster.

Preparations are already well in hand for a third Salvation campaign in the Australasian colonies, conducted by General Booth, who is expected to arrive in New Zealand on or about the 23rd of January next.

Brigadier Read, of Canada, who recently came to England for his health's sake, his wife remaining behind at Toronto in charge of the women's social work, died rather suddenly last week at a hydropathic establishment at Richmond.

Considerable success has attended the Army's efforts in the island of Barbadoes. Three corps are already established, and 400 soldiers and recruits enrolled. A branch of the Naval and Military League has been established. It is proposed to start rescue work.

A new barracks has been erected at Radawera, Ceylon—a notorious stronghold of Buddhism—erected by the villagers themselves. A friend in Bangalore, Madras, has placed a house at the disposal of the officers, rent free, during the hot season. Several ministers have opened the doors of their churches to the Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army expedition to the Klondyke, which consisted of six officers, met with a cordial reception on arrival at Dawson City, and immediately started meetings in the open-air. The city administrators have ceded a piece of ground, 100ft. square, on which a barracks is about to be erected. They have also granted a permit for the officers to hew wood within three miles of the city for the purpose of building.

A Yokohama weekly paper says: "The Salvation Army has worked a great change for the better in Yokohama, in the district formerly known as 'Bloodtown,' the paradise of loafers and loose characters. With gentle, but firm, indefatigable hands, the good men and good women of the Army have reclaimed one poor waif after the other, with but little outside assistance, and to-day the moral tone of 'Bloodtown,' through their untiring efforts, has been so much improved, that there is now no longer any justification for the term."

Fallen Asleep.

At Hackney, near Adelaide, Lady Colton, an ardent Methodist Sunday-school teacher and visitor, having almost attained the age of eighty.—Mr. Thomas Pratt, one of the oldest Primitive Methodists in the North of England, at Sunderland, aged eighty-four. He had been a local preacher for sixty years, and was one of a deputation of twelve, afterwards called the "Twelve Apostles," who went to London in 1844 to lay the grievances of miners before Parliament.—Mr. Wm. Sanders, of Leek, Staffs, at the age of ninety-four. He was a Primitive Methodist local preacher for about seventy years.—At the advanced age of ninety-four, Rev. Jno. Eyres, of Southsea, who had successfully filled Baptist pastorates in Gloucestershire, Suffolk, and Sussex, and was, later, chaplain of Kingston Cemetery, Portsmouth.—Rev. Hy. Kershaw, for the last forty years vicar of Greenhowhill, in the diocese of Ripon.—Rev. William Pascal Schaeffer, vicar of St. James's Church, at Selby, and a valued friend of the C.M.S., after a protracted and dangerous illness.—Rev. Chas. Ayliffe, for twenty-eight years pastor of St. Mary-street Baptist Church, Newport, Mon.—Mr. W. Chandler, farmer, for many years a member of Tacket-street Church, Ipswich.—Mrs. Sandwell, wife of Rev. G. H. Sandwell, of Leytonstone, who died at the age of fifty. At the funeral, which took place at Ilford, Rev. M. H. Le Pla officiated.—Mr. William Lane, a local preacher and prominent layman in Bristol district, and a worshipper at Whiteladies-road, Bristol, aged fifty-nine.—Mr. Thos. Witney, a sidesman and chapel trustee of Gold-street Church, Northampton. He was formerly superintendent of the telegraph depot at Northampton.—Mr. J. B. Clay, of Birmingham, at the age of seventy-three, an efficient class leader, valuable home mission worker, and local secretary of the Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association.—Mr. Jno. Davis, of Lavender-hill, S.W., an industrious worker in the Wesleyan Church at Queen's-road. When informed, a few days before he died, of his condition of health, he said to a friend, "The Lord's will be done."—Miss Elizabeth Etchells, at the ripe age of eighty-one years, daughter of the late Rev. Jas. Etchells, one of the early Methodist preachers.—Mr. W. C. Pashley, one of the most devoted sons of Birkenhead Methodism.—Rev. Thos. Coney, a well-known Army chaplain, who served throughout the Crimean War.—Lady Isham, known throughout Northamptonshire for her good works.—At Arbroath, N.B., Wm. Rollo-Banker, treasurer of Queen-street Congregational Church, and a helper in all good work.—At Airdrie, N.B., on the 8th inst., Hon. Sheriff Watt, of Lanarkshire, president of Town Mission and Airdrie Auxiliary of the Bible Society of Scotland.—At Glasgow, Mr. John Reid, aged fifty-two, inspector of postmen; a man of exemplary Christian character, and an effective public speaker and worker.

Italian Evangelical Publication Society.—The secretary, Rev. Odoardo Jalla, 51, Via Serragli, Florence, referring to some newly opened districts, says:—"To Montalto, in the province of Cosenza, which was the principal seat of the Waldensian colony destroyed by the Inquisition in 1560, we sent a supply of books for a circulating library; and we noted with interest many old Waldensian names among those of the readers. Many copies of our papers and tracts are sold weekly at Caltagirone, Sicily, and at Campobasso, in the Neapolitan State, where the Gospel can hardly be said to have ever been preached before. In order to attract the people, whom they formerly neglected, the Romanist clergy are invading every field of activity which has been opened up by the energy of Protestants. In these sad times for Italian hearts and finances, let the foreign friends of the people help us to spread the truth even more largely among them."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THERE are three conditions of growth, both physical and spiritual. They are nourishment, rest, and exercise. No creature can live without food ; without rest it cannot digest its food ; and without exercise it cannot make a right use of it. Without a true balance in the three functions, disease is sure to follow. In the spiritual sphere we would do well to remember this. We must feed on the heavenly manna of Divine truth and grace ; we must meditate and rest in the Divine love ; we must exercise "ourselves unto godliness" in the Divine service. Over-activity, passivity, and neglect of spiritual opportunities, are alike fatal to a full healthy Christian life. They who would "grow up into Him in all things, who is the Head," must seek to preserve these threefold dimensions of spiritual health and power.

An impartial student of English history, we should think, could find little fault with the following words from Cassell's "History of Protestantism" :—

With the dawn of the Reformation Great Britain commenced that splendid career of which her people are justly proud. She owes her greatness to the vivifying effects produced by that change, and her present position to freedom from superstition and the blighting effects of Romanism.

This, however, is too much for the "Catholic Truth Society" at Nottingham, which has entered a vigorous protest against the advertising of a work containing such a statement on the walls in that place, on the ground that it was an "insult to Catholics." So self-evident a statement is an insult to no one, for it is incontestably true, and if so it should be made as widely known as possible. When we consider the blighting effects of Romanism on every country under its dominant influence (witness Italy and Spain), and contrast the condition of Protestant countries throughout the world, it needs little knowledge of history to point the moral.

In a long article in The Nineteenth Century, Mr. W. S. Lilly, the Roman Catholic writer, makes some candid admissions in dealing with the question, "What was Primitive Christianity?" He acknowledges that there was little resemblance between the simple confraternity at Jerusalem and the spontaneous, unconstrained, and self-devoted communities into which the early Christians were constituted in the time of St. Paul, and the highly-organised Christianity of the Roman and other churches. He can only arrive at the Roman Church along the principle of the swift development of dogma, and the "more gradual evolution of polity." This adds another to the many testimonies wrung by the simple force of facts from the pen of the priestly party, that the New Testament model of the Church is something utterly alien from the artificial types of modern times. When this truth has had time to sink deep enough into the Christian conscience, it will make short work of many a loud-voiced claim to apostolic authority on the part of some of these churches.

Those who are perplexed as to the right principles of dispensing charity would do well to consider the example of the Good Samaritan. His kindness was spontaneous, unprejudiced, disinterested, immediate, and effectual. It overleaped the barrier of race and creed, answering the call of need in an alien and a stranger. He followed up his case till it was in the way of health and self-help again. It would be well if this model were followed by all who dispensed kindness to the needy. The charity of most is vague and impersonal ; it is spread over too wide an area to be effective in its results. If more pains were taken in testing such cases as are brought to our attention, and such as are deserving were followed out to the end at the cost of a little expenditure of time and trouble, there would be less room left for imposition and pretence, and many needy persons would be cheered and made strong for the battle of life again.

The murderous outrage in Crete will abridge somewhat more the power of the Turk to do anything of the kind in the future. Wrong-doing brings itself to an end ; one way or another it has to be dealt with. September may be the month for the Sultan's outrages to abound, but this time he made a mistake in attacking Englishmen, who are not used to such liberties being taken with them. His power will now probably be banished from an island it has cursed so long. There will be no need to use compulsion ; he only requires peremptory orders to go.

The new "Life of Bismarck," just published, gives some astonishing glimpses into the pettiness and meanness that marred the greatness of the German Kingmaker, and throws fresh light on the devious ways of diplomacy. The scene in which the infamous "Ems telegram" was concocted, which precipitated the Franco-Prussian war at a moment of profound peace, is described with terrible and cynical frankness. That it should be in the power of heartless statesmen thus to play fast and loose with the lives and fortunes of millions of people, and to send armies of obedient patriots callously to their doom, seems a dark mystery of evil. There is light on this problem only in one direction. It is the faith that the selfish and wicked designs of men are overruled by the King of kings and Lord of lords for ends undreamt of by themselves.

As the main facts in Dr. Busch's book filter through the press into the public mind, they will not only damage the great empire-builder in the opinion of men generally, but also deepen in thousands of minds the sense of distrust of public men which is so widely felt. Dr. Busch shows that in political affairs Bismarck was ready to lie to any extent for the supposed good of his country. Similarly he treated Geffcken's "Diary of the Emperor Frederick" as a forgery, though he believed it to be genuine. Yet this man could be gentle and winsome in private. He seems to have had, like too many men, one conscience for private life and another for public. But we cannot shirk our responsibility to God by any such device. It is a comfort to remember John Bright's words about our Queen—"She is the most perfectly truthful person I have ever met."

The message of the Emperor of Austria to his people in acknowledgment of the deep sympathy felt for him in his unspeakable trial is a model of simple faith and gratitude. Amid the "unmeasured griefs" by which he has been stricken, he says that the voice of his beloved people first brings balm to his heart.

While I humbly bow beneath the Divine dispensation which bears so heavily and inscrutably upon me, I must express my gratitude to Providence for the great good which is still spared to me, for the love and fealty of the millions who in the hour of sorrow surround me and mine.

These words, testifying as they do to the power of sympathy and affection to assuage the sorrows of kings on their thrones, equally with those of their humblest subjects, will touch a responsive chord in the hearts of all true men and women. Sorrow and bereavement make the whole world kin, and in Court and cottage we are dependent on the same sources of Divine consolation and human comfort. There is much that we can do for one another under the hand of trial. It should be our care not to forget the call to tender our help by bearing one another's burden, and so fulfilling the "law of Christ."

The suggestion of Sir Herbert Kitchener to raise a memorial of General Gordon in the shape of a Native Technical College at Khartoum, of an "undenominational" character, may be a wise movement ; but such remarks as these, which have appeared in the daily Press, strike a very different note : "Let us give the Soudan civilisation first—as Gordon would have given it—and then, when the ground has been torn up, we may, perhaps, find it ready for the seed of Christianity, and, in due time, even for the harvest." We more than doubt if General Gordon would have put civilisation first and Christianity second. At any rate, this reversal of the true order of things shows but scant knowledge of human nature and its ends. The first need of the emancipated Soudanese is Christian teaching. A wash of Western civilisation over a background of Mohammedanism would be a doubtful boon. The source of all that is noble and good in that civilisation is the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Militarism has seldom received a severer impeachment than in the current Review of Reviews, in an article by "Ouida" on the causes of the recent troubles in Italy. It is not of recent years that the iron has entered the soul of this people.

The torture of the Italian nation began with the thirst of its rulers to be classed amongst the great military and maritime Powers. This ambition in its costly and extravagant exactions and pretensions, and its absolute indifference to the sufferings which it creates, has ruined the peace and prosperity of the country, and entirely altered the conditions under which the kingdom of Italy was formed, and a monarchical government accepted by Garibaldi.

The detailed facts and arguments by which this position is upheld are terribly sad. Altogether they constitute the strongest commentary on the Czar's peace proposal that has yet been published. They involve the martyrdom of a nation on the altar of a Godless idea.

From Russia, the country with the largest army, came the suggestion of a conference in the interests of peace; from Italy comes the news that she and Argentina have agreed to the first unconditional arbitration treaty ever signed. The number of Italians in Argentina might, we believe, give that country the name of "Italy's daughter." While Great Britain and her daughter the United States have been talking for months past of such a treaty, and of setting the world an example, an example has been set them instead.

"I will make of thee a great nation." I will. We speak of princes and statesmen as if they made nations, and so they do—such as the nations are. They make combinations of men, binding them together by bonds of interest and policy, by pride and ambition and revenge. Their handiwork may be traced all through history in the ruins of nations who have ceased to be. Some of the great Powers of a few hundred years ago are only shadows of their former greatness; and some that are great to-day may soon begin to follow them. The permanence depends on character, and character rests safely only on God. For a nation to endure it must have something Divine in it, and the Divine must touch and sublimate all the rest. There must be faith in God among the peoples; there must be obedience to Divine law; and there must be the pursuit of a great ideal. Israel had these things as no other nation of old had them, and her vital force is not spent yet; indeed, it will be renewed and increased when she seeks them again.

One of the recurrent features of the Dreyfus scandal is the suggestion made that the forgeries and other questionable acts which have marked its course were committed by "superior orders," and that there the agents were, therefore, not morally responsible. This is a popular delusion with applications nearer home than in the French Army. Subordinates should never allow themselves to imagine that they are freed from blame for doing what is wrong simply because they are told to do so by their employers. Responsibility may be shared, but it cannot be divided. It is like an electric current which passes from one point to another without lessening its force at any particular spot. We must all, and we must each, give an account of ourselves to God. The man who allows himself knowingly to be used by another as an instrument of iniquity can never shirk his responsibility. His sin "remaineth."

Livingstone's grave in Central Africa is still unmarked by any monument save the great baobab tree on which his "boys" cut his name and the date of his death many years ago, and which is liable at any moment to be burnt down by bush fires. It is suggested that the various missionary societies should take the lead in remedying this strange omission. In addition to a stone monument, the memory of the great pioneer of Africa might well be perpetuated by the formation of a mission station within a reasonable distance of the spot; and the boys of England and Scotland are challenged with the responsibility of raising the amount requisite to start and maintain such a mission.

The Teaching of Christ's Touch.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE most casual reader of our Lord's earthly biography must notice how often He wrought some of his most wondrous works by a simple touch. He lays his hands upon sightless eyes, and the light breaks in; He puts his finger on deaf ears, and they begin to hear! What a sweet picture that is of the mothers who bring their little children to Him that "He should touch them"! Whether it was superstition or faith that prompted the act we know not; but the homeless, childless man of Nazareth took the darlings in his arms and blessed them.

Anyone might be willing to caress a sweet babe; but who would care or even dare to touch a loathsome leper whose very breath was deadly contagion? One of these wretched outcasts, with disease running riot over his horrid visage, approaches our Lord and kneels upon the ground. No wife or child or kinsman could give the poor wretch a kiss if he were dying. "If Thou wilt," he cries, "Thou canst make me clean." What a model prayer for us all! With a yearning of Divine pity, Jesus puts forth his clean, pure hand and touches the living putrefaction. In an instant the leprosy is gone; Christ's hand has opened all other hands to a hitherto detested outcast. Here is an object-lesson for us. Nay, it is a cluster of lessons well worth plucking from the vine.

It teaches, as in a symbol, the sublime truth of Christ's incarnation in order to reach our sin-polluted humanity. The Revised Version of the second chapter of the Hebrews tells us that "Verily not of the angels did He lay hold, but He taketh hold of the seed of Abraham." Did the contact defile his infinite purity? No; but the touch of his spotless divinity to our foul, sin-cursed nature, brought the first thrill of healthy, spiritual life we ever tasted. The wonderful Atonement was just the "bearing our sins in his own body on the tree." That contact redeemed us from hell. If Jesus had drawn back from it we must have sunk under the leprosy of sin to endless death.

Our Saviour's ministry of love is one of personal contact still. Faith, in turn, puts us into living contact with Him. His omnipotent love touches our hearts; our faith lays hold on Him. This defines faith as something much deeper and stronger than a mere opinion about Christ, or even a confidence in Christ; it is an act, the act of touching, grasping, holding, and uniting ourselves to the Blessed Lord of life. Jesus lays hold of us with such a prodigious and perennial grasp, that He says, "No man shall ever be able to pluck you out of My hand." My only guarantee of ever seeing heaven is in the almighty clutch of my Saviour's love. Because He lives, I shall live also. Living faith makes every true Christian a part of Jesus Christ as the branch is part of the vine. This is his own precious declaration, "Abide in Me, and ye shall bear much fruit."

What a gentleness there is in our loving Master's touch when He lays his hand on the sore, aching heart! He knows just where it hurts, and what balm to lay next the bleeding spot. In that poor creature that crouched at his feet and bathed them with her tears, the sore spot was the sense of her guilt. "Thy sins be forgiven thee," was the healing balm. My suffering friend, can't you trust that hand? It may have cast you down, but you may be sure that it will never cast you off. When his wisely loving hand uses the lancet or the pruning-knife, it is unfaltering love that holds the instrument. Not one cruel blow has our Saviour's hand ever yet given you or me; nor ever will.

But what a rebuke that touch of the leper gives to the hateful, selfish spirit of caste and pride! Shame on us that we are so willing to touch the jewelled hands of wealth, and to sit beside silks, and satins, and sealskins, and yet regard the ill-clad, ill-odoured outcasts as if they bred a contagion! The sin and the shame of too much of the professed Christianity of our day is that it is above touching the lepers. That gap left wide open between wealth and festering poverty, between culture and ignorance, between religion in broadcloth and sin in rags, is to-day the severest indictment that Christianity has to encounter.

The one only practical solution of the great burning problems of how to reach the neglected masses, and how to reform the drunkard, and how to rescue the harlot, and how to save the ragged children, and how to evangelise the heathenism of our huge cities, lies in two words—Christian Contact. The personal contact of practical piety, and self-sacrificing love with darkness, filth, and misery; that's the only remedy. Heart must touch heart. The strong, loving hand must not draw back from lifting the lepers from their deadly degradation. To praise the Salvation Army for their labours in the slums is cheap; but it is condemning. For unless the strong, rich, and favoured followers of Christ will let Him lead them right into the wretched regions where sin and sorrow are sweltering, they deny their Lord, and dishonour the very name of Christian. O, Blessed Healer of the lepers, touch Thou the hearts of thy disciples, and cure them of the leprosy of caste and pride and self-indulgence!

Convention at Inverness.

THE conveners of this gathering in connection with the Free Church must have been gratified by the cordial response on the part of ministerial brethren and the public generally. The meetings were attended by friends from all parts of the country, and the addresses were full of thoughtful earnestness. The speakers were, perhaps, the most representative men in the Free Church, and it is felt that no more important religious gathering has been held of late years in the North of Scotland.

The whole conference was remarkable for its enthusiasm, its spiritual tone, its able addresses, and suggestive discussions. The presence and speech of such men as Dr. Alexander Whyte, Principal Rainey, Principal Salmond, Principal Miller, Professor Lindsay, and Rev. John McNeill, among ecclesiastics; and Lord Overtoun, the Earl of Moray, Sir William Henderson, and other leading laymen, contributed greatly to the interest and success of the gathering.

Mr. McNeill was strongly in evidence, and his addresses were as usual full of pith, point, and vigour. The meetings have altogether exceeded expectations, and those who had the privilege of being present will long remember the spiritual atmosphere and activity which permeated the proceedings.

Any friends who desire to read full and excellent reports of the addresses should secure a copy of The Northern Weekly, of September 15, published in Dingwall, N.B., price one penny.

Parkhall Convention.—This convention for the deepening of spiritual life, arranged annually by Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone Learmonth, was held from September 14 to 16. The meetings, of which there were three held each day, have been attended by much blessing. Very many took advantage of the meetings, a large number coming from quite a distance to take part. The speakers were Dr. Handley Moule, Rev. J. J. Luce, Rev. G. Soltau, and Mr. Lyall.

By Rev. D. J. BURRELL, D.D.

CONFUCIANISM.

JUST outside the capital city of China stands an image, with a memorial tablet bearing this inscription, "Kung-foo-Tse—a king without a kingdom, yet reigning in hearts innumerable." The religion of the Chinese Empire, with its five hundred millions of people, is little more than a personal reverence for this illustrious man. He was superintendent of parks in the province of Lu, and, being brought into contact with much official corruption, was, as his biographer says, "frightened at what he saw." The times were out of joint; the Empire seemed hastening to its fall. King-Fut-se, or Confucius, stood forth saying, "I show you a more excellent way. It is foolish to speak of God and heaven and incomprehensible things. One thing we know: that is, present life and present duty. There is a region lying at our doors where each may put forth his best energies for the public good." It will be seen that his purpose was not to originate a religious system, but to reform the present order.

The sacred book is the "Analects of Confucius." Its central thought is the kingdom. Christ also spoke of a Kingdom; by which He meant the Kingdom of Truth and Righteousness, the Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of God. But the kingdom of which Confucius dreamed was of a far more material sort; it was the Chinese Empire. His "religion" is merely a system of civil economics. The Confucianist looks forward to no heaven; he dreams of no tabernacle descending from above in millennial glory.

The three duties pre-eminently set forth in the Analects are as follow:

1. Filial piety. The kingdom is regarded as a large family, in which the Emperor is father of all. The prime duty of every citizen is reverence for his political father; after that for civil functionaries; then for his father in the flesh; finally for all his ancestors. In no other country are the obligations that flow from the filial relation more thoroughly respected than in China. There is no sentiment in this, however; its object is the conservation of the State.

2. Veneration of learning. The scriptures of the Celestial Empire are a compilation of the wise sayings of the sages. These are purely secular. "When we know so little about life and its duties," said the great teachers, "how can we be expected to say anything about death and what comes after it?"

3. Reverence for the past. China has been at a standstill for twenty centuries. The old order changeth not. The ideas of the Chinese are musty and mildewed, and, like their faces, their houses and their junks, all made after one pattern. As to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" there is no voice, nor answer, nor any that regardeth. The word "salvation" was rubbed out of their vocabulary by Confucius. They are a race of materialists, dull, plodding, heedless of eternity as moles.

To be content's their natural desire,
They ask no angel's wings nor seraph's fire.

ISLAM.

The camel-driver of Mecca seems to have been at the outset a pure-minded and kindly-disposed dreamer of dreams; but in the year of the Hejira, A.D. 622, when he was driven out of his native city, his spirit was changed. As he issued from the gates of Mecca he unsheathed his sword, and became a red-handed sensualist. The call to prayer was mingled with the summons to the Holy War. No quarter must be given to unbelievers. "Fight against them," said the prophet, "until not one shall be left to oppose us, and the only religion shall be that of Allah, the true God."

He gathered his disciples about him and produced the Koran. It is regarded as more than an inspired book, being "the uncreated Word of God." The Angel Gabriel brought him the silken scroll on which it was inscribed, commanding him to read. He said: "I cannot read." Thereupon the angel shook him thrice, and lo! the inscription became as clear as light. He forthwith caused it to be transcribed on white stones, leather, palm leaves, the shoulder-blades of camels, and the breasts of men. The Koran consists of one hundred and fourteen surahs or chapters, each of which begins with the words, "In the name of the merciful and compassionate God."

The most succinct statement of Mohammedan belief is found in the Kalima or creed, which is as follows: "There is no god but God, and Mohammed is his prophet." The two propositions of this creed are called by Gibbon "The eternal truth and the eternal lie."

The eternal truth is this: "There is no god but God." It must be explained, however, that the god of Islam is the apotheosis of pure will. There is no love, mercy, or sympathy in him. He is called by ninety-nine names in the Koran, but "Father" is not among them. The closest relation which a believer can sustain to this god is expressed in Islam—that is, submission to the supreme will. Out of this conception grows the Moslem's belief in fate, or Kismet. All things being controlled by an infinite will, what is to be must be, and there is no resisting it. Hence the desperate valour of the Moslems in battle. The day of a man's death is inscribed on his forehead, and he can do nothing to avert it. The creation of the race is described as follows: Allah took into his hands a mass of clay, and dividing it into two equal portions he threw one half into hell, saying, "These to eternal fire and I care not"; and tossing the other upward, he added, "These to paradise and I care not." This is predestination with a vengeance.

The eternal lie is this: "And Mohammed is his prophet." The camel-driver of Mecca has come down through the centuries grasping a sword crimson with blood; he is attended on the one side by the master of the harem, on the other by the Arab slave-driver. Thus in spirit he leads the Moslem host to-day as they push their conquests downward from the northern coasts of Africa among the barbaric tribes. In this holy war the three historic evils of savagery are perpetuated—war, polygamy, slavery. Put over against this figure of the false prophet the Christ of Calvary, leading on his militant Church with no weapon save the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; and his word is ever: "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Indians in Natal.

BY the Indians in Natal I mean those who have come from India, or the descendants of those who came from that country some years ago. About forty years ago, when the sugar planters in this colony found it impossible to carry on their industry with the uncertain labour of the natives (Kaffirs) found here, they, with the help of the Government, began to import labourers from Madras and Calcutta. From that time there has been a steady demand for them, not only from sugar planters, but from tea-growers, farmers, and others.

According to the last report of the Indian Immigration Department, 54,000 have been thus brought into the colony. Upon their arrival they are indentured for five years, during which period they receive a fixed wage and allowance of food, the number of hours of work per day being stated in the agreement made. At the expiration of this period they are free. After the lapse of another five years, if during that time they have not gone out of the colony, they may have a free passage to return to India. When these labourers become free some will continue to work for the same employer, others will rent or buy land on which they build their grass huts and cultivate principally maize, or, as it is called in the colony, mealies. A large acreage of land in the colony is thus taken up. Many free men also become cooks, waiters, drivers, and, near the larger towns, grow and sell vegetables.

With the incoming of the Indian labourer there have also arrived a large number of Indian traders, commonly called Arabs, but in reality they are from the Bombay Presidency, and speak the Gujerat language. The labourers, whether indentured or free, are commonly called Coolies, but the term in many cases is not appropriate, as it means really a man who works for hire, and those to whom the term does not properly belong resent the use of it to them as an insult. Several languages are spoken by these Indians, the principal being Hindi, Tamil, Telugu, and Gujerati. Comparatively few can read, as most of them belong to the poorer classes in India, and many are pariahs who are of the lowest caste or of no caste at all. There are a few Christians among them, but most of those who confess they are such are Roman Catholics.

As might be supposed, these Indians are, morally, very low. Believing as they do that their gods are guilty of lying, theft, immorality, and other sins, it is not matter for surprise that the worshippers of such gods should be guilty of the same. A few temples, mostly unpretentious structures, are to be found, principally on the estates. The rites of their heathen religion are carried out in some cases, but the Mohurrum festival, which is held once a year, is the great event. Then, for two or three days, the labourers have a holiday, and there is a grand display of pagodas and beating of tom-toms.

There are thirty schools for Indian children in the colony, some of them maintained by the Government, but most are aided by Government grants and managed by ministers of various churches. Considering the large number of the Indians now residing here, but little is done for their spiritual welfare. The Anglican Church has one European minister, a part of whose labours are for them. They have also two Indian ministers or catechists in the two principal towns. Two ladies in connection with the S.A. General Mission have studied one of the Indian languages for a year or two with a view to working among them and visiting in their neighbourhood, besides keeping a day school for children.

The Wesleyans have had a mission among them for more than thirty years. The writer is the superintendent of that mission. Gradually it has succeeded in establishing six centres, where Christians and other Indians gather together for worship and religious meetings. Four of the schools already mentioned are connected with this mission, and are doing good work by bringing the Indian children under religious instruction. One catechist is employed, but there is room and need for many more. £60 a year would suffice to maintain a catechist. I must not omit to mention the acceptance this year of an Indian as a minister on probation at Pietermaritzburg. He is doing good work as a teacher and preacher.

The Prophetic Outlook.

By Dr. NATHANIEL WEST.*

THE causes of the vast "military Christendom of the Nineteenth Century" are familiar to all: the advance of science in destructive agencies, mutual distrust of the nations, their rivalries and jealousies, treachery and breach of treaties, balance of power, the peace of Europe, enormous increase of wealth, expansion of commerce, the fact that resistless power knows no moral law, the ambition of Europe to divide the non-Christian nations, partition Asia and Africa, and control the mines and markets of the world, lust for supremacy, want of righteousness, the discontent of the masses, the increase of unbelief and crime, and the corruption of Gentile politics and power.

Add to these the apprehension of a collision between the East and West, and the coming struggle with Islam, Judaism, and each other. The prelude to that will be the apparent harmony of the "Powers" of the world for a period of time—the "silence for the space of half an hour in heaven," the "four angels holding back the winds," the solemn hush when the air is breathless and the leaves are motionless; then the thunder-burst of judgment! At such a time Israel's claims will come up for settlement, such as Europe, Asia, and Africa cannot make.

Prepare war! Come up to the Valley of Decision. It is the "Eastern Question." It was the burning question when Joel spoke, 900 B.C., the burning question now, and now, as then, the nations are waiting the order to march! It is an old question. Its antiquity remounts beyond the days of Chedorlaomer and Abraham. It existed before Russia, England, France, or Turkey was born, before ever Constantinople, Rome, Alexandria, or London had a name. It means the conflict of civilisations—a conflict governed by "the ever-recurring law of history," viz., invasion at stated intervals from East to West, and reversely, till at last the whole world is involved. It was the question that sank the Persian empire and brought to Greece her national existence and her glory; the question on which a Pericles and a Demosthenes exhausted their oratory, and where a Cicero stood in the majesty of eloquence, a Cæsar in the splendour of arms; the question for Antiochus Epiphanes, the Huns and the Mongols, the Tatars, Islam!—in every case the "Holy Land" its centre.

The Middle Age saw all Europe precipitate itself on Palestine, only to be hurled back by the Moslem after three hundred years of war. Turn whatever way, it is identified with the fortunes of the Jews. Deeper and broader interests than those of England, France, Russia, Austria, Germany, Greece, Turkey, India, China, and Japan in the oceans, seas, waterways, markets, and mines of the world, are involved—the interests of Israel and of the kingdom of God. The cry of the muezzin sounds daily over two cities of universal fame, Jerusalem and Constantinople, where once the Religion of Jehovah and the Religion of Christ ruled supreme, and the Imaum's prayer to Allah ever ascends, "O, Allah, destroy the infidels, defile their abodes, and give their women, children, friends, and wealth 'as booty to the Moslem!'" All this with the "consent" and "concert" of the so-called "Christian Powers!" How can the "kingdom" come apart from a judgment day and the decision of the Eastern Question?

That gifted historian, J. von Müller, has not said in vain, "No thoughtful man can read history, or look upon the face of Christendom, and not be impressed with the conviction that the same law of righteousness that brought the ancient empires to their end must prevail at last against the empires, and laws, and kingdoms now existing." Nemesis must come. And, say what men may, the battle opens in the same old centre, the Ægean Sea, and the relation of the Holy Land and Israel, geographically and politically, as well as religiously, must assert itself as before, the more the "warfare great" approaches its end. Nor is there anything in international politics anywhere that does not lead to this centre, even as the Roman roads all led to the Golden Milestone of the Forum.

Suggestive Readings.

SATAN.

AS the Holy Spirit has been sometimes spoken of as an influence and not as a person, so the old serpent, the devil and Satan, is spoken of as an influence, and his personality denied. One cause of this may be that even evangelical teachers in the Church of Christ, while professing to hold Satan's existence and evil activity as a doctrine, leave him out of their teaching and leave the people in ignorance of his devices.

This will at once be manifest if we compare the important position and the frequent mention accorded to the enemy in the New Testament, with the feeble and infrequent warnings against him, not to say the actual ignoring or denial of his existence, in much of the teaching of the day.

Yet the Son of God was never unmindful that He was manifested for this cause, that He might destroy the works of the devil. The eye of the Captain of our Salvation was never off the enemy; the eye of the enemy was never off Him.

The dragon sought by the sword of Herod to destroy the Man Child as soon as He should be born. All heathendom worshipped the male, and Israel was infected with the same obscene idolatry (Ezek. xvi. 17, mar.). The Man Child, caught up to God and to his throne, was the Divine reply. This is the true male, worthy of all worship—"that all should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father." "And let all the angels of God worship Him."

As soon as his manhood was matured, when He began to be about thirty years of age, having proved Himself without blemish and without spot, He was set apart at his baptism for the work which He came to accomplish, to glorify God and to save sinners, by destroying the works of the devil.

Therefore, before He could go about doing good, healing all that were oppressed of the devil, He must prove Himself in personal conflict mightier than the foe. The Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness to be tempted (tested) of the devil. "In all points like as we are, yet without sin"—in body, soul, and spirit; "wherefore He is able also to succour them that are tempted."

Then the devil leaves Him for a season; but when he returns, "the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in Me."

When the seventy return with joy, saying, "Even the demons are subject unto us in thy name," He exclaims, "I beheld Satan like lightning fall from heaven." He foresees the issue of his death, resurrection, and ascension, in the casting out of the accuser. He gives his disciples authority over all the power of the enemy.

When the woman who could in no wise lift up herself comes to be healed, He does not describe her as suffering from curvature of the spine, but as a daughter of Abraham whom Satan hath bound these eighteen years.

In the parables it is Satan who catches away the seed. The tares are the children of the wicked one. The evil spirit goes out of a man, and returns with seven other spirits more wicked than himself.

When He speaks of his decease, and Peter rebukes Him with "Pity Thyself, Lord, this shall not be unto Thee," He sees the enemy through Peter, and says, "Get thee behind Me, Satan." And He showed his watchful care and his ceaseless intercession for his people: "Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not."

The disciple who leans upon his bosom, and sees most deeply into the secret heart of things, shows that hypocrisy and cruelty were born in the Pharisees from beneath: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning....he is a liar and the father of it."

When the Greeks come, saying, "Sir, we would see Jesus," He exclaims, "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out."

It is the devil who puts it into the heart of Judas to betray Him, and then enters into him and impels him to the shameful deed. And Jesus says, "This is your hour and the power of darkness."

We pass into the Acts and find the Apostles speaking as their Lord had done. It was Satan who put it into the heart of Ananias and his wife to lie unto the Holy Ghost.

The apostle encourages the Romans with the assurance that God shall bruise Satan under their feet shortly.

In the Epistles to the Corinthians we have references to Satan—as the tempter; as transformed into an angel of light; as buffeting the Apostle with the thorn in the flesh; as an enemy of whose devices we are not ignorant; as the god of this world, who blinds the minds of those who believe not; as the serpent who beguiled Eve in his craftiness. Here the Apostle delivers one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus; as in the Epistle to Timothy he delivers another to Satan that he may learn not to blaspheme.

The Ephesians are warned of the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; to take the shield of faith wherewith to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one; not to give place to the devil; to put on the whole armour of God, that they may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; for we wrestle not against flesh and blood [as Israel did when they entered Canaan], but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this age, against wicked spirits in heavenly places. British Jews' Society.—The treasurership of this society has been kindly assumed by Mr. Robert Greer. As we recently reported, the Society is in debt to the extent of £900, and in the hope of clearing this embarrassment out of the way of the work, Mr. Greer has offered £100 on condition that eight other donors of a like amount come forward. Already one friend has responded to the challenge, which will, it is hoped, be completely met by supporters of Jewish mission work.

"Judas, which Betrayed Him."

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ON the Wednesday evening before our Lord died, he supped with his disciples in Bethany at the House of Simon. Lazarus was there, and his sisters, Martha, who served, and Mary, who anointed Him beforehand for his burying. The Master's reception of this act of love, and his rebuke of the parsimony which sought to check all such manifestations of devotion, exasperated Judas beyond all bounds; so, after supper, when Jesus and the rest had retired to their humble lodgment, he crossed the intervening valleys and returned by the moonlight to Jerusalem.

At that untimely hour the Sanhedrim may have been still in session, plotting to destroy Jesus. At any rate, the chief priests and captains were quickly summoned. Judas may have been in communication with some of them before; but, in any case, he met with a glad welcome. They were glad, and covenanted to give him money.

In the word, communed with them, used by the evangelist Luke, it is suggested that there was a certain amount of bargaining and haggling before the sum was fixed. Perhaps he wanted more, and they offered less, and at last he was induced to take less than he had hoped, but more than they had offered; and the price of betrayal was fixed at thirty pieces of silver, about £8, the price of a slave. From that moment he sought opportunity to betray Him unto them.

At the Passover Supper provided on the next day by Peter and John in the upper room, Judas must have reclined on the Lord's left, and John upon his right, so that the beloved disciple could lean back his head on the bosom of his Friend. When all were settled, Jesus exclaimed, with a sigh of innermost satisfaction, "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer"; and as He uttered the words, Judas must have felt a thrill passing through his nature, as he realised more clearly than any around that table what was approaching. Evidently, then, the Master had guessed what was being prepared for Him! Did He also know the share that He had had in preparing it? In any case, it was clear that, so far from resisting, He was prepared to suffer. Apparently, He would not take the opportunity of asserting his claims, but would allow events to take their course, yielding Himself to the will of his foes!

When He had given thanks, the Lord passed round the first cup; then followed the washing of the disciples' feet, in the midst of which He looked sorrowfully towards Judas, exclaiming, "Ye are clean, but not all"; for He knew from the first who would betray Him. It was with a strange blending of awe and wonder that the little group saw the dark cloud of anguish gather and rest on the beloved face when, on resuming his place, He was troubled in the spirit, and testified, and said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray Me." The disciples looked at one another, doubting of whom He spoke, and Peter beckoned to John to ask. But Judas knew. And when He went on to say, "The Son of Man goeth, even as it was written of Him; but woe unto that man through whom the Son of Man is betrayed! good were it for that man, even if he had not been born"—again Judas' heart smote him. It may be that he asked himself whether he might not even now draw back.

For three years he had played his part so well that, in spite of his constant pilfering from the bag which held the slender resources of the little band, no one suspected him. His fellow-disciples might contend for the first places at the table, but all felt that Judas, at any rate, had a prescriptive right to sit near Jesus. All around, in sorrowful tones, the question passed, "Lord, is it I?" Each, conscious of the unfathomed evil of his own nature, thought himself more likely to be the traitor than that the admirable Judas should do the deed. It was terrible to know that the Shepherd would be smitten, and the flock scattered; but more, that the Master would be betrayed by the inner circle of his friends! But there seemed no reason for challenging his announcement, backed as it was by a quotation from a familiar Psalm, "He that dippeth his hand with Me in the dish, the same shall betray Me." From these words also it was evident that the traitor must be one of two or three; for only these could reach the common dish in which Jesus dipped his food.

It became, therefore, more and more clear to Judas, that the Master knew perfectly well all that had transpired, and he said to himself, "If He knows so much, it is almost certain that He knows all." Therefore, partly to disarm any suspicions that might be suggested to the others, if he did not take up their question, partly because he felt that probably there was nothing to be gained by maintaining his disguise before Jesus, and being withal feverishly anxious to know how much of his plan was discovered, he asked, adopting the colder title Rabbi, rather than that of Lord, as employed by the others, Rabbi, is it I? Probably the question was asked under his breath, and that Jesus replied in the same tone, "Thou hast said."

Immediately the thoughts of Judas sprang back to the foot-washing, and all the other marks of extraordinary tenderness with which Jesus had treated him. At the time he had thought, "He would not act like this if He knew all." Now, however, he realised that Jesus had acted in the full knowledge of all that had passed and was passing in his heart. It must have struck him as extraordinary that the Master should continue to treat him thus when He had read the whole dark secret. Why did He not unmask and expose him? Why not banish him from his company? Why count him still on speaking terms? Not till afterwards was he aware of Jesus' motive, nor did he detect the loving purpose which was laying siege to his stony heart as though to turn him from his evil purpose before it was too late.

Once more the Lord made an effort to prove to him that though He knew all He loved him still, even to the end. It was the Jewish custom for one to dip a morsel in the common dish and pass it to another in token of special affection. So when He had dipped the sop, Jesus took and gave it Judas, the son of Simon. He had previously answered John's whispered question, "Lord, who is it?" which had been suggested by a sign from Peter, by saying, "He it is to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped it." But He did not give the token of love merely as a sign to John and Peter, but because He desired to assure Judas that, notwithstanding his perfect knowledge, his heart was full of tender affection.

But when the sun strikes on a fœtid pond, its rays, beneath which all creation rejoices, bring out the repulsive odours that otherwise had slept undiscovered; so the love of God is ever a savour of life unto life or of death unto death, and the very fervour of Christ's love seems to have driven Judas almost to madness. Shutting his heart against the Saviour, he opened it to Satan, who was waiting his opportunity. "After the sop, then Satan entered into him." Instantly the Master saw the change, and knew that He could do nothing more to save his disciple from the pit which he had digged for himself. Nothing could be gained by further delay. Jesus therefore said unto him, "That thou doest do quickly."

So carefully had the Lord concealed his knowledge of Judas' real character that none of those who sat at table guessed the real significance and purport of his words. For some thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus said unto him, Buy what things we have need of for the feast; or that he should give something to the poor. Only John, and perhaps Peter, had the slightest suspicion of his possible errand. The sacred narrative adds significantly, "He then having received the sop, went out straightway, and it was night"; as though a black pall of darkness were a befitting symbol of the blackness of darkness that was enveloping his soul—a night broken only by one star, when Jesus once more in the garden sought to arrest him with the words, "Friend, to what a deed thou art come! Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" But that lone star was soon obscured. The cloud-wreath hastened to conceal it. Headlong and precipitate over every obstacle, he rushed to his doom, until his career was consummated in the despairing act which the Evangelist so solemnly records.

The specified fee was no doubt paid to Judas, on his delivery of Jesus into the hands of the High Priest. As soon as the great doors closed behind the arresting band, Judas went to some inner pay-office, claimed his money, and then waited in the shadow to see what befel. Perhaps he met John; and if so, avoided him. Perhaps he heard Peter deny the Lord with oaths, and congratulated himself that there was not much to choose between them. But for the most part, his mind was absorbed in what was transpiring. He beheld the shameful injustice and inhumanity of the trial. Though he had kissed his Master's face, his soul winced from the blows and spittle that befel it. Perhaps he had entertained some lingering hope and expectation that when the worse came to the worst the Master would use on his own behalf the power He had so often used for others. But if that thought had lodged in his mind, the dream was terribly dissipated. "He saw that He was condemned."

Then the full significance of his sin burst upon him. The veil fell from his eyes, and he stood face to face with his crime in all its naked horror. His ingratitude, his treachery, his petty pilfering, his resistance of a love which the strong waters of death could not extinguish. And the money scorched his hand. A wild and haggard man, he made his way into the presence of the chief priests and scribes, as they were congratulating themselves on the success of their plot. There was despair on his face, a piercing note in his voice, anguish in his soul; the flames of hell were already consuming him, the thirst of the bottomless pit already parching his lips; his hand convulsively clutched the thirty pieces of silver.

"I have sinned," he cried. "I have sinned. He whom you have condemned is innocent; take back your money, only let Him go free; and oh, relieve me, ye priests, accustomed to deal with burdened hearts, relieve me of this intolerable pain."

But they said, with a gleam as of cold steel, "What is that to us? That is your business. You made your bargain, and you must stand to it: see thou to it."

He knew that it was useless to parley with them. That icy sarcasm, that haughty indifference told him how man must ever regard his miserable act. He had already refused the love of God, and dare not expect anything more from it. He foresaw how coming ages would spurn and abhor him. There seemed, therefore, nothing better than to leap into the awful abyss of suicide. It could bring nothing worse than he was suffering. Oh, if he had only dared to believe in the love of God, and had fallen even then at the feet of Jesus, he might have become a pillar in his temple, and an apostle of the Church. But he dared not think that there could be mercy for such as he was. He passes out into the morning air, the most wretched of men, shrinks away into some lonely spot, puts a rope around his neck, and dies.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, September 25.

"The world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."—1 John ii. 17.

THE world stands for the entire system of human interests by which we are surrounded. It does not refer to what God made by his creative fiat and moulding hands; but to the shows, fashions, and pursuits of men. It is used here in the sense in which the devil took Jesus into an exceeding high mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, and said, "It hath been delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will, I give it."

The word used of its evanescence is a remarkably interesting one. It is that employed of the rapid change in some scenic display or performance. A moment ago the stage was full of life and colour; but it is suddenly deserted, and the actors and actresses have put off their splendid dresses, and are habited in mean and common attire. Or we might compare the passing away of the world to the dying colour of the sunset. The tempter offers us some bait, some outward object which appeals to the eye of the body or the mind, and we reach out towards it; but as we grasp it, it is gone. We have caught at a soap-bubble, have journeyed after a mirage, have hunted the will-o'-the-wisp. So unsubstantial and fleeting are the things with which the men of this world try to appease their immortal appetite.

But it is to be noticed that the desire for these things is even more evanescent than the things themselves. The apostle says that the lust thereof passeth away. The power of enjoyment dies away. The eye is sated with spectacles, the mind with constant change.

"Beloved, now are we children of God."—1 John iii. 2 (R.V.).

It is our privilege, not only to be children, but to know that we are such. "Such we are" (v. 1, R.V.). The world knows us not, but God knows us, and we know Him, and we know that we are his sons and daughters, through regeneration and faith. How do we know?

We believe his Word.—(John i. 12.)

We have the witness of the Spirit.—(Gal. iv. 6.)

We are led by the Spirit.—(Rom. viii. 14.)

We love the people of God.—(1 John iv. 7, R.V.)

We do not presumptuously and habitually yield to known sin.—(1 John iii. 9, R.V.)

TUESDAY, September 27.

"We have known and believed the love that God hath to us."—1 John iv. 16.

Life is one long education in various phases and aspects of love. First as a child, then as a friend, then as a lover, as wife or husband, as father or mother. We are perpetually being allowed to sit in some higher form for the progress of this Divine study. For to love is to live. To be loved is to drink of the sweetest cordial that can be prepared from the vintages of earth. And all is intended to help us to understand better the nature of God, who is love. As each new experience enters our life, we should consider a fresh facet or angle to break up and reveal to us the glory of God's love. We should say to ourselves, Now I understand and know more accurately than before how God feels, and what his love is.

The Apostle says, we have known the love of God.—Indeed, it is so. Through years of life, each of which has been filled with the most various experiences, but filled also to the brim with proofs of God's tender lovingkindness, we have had innumerable proofs of his love, for

> E'en the cloud that spreads above,
> And veileth love, itself is love.

The cloud has always had a silver lining. There has always been some compensation for the bitterest experiences. In every low dungeon He has drawn near, saying, "Fear not."

[836]

The Apostle says, we must believe God's love.—Standing on the sure foundation of what we have proved God to be in the past, we may look on the present and future with perfect faith. We have known Him too well to doubt Him now. We have known, and now we believe. He has made no mistakes. He is making none. He has done the best, and is doing it. We do not understand his dealings, but we know Him who is behind the mystery of Providence, and can hear Him saying: "It is all right, only trust Me. Fear not, it is I."

"We know that we have."—1 John v. 15.

This epistle is full of certainty. It rings with the words we know. And in these words we are taught that we may be certain in the region of prayer. Probably there is no region of the Christian life concerning which there is more uncertainty than this of prayer. Perhaps this is also the reason why there is so little prayer. Men doubt the use of spending time in shooting arrows, a very small percentage of which seem to strike the target.

The first condition in true prayer is to be sure that it is according to the will of God.—It is not difficult to do this when we base prayer on a promise. And this is what we should do to secure definiteness and assurance. There is nothing that pleases our Father more in his praying children than that they should bring his promises to Him for fulfilment, saying "Do as Thou hast said." But in cases where there is no promise to guide us we shall discover his will as we pray. If it is not to be, He will tell us. He will say, after we have prayed a week, or a month, "My child, ask Me no more of this matter: my grace is sufficient for thee."

The next condition is to believe that God is listening.—We need not pray long to know this. Only be quiet and silent before Him, and a blessed sense, induced by the Holy Spirit, will pervade your heart and mind, that you are literally speaking into the ear and heart of your Heavenly Father, who is listening as intently as if He had nothing else to attend to in all the universe.

The third condition is to be sure that the thing we asked is granted.—It may not have come to hand, and it may not come in the precise form in which we sought it; but it is ours. We must dare to believe that we have that petition, labelled with our name, consigned to us, perhaps started on its way to us, although it may take years to come.

THURSDAY, September 29.

"This is love, that we should walk after his commandments."—2 John 6 (R.V.).

Here is a solution to many difficulties, and given so easily and naturally by this beloved elder to the elect lady and her children. He had been laying much emphasis on truth: and combining truth and love in an exquisite unity. Probably we can never love perfectly, till we are perfectly true. If you examine yourself in the feelings of distance and dislike, which you have towards some individual, it is almost certain that you will come on some want of transparency and sincerity in your dealings with them. It is also the case that in so far as we put away all insincerity, and want of consecration, as between us and God, we shall come to love God more perfectly.

What deep, sweet rhythm of meaning there is in the first three verses of this letter! One reads them over and over again. Oh that that grace, mercy, and peace may be with us, from God the Father, and from Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

The difficulty that you feel is that you do not love enough. You would like to love with a strong, undying flame, burning steadily towards Jesus Christ, cleansing you with its heat, constraining you with its love. But perhaps you fail to distinguish between love and the emotion of love. They are not the same. We may love without being directly conscious of love, or being able to estimate its strength and passion. Here is the solution to many of our questionings: They love who obey, they love who walk according to his commandments.

It is recorded of Dr. Chalmers that when a Scotch girl applied to be admitted to the church, her testimony was so halting that it seemed as though she must stand back; but as she was leaving his room she turned back and said, "I canna speak for the Lord Jesus, but I could dee for Him."

FRIDAY, September 30.

"For the sake of the Name they went forth."—3 John 7 (R.V.).

The beloved elder is anxious about some travelling evangelists, who had gone forth to visit the churches; and is commending them to the care of Gaius. He was to set them forward in a manner that should be worthy of God. This is a high standard for our entertainment of brethren and strangers withal. It would save us from niggardliness and stint, for God is never miserly or meagre. It would equally save us from ostentation, since in God there is perfect simplicity. It would pervade our behaviour with the most perfect grace. But notice, in respect to these evangelists:—

Their motive.—"For the sake of the Name." It is not needful to say whose Name. There is one Name above every name; in which whatever we do is to be done. To teach the meaning hidden in that Name; to unfold its sweetness and power; to exert its spell over souls that had never felt its magnetism; to win the smile of Him to whom it belongs; to glorify it and make it honoured and beloved—this was their one thought and aim. Oh that we were animated by the same gracious motive!

Their delicacy.—They would take nothing of the Gentiles. It seemed to them incongruous to go for alms and maintenance to those who do not love their Lord. Besides, could not He maintain his own servants? They certainly would not have sanctioned the means that modern Christians adopt of getting money from the ungodly.

Their welcome.—We ought to welcome all such, and in doing so we may be fellow-helpers with them and with the truth. It is a very beautiful act to link ourselves with God's honoured servants by prayer and sympathy, that we may be counted their fellow-helpers and companions.

SATURDAY, October 1.

"Keep yourselves in the love of God."—Jude 21.

There is a strong current running. If you keep in its main-stream, it will bear you gently but irresistibly forward; but there are so many side-currents, it is so easy to be caught into a back-water, that we must be very careful not to be swept out of it. You are in it by grace, now keep in it. You will keep in it, if you do not voluntarily go out.

Build yourselves on your most holy faith.—Build, not on your emotions, nor on your conceptions of what may be right or wrong, nor on your experience; but on the strong and massive outlines of the faith once delivered to the saints (v. 3). We may well contend for it, if it is to yield the foundation of our spiritual upbuilding. In other words, you must come back, again and yet again, to the teachings of the Word of God, and specially of the life and words of our Emmanuel.

Pray in the Holy Spirit.—Wait at the Divine footstool until your prayers are indicted by Him, and the spring arises from the depths of God. And whensoever you feel the inward movement of God's Spirit, yield to it. He will correct and prune from your prayers all that should not be in them. He will lead you out in intercession for others, and for the glory of Christ, of which you did not know yourself capable. To pray in the Holy Spirit is to let the Holy Spirit pray in you.

Look for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Always be on the outlook. Let your soul stand on tiptoe in anticipation of his coming. Let yours be the words of the Canticles, "I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my Beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my undefiled." The heart that waits for Jesus will not have to wait in vain. And even in the act of waiting, it will be kept in the love of God, which is also eternal life.

JUST PUBLISHED.—OUR DAILY HOMILY, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Vol. I., Genesis—Ruth. (1/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan & Scott.) Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job, will be ready shortly, and will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

Nonconformists and Ritualism.

At the New Court Chapel mid-week service on September 14, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan spoke upon an important subject—"The duty of Nonconformists toward the Ritualistic movement of the present day." The Apostle Paul, he said, had cause in his day to grieve over the mischief wrought by false teachers who had crept into the Church of Christ, and against whom he had to defend his own right to minister in Divine things. He was not concerned that such opponents should question the validity of his orders, but was troubled about the probable effect of their teaching upon individuals and churches. For instance, in the case of Corinth, he says, "I fear lest...your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity (or single-mindedness) that is in Christ."

The old false system, that practically sought to relegate Jesus Christ to a distance from his people, finds revival in the sacerdotalism and ritualism of our own day, under the tacit sanction of dignitaries who are regarded as the spiritual rulers of a particular Church. Those who draw general attention to abuses commonly find themselves the centre of attack, but even when we are not in perfect agreement with their methods we may be thankful that large and beneficent results are likely to accrue from giving prominence to the fact of the existence of evil workers in an establishment for which the whole nation is responsible. While granting that much may be said for Episcopal and various other forms of ecclesiastical polity, Mr. Morgan maintained that all who are born again of the Spirit of God are members of the Catholic Church of Jesus Christ, and that their duty toward the Ritualistic movement arises from their position (1) as true Churchmen, and (2) as British citizens. "We have," said he,

"TOO LONG TAKEN UP A NEGATIVE POSITION."

Under the first head the duty is a positive one, and involves taking our stand anew for (a) personal access to God, as the birthright of every man and woman; (b) spiritual life, through spiritual forces, not through material activity; (c) spiritual, as opposed to Ritualistic and sensual worship.

Apart from the present crisis, we might be content to regard the proclamation of positive truth as adequate for the avoidance of error; but there is now great need to testify that, in view of the representation of believers by Christ in the presence of God, any attempted interference of a "priest" between man and his Maker is an impertinence. Not only is such intervention contrary to New Testament teaching, but history shows that wherever the "priest" succeeds in obtruding himself between individual souls, communities, or nations and their God, manhood is dwarfed, womanhood is degraded, and childhood is blighted. The great fact to which we must ever bear witness, that human guilt has been dealt with once and for ever by Jesus Christ, condemns another iniquity of our times, the unclean and bestial confessional, with its depository of other men's sins, sworn to secrecy, destroying the sacredness of family life, and promoting treachery in the State.

This movement in the Church of England is emphasising the unscriptural dogma of baptismal regeneration; but there must be many gracious souls in that communion who can hardly believe such a doctrine. Life comes by the breath of God, and is not imparted by priestly touch or act. "Confirmation," as dependent upon that baptism, and not upon individual character, is also to be condemned. We must object, moreover, to the claim that Divine life is specially fed by what is known as the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. We maintain that by no material means, but only by that "wind which bloweth where it listeth," can life come to the souls of men and be sustained, developed, completed.

Ritualistic worship is obsolete. A ritual of Divine ordination existed under the old economy; but when Jesus talked with the woman at the well He declared that Divine worship no longer had a local habitation, but that wherever men seek God in a spiritual way they will find Him. To put a man within the bonds of merely outward formulæ, no matter how beautiful, is to prevent the highest form of worship, and condemn him to a soulless, blighting slavery, outside the realm of the spiritual.

There is a danger, from which even Free Churches are not wholly exempt, of hungering after ornate service and of using forms of prayer. The true ideal of prayer consists, not in well formed sentences, but in the outbreathing of a needy soul in its approach to God. There can be no objection to a service which is beautiful in its musical arrangements, provided that it conduces to the one end of worship; but it is just here where we may be tempted over the line which separates the spiritual from the material. We need to get back to our fathers' conception of worship as the dealing of man's spirit with the Spirit of God; and in that we reach the highest of High Church positions, so far as New Testament truth is concerned. There is much need to maintain our Protestantism in this respect.

In dealing with the second main division of his subject, Mr. Morgan began with the expression of a very emphatic conviction that the sphere of Christian duty touches citizenship. The Christian man is not cut off from an interest in national action and social conditions. Mr. Morgan knew that there are excellent children of God who doubt this position, but he believed that there is no question of practical, social, or political life which may not be the subject of influence for Christ.

The body which is reviving this ritualistic movement is the Church of the nation as by law established. I am told, said Mr. Morgan, that I have no voice in its management, because I do not use the Church of England by attending its services. Then, how is it that total abstainers, men who never enter a public-house, have conceded to them the right to legislate for the regulation of the drink traffic? Because, unlike other businesses, the public-house is under the direct control and management of the State.

Apart from establishment, our New Testament Churchmanship would give us the right of protest against a continued promulgation of error within the Church of England; but, as British citizens, we refuse to go back upon our national history. Through conflict and through blood we have given notice to quit to the "priest" who dared to force his pretensions upon the nation, and we decline to have a bastard Romanism reintroduced into the country. As Free Churchmen, we are to-day bound to become Protestants anew, even though men within the National Protestant Church laugh at the term, because we dare not insult

THE MEMORY OF OUR MARTYRS.

Let us remind the young people of the Free Churches that Bunyan was twelve years in prison for preaching Christ, that Barrow and Greenwood were imprisoned for being Independents, that the Conventicle Act imprisoned men for holding prayer-meetings, that the Covenanters were shot for worshipping God after the dictates of their own consciences, that scholars, because they were not members of the State Church, were shut out from the seats of learning—and all this by men who preached and promulgated the errors now being revived within the Church as by law established. We cannot be loyal to Christ and to the men who have given us our liberties, if we do not speak out against this Ritualistic iniquity.

Our true position, as British citizens, is this: We are, above all men, sworn foes to our country's greatest foe, the "priest," and all his degrading traffic. We claim that it is our duty, first, in public protest, to speak of this movement; and, secondly, in the exercise of the franchise, to strike a blow for life and liberty. Our supreme duty is to maintain a testimony to the simplicity that is in Christ, for individual souls, for churches, and for the nation; so that the latter may discover God's will not from the lips of prelate or priest, but in the godly lives of members of all true churches, and in the righteous influence they exert upon the age in which they live.

Strangers' Rest at Zanzibar.—Meetings in aid of the work successfully carried on amongst sailors of all nationalities at Zanzibar were recently held at Plymouth. Commander Wolfe Murray, R.N., said at the afternoon gathering that a letter from Scotland from Dr. Lawrence Smith, surgeon of H.M.S. Blonde, which was recently paid off at Devonport, after being stationed for some time on the East Coast of Africa, in which Dr. Smith bore high personal testimony to the value of the work done at the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest by Mr. and Mrs. George Knapman, in charge, and also to the devoted administrations of Mrs. Knapman among the slave girls. In all probability there would soon be established at the Strangers' Rest a depôt for the sale of the Scriptures. Subsequent to a well-attended tea, several friends, including Dr. Hingston and Mr. and Mrs. Isaac, spoke at an evening meeting, and gave interesting accounts of the work's progress.

Revival at Livingstonia.

The labours of the Free Church of Scotland missionary workers at Livingstonia are interestingly illustrated by letters received, which appear in the latest issue of The Free Church Monthly. Rev. Dr. Laws says:—

"Rev. James Henderson has just returned from Bandawè, and there, in April, he had the joy of baptizing ninety-four adults and thirty-four children. Then at Ekwendeni, on the way back, he took part with Rev. Donald Fraser in a remarkable sacramental season: 203 adults and ninety-four children were baptized, and there was a gathering of some 4,000 Ngoni. Surely 'the Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad.' My heart is full as I think of such a scene within a few miles of the place where the Ngoni plotted to murder Mr. James Stewart and myself twenty years ago."

Rev. Donald Fraser writes:—"Ekwendeni.—We have concluded a communion season after the old Highland fashion. The people gathered in from all the out-stations, and spent five days together, humbling themselves before God and waiting on Him. The first strangers to come were from Mperembe's, the great warrior chief. Mateyu, the teacher, marched at their head, and behind him, in a long line, followed nearly seventy people. Next day the Njanyu people arrived. We could see them winding their way down the hillside in a straggling line, which stretched back for nearly a mile. Through all the forenoon of Wednesday bands of people continued to arrive, sometimes marching up the road in solid phalanx, with a swinging step, and sometimes in long-drawn-out Indian file.

"The paths to the south were alive with people. And men sat on the ant-hills as the companies passed, and cried out, 'What mean these things? Has an army come in among you? Are you going to a new country?' And the people cried back, 'We are going to the baptisms. Come and see.' More than one thousand people came, but accommodation was found for all.

"On Saturday morning we intended to baptize the adults who were to be received into the church, but owing to a cold, drizzling rain, we deferred it to the afternoon. But what a day that was! None such has ever been seen in Nyasaland. We baptized 195 adults; and on Sabbath afternoon, 89 children—in all, 284 souls."

Native Work at the Cape.

We have received from Mr. W. Spencer Walton, of the South Africa General Mission, some interesting items of progress from a retrospective sketch of advance during the last two and a-half years.

Two new stations, with small churches, have been opened in Swaziland; two new stations, with one church, in Zululand; another Zulu church, and work amongst sailors, at Durban; two new Zulu stations, as well as a station for Indians, at Phœnix, in Natal. Mr. Walton says:—

"We have had all the iron roofing sent for our new church at Dumisa, and are now wanting the wood, which will cost thirty pounds. We have the labour offered for nothing. This is a most interesting opening. It came about through a Zulu who was converted in our Durban church, and went back to tell his people what God had done. The result was that when our missionary went there he found a number truly converted to God and waiting to be baptized.

"The other day I went to a place called Groutville, in Umveti country, for six services amongst the Zulus, and had a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Ghost. The work was remarkable, the conviction of sin great, and many received definite blessing."

The C.M.S. and the Soudan.—The committee of the Church Missionary Society have passed the following minute in relation to Khartoum:—"That the secretaries be authorised to arrange with the missionaries of the Egypt or Palestine Mission whom they consider the most suitable to hold themselves ready to proceed to Khartoum as soon as possible; and that they also be authorised to instruct Dr. Harper, as acting secretary of the Egypt Mission, to approach the authorities in Egypt with a view to securing their concurrence in the opening of the mission at the earliest possible date, sanction being given to these instructions being telegraphed to the field if it be found advisable."

The Wartburg and Luther.

IT is the early morning in the midst of Thüringia, on the wooded heights from which the grand old fortress of the Wartburg looks out over a vast expanse of country. As far as the eye can reach in all directions wooded eminences of every variety of outline roll away to the horizon. Immediately beneath is Eisenach, to which a winding road three miles in length will conduct us presently, when we must leave this delightful and salubrious spot. Last night we ascended it in the moonlight, which gave some conception of the distant landscapes, but only now do we realise their full extent.

The mists are still sleeping in the valleys, though the sun is beginning to dissipate them. Just now it looks as though hill were separated from hill by a white lake of cloud. What absolute stillness, broken only by the hoarse voices of crows in the woods beneath, the rumbling of a cart-wheel in the road away there in the valley, or the distant baying of a hound! Presently, as I turn back to the hotel, a frightened doe starts up and plunges into the thicket. Everything around awakens holy reverie, and I keep saying to myself, "Luther has looked on this landscape and walked these woods." Nature herself is only the setting of the picture; she will perish, but the great souls that have suffered, and fought, and toiled live for ever.

Now for the Wartburg itself, where Dr. Martin Luther spent ten months, secure from the ban of the Pope and the hatred of the Roman Catholic party. The story of his friendly arrest is always fascinating.

When the Diet of Worms had ended in his release it was evident that his enemies would attempt to do by foul means what they had not dared to effect in open day; and his friends, without consulting him, agreed that he should be withdrawn into safe-keeping till the storm had spent itself. As he was therefore travelling quietly homeward he was suddenly surrounded by a troop of armed and vizored men, who forced him to mount a spare horse they led, and rode with him rapidly off into the forest. Like wildfire the news spread through Germany that Dr. Martin Luther had fallen into the hands of his foes, and great were the lamentations. But afterwards, as letters in his own handwriting were received by his friends, and true understanding of the case became general, intense relief and satisfaction were expressed by the multitudes that loved him, and had been thrilled by his heroic steadfastness.

We cross the ancient drawbridge, pass under the venerable archway, and try to imagine the group of horsemen that clattered through it on that memorable day, with their illustrious captive in the midst. The courtyard opens out into a long, fan-like shape, surrounded right and left with ancient castellated buildings, dating, for the most part, from the eleventh century. On the left is a two-storeyed building, ending in a square tower surmounted by a cross; beyond that is the ancient palace of the Landgrave of Hesse. This is interesting as having been the home, during her married life, of Elizabeth of Hungary, the story of whose beneficence is told in a series of beautiful modern frescoes which line the wall of one of the galleries. It is remarkable that a mediæval saint, a woman, should have made famous one part of the old palace-fortress, whilst the robust figure and sledge-hammer blows of the great reformer have invested the other with undying interest. As long as the old building stands men will turn to it with reverence for Luther's sake, and bare their heads in the little chamber where he translated the Bible into German.

Wartburg Castle.

Here is the chamber, up these steps, immediately on our right, on entering the old castle. No Pope has canonised this saint, as he did the holy Elizabeth three years after her death; but this is holy ground indeed. We enter the room, about sixteen feet square. Immediately on the right is a four-post bedstead, where Luther slept; beyond it in the corner an old-fashioned heating apparatus. On the wall opposite the door are some quaint portraits, one by Cranach of Luther himself; and on either side those of his father and mother; beneath these, a little to the right, is the legendary smudge where the inkpot flung at the devil struck the wall. Near by stands a table brought from his father's home to replace that at which he sat, when translating the Bible, and which was carried away piecemeal by those who have visited the spot. Out of that window he must often have gazed, longing for his dear Wittemberg, and looking over the vast extent of country with eager prayers that it might be enlightened with the Gospel for which he was prepared to shed his blood. On the floor is the mammoth vertebra which he used as his footstool. And above the door the suit of armour in which he was dressed when, as the Knight George, he was allowed to make brief excursions for health's sake into the forest. Once he was granted liberty to hunt, and there is a touching story of a frightened hare which he sheltered from its pursuers because it reminded him of his own persecuted condition.

Here he spent the period from May 1, 1521, till the following March, writing to Spalatin, Melanchthon, and others, working at his translation, and longing for freedom from his enforced captivity. A segment of the tree under which he was arrested, an old bookcase in which he is said to have kept his books, a picture of Philip Melanchthon, and some framed autograph letters, complete the contents of the apartment.

It is with difficulty we tear ourselves away, and descend the staircase into the open court-yard, where tame wood-pigeons are preening their plumage and talking love. It is a little incongruous to detect the apparatus of the electric light here and there; and to contrast it with a room full of ancient armour, in which crusaders went to Palestine, and knights tilted in high festivals, and the friends of Luther rode to the wars. But the ancient fortress is kept in splendid repair, the restoration and decoration of its rooms has been recently effected with much taste by the present Grand Duke Charles Alexander of Saxe-Weimar, who has a suite of apartments in which he sometimes resides for a few days.

Before we go we look into the little fortress church in which the Reformer preached, and wish to question those old walls of what they saw and heard. But the inexorable guide hurries us away.

For 300 years Luther has been the uncrowned King of Germany. We are not sure that such exclusive predominance of one man is the healthiest influence possible for a great nation. The effect is destructive of independence of thought and action in subsequent centuries.

All innovation is regarded as treason to the memory of the dead, and the growth of strong and vigorous reforms checked by a kind of superstitious reverence for what Luther instituted. Still, we can only thank God for what Luther was and did for the glorious Reformation, the child of his noble efforts, which has brought such blessing to the whole civilised world. F. B. M.

Perth Christian Conference.

(BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

THE thirty-sixth annual gathering of the Lord's people for conference and prayer has been held in the City of Perth. During our week of conference there have been no fewer than four such meetings in various parts of Scotland, and doubtless this fact has told against a very large attendance at Perth. However, the City Hall has been well filled during the forenoons and afternoons, while in the evenings, when the townspeople are free, the hall has been crowded.

On the evening of September 12 a reception was held by the committee, when strangers were welcomed in a few hearty words from Dr. FERGUSON, of Kinmundy. Thereafter a prayer meeting for blessing was held, and at the same time an evangelistic meeting for women was addressed in the City Hall by Rev. Dr. JOHN SMITH, Edinburgh.

TUESDAY.

The early meeting on Tuesday morning, as the others on the two succeeding days, were devoted as usual to the hearing of reports of work and of conversation. Many friends find these little conversational and intercessory meetings most interesting and helpful.

The subject for general conference was:

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE AS A WARFARE, and on Tuesday forenoon the particular aspect contemplated was The nature and conditions of the warfare. Sir ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, Bart., was chairman, and introduced the subject by reading Psa. 144 and Eph. 6, where we find the nature of the warfare; 2 Cor. x. 3, where we have the nature of the weapons; and 1 John v. 4, 5, where we find the victory.

Rev. Dr. JOHN SMITH thereafter said it was well to take a wide view of the hindrances to the Divine aim; to consider those evidences of warfare found in the experience of every Christian. It was of the utmost importance to look at the facts of the case. Read Eph. i. 1-3. Right in the centre you find the dead man, divorced from God, withering at the centre of his life, deepening into degradation. But this is not all; there are lines of defence. There is, first, the inner circle—"Dead in trespasses and sins." There is another without—"The course of this world"—the natural atmosphere in which men live. Every soul is contributing to the common life of man. Then there is something which comes from without—"This prince of the power of the air." The moral atmosphere in which the devil does not come by itself; one from without comes with it. He is the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience.

When we look to all those things, what can we do? But God has come in his grace, and removing every barrier and dwelling with the man has made him alive. Christ being exhibited and the Spirit of Christ being given—there is a mighty difference. Hence baptized into, buried with, raised together with Christ. The situation is greatly changed. In Him I have separation from my sins through his blood. Yet these old bonds and barriers are there.

How may the believer dwelling with the flesh live above it? (1) By keeping the flesh away from the scenes of temptation. (2) He must take the flesh and bind it to the service of Christ. And how may the hindrances be met? By being driven back upon Christ; by coming to Him often with tears. When in communion with Him my eyes open to see that there is another course of this world—that God has set up a kingdom even here. Apprehending this, the other course seems to vanish away. All our purposes may be utilised in advancing God's great purpose. The whole range of art, science, and literature may be made to subserve the will of God. Then, too, we are driven to an attitude of antagonism; and thus we see that the true life is not self, but service—the true blessedness not what we can get, but what we can give.

Rev. J. LAMOND, Skelmorlie, and Rev. Dr. BROWN, Durham, continued the subject. The former showed the value and necessity of discipline; the latter protested that joy is the main thing in the Christian's calling. Fasting is nowhere commanded in the five books of Moses, etc., but in the Didactic some twenty-seven times. Our warfare should be conducted on proper lines if we are to expect a blessing.

WEDNESDAY.

In the forenoon, Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., was chairman, and Rev. W. H. RANKIN, Titwood, was the first speaker. He took as text Eph. vi. 16, "The shield of faith." In the course of an interesting address he showed that the dangers to fidelity are those which arise in the little things of life, and that our Christianity must penetrate into all. If our people were half as afraid of sin as of perfection our congregations would advance in the spiritual life at a bound. Our faith is just our estimate of the character of God.

Rev. J. DOUGLAS, Nagpore, said he might put the question, If God had saved and left us, what then? Having pictured a kind and generous friend who had done everything to redeem a gambler, and who after some years found the gambler in as pitiable a plight as before, in remonstrating with him received the reply: "Yes, you have done all you could for me, but you have not given me a new spirit, another nature"; so would it have been with us if God had only saved us. Thus from the words and example of our Lord, whose life was ruled by the word in John vi. 57, the speaker infused the principle of safety. Our Lord referred all his works, words, judgments, desires to his Father; they were his. And what was the result? When the hostility of the people He came to save rose against Him, He could say, "My Father hath not left Me alone." And now our Lord's counsel to us is, "As I relied on my Father, so do you rely on Me." His conflict and ours is the same, with one great difference: God gave not the Spirit to measure unto Him. But our safety is the same. Neither hath the Father left us alone. How may we be secure by this favour? By always doing the things that please Him.

Rev. A. SOUTAR, Glasgow, who next addressed the conference, asked us to look at a concrete picture in Dan. iii. 16-30. There are seen two kinds of greatness—worldly and moral. The great Nebuchadnezzar, the mighty ruler, surrounded by all the glories of power, rank, and empire, and three men—mere atoms in his sight—standing up before him and saying, "O King, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter. Our God is able to deliver us." Our God is able; there is the "shield of faith." We often forget what it costs to perform deeds of moral valour. These men had to overcome

(1) The voice of self-interest. They were men of rank and power. To disobey the king was to them loss of position, power, life.

(2) The voice of the claims of others. Patriotism might have induced them to obey the King, inasmuch as their brethren might feel more secure and be more helped were they to retain their offices and conform.

(3) The voice of gratitude. They had come in as slaves, and had been treated royally by the king; they had been educated and advanced. Did the king ask too much?

Why did they refuse to listen to all these voices? What was the secret? It was the vision of God. That made them strong, faithful and true. So Moses acted as seeing Him who is invisible.

What was the result? The king promoted them. Their steadfastness was a gain to themselves and to their brethren. They got higher rank, more power, and were better able to aid their brethren.

THURSDAY.

On Thursday forenoon the EARL OF MORAY presided, and, after prayer, led by Lord Kinnaird, introduced the subject, "Experiences of the Christian Warfare." His lordship read 2 Cor. 12. There, where His authority was questioned, the Apostle speaks of the strength given him, and all through this Epistle of conflict and warfare he sounds a note of comfort. Strength was ever given to him to compete with his trials. The power of Christ had not rested upon him had he not had that thorn in the flesh.

Rev. Mr. LAMOND, speaking from Ps. xxviii. 7, referred to the power of the human will. Considering its power it was a great thing when one said, "I wish to live a good life." In our ordinary life in the world, when we set our minds and wills on one object we generally succeed. We are then whole-hearted. But in the religious world it is different. Here we are in conflict with our own desires. We have to wrestle, to fight against the current. Christian life is a discipline. But lest any be discouraged, remember, what at the beginning is difficult is easy by the indwelling of the Spirit.

Rev. W. D. MOFFAT, Edinburgh, illustrated the place which faith has in the Christian warfare by the story of Elisha and the young King Joash (2 Kings xiii. 14-19). The hand of the prophet was placed upon the hand of the king. The hand of God is on the hand of the believer. Again, when our exercise of faith is accomplished, there comes immediately a new call. First shoot, then smite.

Evangelistic meetings were held on the first and third evenings of the Conference. The speakers were Messrs. Oates and Rankin, Glasgow; Mr. Douglas, Nagpore; and Mr. Moffat, Edinburgh. On Wednesday evening the usual missionary meeting was held. Mr. Gibson, Swatow; Mr. Douglas, Manchuria; Mr. Nath. Bose and Dr. Somerville, India, gave addresses.

The British Association.

FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

THE meetings of the British Association, held this year at Bristol, came to an end last week. Taken as a whole, while there was no matter of phenomenal sensation under discussion, the papers read were quite up to the average as regards interest. About 2500 persons attended, amongst them a very large number of scientific men, and the social part of the proceedings was, as usual, very popular. Among the papers which excited special attention were those read by M. de Rougemont on his travels in West Australia. The story of this modern Robinson Crusoe's enforced exile in the wilds of Australia for upwards of thirty years was received with intense interest by very large audiences.

The week opened with the address of the president, Sir William Crookes, which has already been referred to and commented on in our columns. The close of the address dealt with a brief reference to the president's psychic researches. As he spoke of telepathy, thought transference, etc., the conviction must have come to many how much nearer every year these scientific discussions approach the borderland where physical facts give place to Divine mysteries.

On Sunday large congregations listened to the special sermons preached by the Bishop of Bristol in the morning and by Professor Bonney in the evening. The former took the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand, and spoke on Christ's solution of the problem of an immediate food supply, pointing out how entirely different it was from what we would have imagined if we were confronted by the difficulty. Professor Bonney took for his text the words, "All flesh is grass; the grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of the Lord abideth for ever." In very eloquent words he showed how from Creation onwards through the various stages of history, death, the end of life, had been written on all; and one is brought to

A HOPELESS PESSIMISM.

But once admit revelation and all is changed. Before three centuries the Galilean had conquered, and though science looks warily at miracles, she has never declared them impossible, only improbable.

In the afternoon the usual devotional meeting, which is always arranged by Dr. Gladstone and a few other professors, was held. The chairman pointed out that the raison d'être of the meeting was that physical truth cannot satisfy spiritual hunger. They had heard of thought-transference, but they believed in "a Divine thought-transference," and that in studying the great secrets of nature, with Kepler they would say, "O God, I am thinking thy thoughts after Thee." Dr. Gladstone called attention to the continuity of life of this special meeting in that it had lasted thirty-four years. He rejoiced in the wonderful movement towards religion among students everywhere, in India, Japan, America, as well as at home, and specially among medical students; but while other speakers echoed this, one deplored the fact that Christian people, as a rule, know so little of scientific methods, and are so unable to help persons in difficulties. He pleaded, therefore, for more universal scientific teaching.

The address of the President of the Anthropological section (Mr. E. Brabrook) contained much of interest viewed from a spiritual standpoint. He pointed out the almost universal belief of early and primitive peoples in a separable spirit capable of feeling and action apart from the body. He showed how certain religious ideas crop up among all peoples at certain stages of development, and no man or nation can stamp out such ideas. A higher power restrains all such efforts; religion is no exception to the general law of progress. Christianity stands to-day as the religion which has been found by the operation of natural laws to be best suited to mankind, and this progress he held to be consistent with reverence for Christianity. To quote his own words, "I reverence the Divine Founder of Christianity more when I think of Him as one who so well knew what was in man as to build upon ideas and yearnings that had grown in man's mind from the earliest in fancy of the race than when I listen to the recital of the paradoxes and denunciations in the Athanasian Creed."

In the Economic section a valuable paper was read by Mr. Dent on the Poor Law, and some home truths were told to the audience as regards charitable relief, with special reference to Bristol, which apparently, with a population of 204,000, spends annually £195,000 on its charity, and stands at the head of towns as regards the cost of its paupers. He pointed out the need for greater co-operation between the Poor Law, at best a medicine, a "human ordinance," and charity, "the Divine law." Time forbids mention of a number of other valuable papers read in this section dealing with matters of most practical interest, e.g., "saving and spending"; co-operation between capital and labour as a solution of their conflicts—all of them illustrative of the principle that the truly scientific and the religious methods are not in antithesis, but may work hand in hand and move in parallel lines.

The Gospel in Boston, U.S.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Since we met in London (Canada), just prior to your return to England, we have paid a second visit to Boston, where, for two months, in the city and outlying towns, special meetings have again been held. This great eastern centre of New England is one of the most difficult places to work that I know. It was a great triumph to have, for fourteen weeks, in the past winter, a daily noon meeting for prayer and the defence and exposition of the fundamental truths of our most holy faith. From six hundred to a thousand people, seven-tenths being men, came together to the Tremont Temple and Park-street Church for what was called the "Great Truths Campaign."

Boston has been designated "the modern Athens." Not only by reason of its culture and educational promise, but because of the presence of the great Harvard University, which ranks as one of the foremost seats of learning in the United States. This institution glories in the broadness of its platform. From the standpoint of Evangelical truth Harvard has never been sound in the faith. From its very commencement Rationalism has held sway. Liberalism, to the point of the practical exclusion of definite truth as held by the reformers and the men of the Mayflower, has been the boast of this University.

Liberalism, however, has not hesitated to embrace Unitarianism, with its varied misrepresentations and parings-down of revealed truth. Teaching and exposition by cultured human reason has taken, to a large extent, the place of the mind of God made known in his Word. The has resulted in the casting down from its place of supremacy that Word which "God hath magnified above all his name."

Truth at Harvard to-day, from the standpoint of the character and work of the Lord Jesus Christ, is an unknown quantity, and if at all admitted is regarded as being in a condition of flux, which awaits precipitation at the hands of professors and teachers to be found in the school of the "Higher Critics." One thing is certain, the intelligent conception of the person and work of Christ Jesus the Lord is scarcely apprehended. The altar erected by the Athenians to the unknown God might be re-erected at Harvard, so little is Jesus Christ either known, exalted or taught. His character as represented in the Scriptures boldly discussed and faithfully presented to the students in this University would, in a theological sense, mean nothing less than turning it upside down.

The great dishonour done by educated prejudice to the Lord who is "God over all blessed for ever," could not be over-stated, and has been only exceeded by the grievous wrong done through many of the students who have left Harvard and become preachers of this modern counterfeit of the Gospel of Christ. In every direction in New England their false teaching has paralysed the deep sense of the consciousness of need which the preaching of the Gospel of Christ is exactly fitted to awaken.

The conviction of sin is scarcely known. How could it exist when the Holy Spirit's testimony against sin is constantly withheld? How is it possible to convict men and women of sin if there be no distinct and powerful charges made and brought home to the heart and conscience of the sinner? Man's deep need of the grace and love of God manifested in the sending of his Beloved Son is ignored and denied. Christ's redemptive work, so clearly and emphatically emphasised in the Gospel, is held back. The result is that sin in its civilised fascinations and deceitful attachments has become exceedingly popular. Culture and refinement are the social fetishes which the Bostonians worship. Pride of intellect is their darling idolatry.

The practical setting aside of the most potent forces which inhere in the Word of God has resulted in the lowering of God's standards and the exaltation of man as an unregenerate though mighty civilised sinner. Nothing new, I venture to affirm, is needed. What New England wants is to come back to the Christ, the Prince of Life, whose wisdom, grace, and ability to fill out all the centuries' pages is so magnificently stated by the Apostle in these words, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

To hinder the right and true knowledge of the Great Competent Lord! Here it is that the conflict rages. "The god of this world is of them that believe not lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Thank God this is not all! There is another Almighty Worker. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. iv. 4, 5).

How startling—how true these words! The two workers in the same field, the conflict, the intent, and the issues, so clearly stated; and we see it all. The very heart of the battle is here, and in my judgment the god of this world is using the functions of the professor, the college, the professing Church, Romanism and Ritualism to an extent such as we have never known before in blinding the minds of them which believe not.

Congregations as a rule are sparse, and largely confined to mere Sunday morning attendance. It is a great struggle to keep open the doors of hundreds of the churches in New England. Zeal is painfully deficient. Its absence depresses. Lukewarmness and worldliness have eaten into the churches to such an extent that they are powerless as aggressive or evangelising agencies. Unitarianism has sapped the life of many of the churches, and New England to-day needs nothing so much as a genuine revival, on the lines of a full-orbed presentation of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God. There is a godly minority of ministers in the City of Boston who are looking for "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." It has been my joy to preach on several occasions at Clarendon-street church, the scene for years of the devoted life and powerful ministry of Dr. A. J. Gordon. This hallowed sphere of service tells of what may be accomplished by a life fully surrendered to the Lord. Though this honoured brother is present with the Lord, yet he lives on in Boston enshrined in the hearts and lives of many who are his crown of rejoicing.

I should be sorry to leave the impression that our God has not reserved unto Himself in Boston and New England thousands who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Those who know the Lord Jesus Christ are heartily tired of the polished stones which have been and are being presented to the people in the stead of the bread of life. I seldom remember more grateful words than those which have reached me from many hundreds of believers during this extended campaign. There is a decided reaction, but it lacks as yet tidal force. Now that the "higher criticism" has become a spent force, we are expecting a vigorous rebound. The Word of God goeth forth conquering and to conquer.

Added to more than three hundred public addresses and expositions of Scripture given in the main to large audiences, it has been our joy by printed matter to distribute more than 40,000 pamphlets and searchlight flashes in and around Boston. The hot weather is now with us, and we are glad that the season for rest is come. It is difficult to find time to write to our English friends when the work presses so incessantly, but I purpose sending you during our holiday two or three letters which I trust will be acceptable to your readers, stimulating to their sympathy, and appealing to their prayers.—Yours truly, HENRY VARLEY.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, Aug. 25.

"Teacher Knows."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

THE sun was setting behind the Cornish hills, and the evening air was chill, as a dejected-looking lad of sixteen years stood among the deserted boats. His whole appearance bespoke a sense of misery of which the glow of sunset but reminded him the more. The fresh breeze stirred new life within only to be crushed, and any feeble longing he might ever have after some gentler influence only made the hard conditions of his lot the more unbearable.

Thirteen years had gone since the last fond hand had pressed his own, when he, a tiny child, sat on a bed beside a dying mother, and knew nothing beyond the shelter of love and home. Sarah Marten has no recorded name among the heroes or the martyrs of earth, but when life's history is read out in the interpreting light of eternity letters of gold will illuminate the chapters that tell of her deeds of love and unselfish devotion to the good of others. Fulness of joy will obliterate the grief and pain she endured from a faithless and intemperate husband. Unhindered service with heavenly calm will crown her lot of disappointment and distress. For that frail boy she laid up a legacy of prayer, and as yet he had seemed to receive no return.

Her body gone, the child, hardened by cruelty and sin, forgot her gentle smile and loving words, and, after enduring untold sufferings, James Marten (known as Jim on board the vessel, where he served for bare existence) had come ashore in the southern port. The men to whom he somehow felt he belonged had gone to revel the evening hours away, and he was relieved to be alone. It was furthest from his thoughts that anyone would speak a kindly word to him as he stood that evening gazing with indifference at the sinking sun, and yet it was just then his heart was ready for seed that would be sown.

The last streak of sunlight disappeared, and the grey stillness caused Jim to shiver, when, turning, he saw a face unlike any he was used to. Ilene Newton understood the meaning of loneliness; she was an orphan, living with an aged uncle on whom she depended for everything. He was cold and ungracious toward religion, and since his niece had become a Christian, he treated her with disdain; not that he could complain, for no one could be more devoted to his comfort. That evening she had been visiting two of the boys in her class; her heart was aching for them; they were drifting into the stream of worldliness, and there, beside the sea, she saw the lad to whom the Lord had surely sent her.

Would he go on Sunday to her class? she asked.

Might be he could, but he didn't know anything about such places—daresay he could find the way if he liked. And with a few such remarks, she left him.

Sunday came, and Jim was not missed as he stole away into the town. He had a look at the place to which Ilene had invited him, and but for a friendly "Come in, mate," from another boy, he was thinking to escape unseen. The lesson was on the great calm that came over the sea at the Saviour's command. Jim felt himself in a new world, and wondered how the teacher knew about such things—and strange feelings were beginning to come to him. No questions were asked or heard, and he meant to keep it secret; so he watched his opportunity, and twice that week he went to the class which Ilene held on two evenings in the week. She seemed to him to know everything, and all his own experiences and his wants appeared to be met.

Could she know anything about him or his history? or why was a stranger so interested in him? Then she set him thinking of something beyond the low level of his daily drudgery, until it seemed a power above earthly things was taking hold of him. Three weeks only had passed since that first invitation to the class was given, and yet the twelve times he had listened to the thrilling Gospel stories, with the teacher's wonderful applications, had seemed a new life-time. On returning from the Thursday evening meeting, Jim felt tired and shivering, and strange aches came all over him; in the morning he could not attend to his duties, and a sly kick from one of the men just laid him prostrate. The next day the vessel would sail, and he had crept to his corner and lay in pain.

"If a lady should ask for me, could she anyhow come aboard?" he asked of the rough sailor who was threatening him for skulking.

"How should you know a lady? Likely I be bringing a land bird below deck," but before he finished his sentence a sudden stop was put to the gruff voice by the appearance of Ilene Newton. She had gathered from Jim's story, and the remarks of the men on board, more of the real truth than he imagined, and she felt God had laid that boy on her heart. She knew the vessel was outward bound, and her only chance was on that day; but she did not expect to find him below, ill.

"Leave me with the boy," she said, with kindly dignity—and the man obeyed.

"Jim, you haven't anyone to love or care for you, have you?" she said.

"No; I didn't care either, only you've made me feel it real hard."

"You're ill, Jim, and that's why the Lord sent me to-day. He made the man willing to let me come and speak to you; would you like to stay ashore, and go to the infirmary and get well?"

"I feel right badly, and I couldn't move up the ladder," he said, tears gathering in his feverish eyes.

There was a talk among the men — that lady meant business—they would be well rid of the boy. "My missus give 'im a berth when his mother died, ye see; but I'd as soon chuck 'im overboard; let 'er 'ave 'im if she likes, I say," said the man who had known the boy most, and treated him the worst.

A night of pain and weariness over, and Jim was properly wrapped and conveyed by the authorities to a bed in the infirmary, and Ilene, the teacher, became his chief attendant. Rheumatic fever was at its height, and he talked at random.

"What is it you want?" asked the nurse.

"Teacher knows—tell her to spin a yarn about Him as cures and helps folks."

"Why do you cry, Jim?" she asked, when he was too weak to move.

"Oh, I want her, 'cos teacher knows without askin'."

Bad as he was, he lay quiet, and listened when Ilene spoke of Jesus. Day after day his constant reply to all questions about himself was "She knows," and when she went to see him, he was satisfied.

It was three weeks before he was on the road to recovery, and during that time the teacher who knew the great love of Christ was the means of communicating its life-giving power to the orphan boy, and was the honoured instrument in answering a mother's prayers.

Jim grew strong in body and soul, and so sure was he that Ilene knew wonderful things about God and heaven that he listened to her words, imitated her very manners, learned to read well, and then to study God's Word. He still believes a Sunday-school teacher should know experimentally the truths he teaches, and is praying to become such a teacher himself, fully equipped by the Holy Spirit.

Christians, knowing the salvation of Jesus, who is the better for your knowledge of Him?

Many lonely and tempted ones are all about your path, wondering what they want, and where to go for help and safety. Will any one of them point to you and say, "Teacher knows"?

Some mother's aching heart has prayed—"God love my boy—my girl!" and you who have heard Christ's secret words of love may be intrusted with God's answer, as He says about you, "Teacher knows."

Hide not the light that has shined into your heart. Rather seek to let its rays fall on other lives—go forth to cheer and bless.

Trust in Jehovah's promise, fling doubting fear away;
'Tis his to give the blessing, 'tis thine to work and pray,
And strive to gain the rich reward of Him who winneth souls for God.

The New Forest Gipsy Mission.—The movement by which gipsies, driven from their former habitations in various parts of the country, have gravitated to the New Forest, renders any work undertaken there on their behalf of special interest. The missionary of the above Mission has acted very largely now for some years as a moral policeman among the gipsies, and with a decidedly good effect. Left-off clothing is much needed, as also are blankets, for the gipsies who encamp in large numbers with many children, during the winter months, in a condition of sad poverty. Parcels of clothing, material, etc., sent by rail, may be sent to Mr. G. R. Shaw, addressed Totton Station, S.W.R.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

FOR seven years past the work of the Barbican Mission to the Jews has been carried on with 33, Finsbury-square as its home and centre. At length, by reason of the lease having expired, and pending the realisation of the new Mission House scheme, Prediger Lipshytz has had to take temporary premises in which to domicile the many agencies of the mission. These have been found at 262, Commercial-road, E., where for the present the Saturday services and the daily Bible classes will be be held. There also the reading-room will be provided, and appointments with inquirers kept by the superintendent and his helpers. For private purposes the address of Herr Lipshytz will be Vine House, Wood-street, Walthamstow, where the Converts' Home will be furnished. The temporary premises in Commercial-road will be opened for their special work on Thursday afternoon, October 6, at 3 o'clock, when several friends are announced to speak at a meeting to be presided over by Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

The latest report of the mission is full of interest, giving an account of varied operations, with extracts from converts' letters and workers' journals. Under the head of house-to-house visitation, we read:—"Where little expected, we have found, in spite of poverty, great domestic cleanliness and strictness in the bringing up of children. In other cases, bitter need has had the opposite effect; religious feeling has been stupefied, and a dead materialism settled upon the mind. Poor Jews are poor indeed, and poverty is attended by much sickness and bodily weakness. But a greater cause of trouble and anxiety has been the prevalent lack of employment, so that many have not, even with the best will in the world, been able for weeks and months together to find anything to do. The importance of visitation can hardly be exaggerated. Here we meet with the mothers and children, and impress them with Christian acts, while yet unable to speak to them in Christian words. There are houses in which the visitor is not only welcome, but finds interested hearers during quite protracted stays. He is permitted to explain Bible truth, discuss difficulties, and set forth in detail the Gospel story. Discussion is frank and free, and many a visit of such a kind has resulted in men attending services in the mission house, and visiting the missionary for further instruction."

Jews at Jerusalem.

WE have been able to keep up the work at Abraham's Vineyard, Jerusalem, employing fifty-six Jews daily, without interruption. But now help is greatly needed, and there are besides numbers of applicants for work whom it is hard to have to refuse.

Our lady visitor has this summer relieved about 800 of the sick and feeble, among them many widows with children, and is now distributing clothing. We have also given drinking water from the noble rock-hewn cisterns which friends have enabled us to construct at the Vineyard. We could employ many more if money were provided for payment of wages and for building of workshops.

The Jews in their miserable dwellings—some dark and airless, others affording no shelter from the fierce summer's sun—sorely need all the help that British Christians can give to enable them to earn at least a morsel of daily bread.

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. W. W. Turton, hon. superintendent and secretary, writes, from 110, Cannon-street, E.C., in terms of thankfulness for gifts of flowers which, with text-cards, have been distributed by the workers: "The nice supplies of heather have greatly assisted in making up the bouquets; it invariably gives much delight to the patients in hospitals and infirmaries. Our best thanks are also due for a goodly number of lavender bags and scrap cards for the hop-pickers. There is such a demand for them that we have already received letters begging for a further grant of these pretty little gifts, which the poor people treasure as a memento of the Gospel services held for their benefit, and we trust an entrance has been gained in many a heart for the messages from God's Word, sent forth in prayer and faith."

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Children's Services at Llandudno.

THE seaside services at Llandudno this summer were most encouraging, considering the break of two years since they were last held. The weather throughout was remarkably fine, enabling the outdoor meetings, with one or two exceptions, to be held uninterruptedly throughout the whole of the mission. The beach services were particularly bright, and the children joined heartily in the hymns and special choruses. The attendance, including adults, varied from 200 to 400, and as the days went by the attention and interest shown by all alike was only one of the many proofs that the power of God was manifest in every detail of the work, and the missioners were permitted to see manifold results from the sowing of the seed.

The open-air services for adults held in the evenings gave great encouragement. These were specially well attended, and it was indeed wonderful to see people of all classes standing throughout with fixed attention. On more than one occasion, when one meeting was over another was asked for; this being dispersed, even then the people were not inclined to leave. Truly this, if nothing else, is a deep cause for praise and thankfulness.

The largest meetings were the Happy Valley services on Sunday afternoons, at half-past three. As many as 2000 hymn sheets were given out to those close by the ring reserved for children, and probably another 2000 people were scattered on the slopes of the Great Orme, all within perfect hearing of the speaker, thus affording an excellent opportunity of presenting the Gospel to both old and young. The sympathy and encouragement of friends on all sides was most helpful to the work.

The services this year were conducted by Mr. E. Fielden Nivin, of Emmanuel College and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, assisted by Messrs. A. Hindle, Corpus Christi College and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, and E. G. A. Dunn, St. John's Hall, Highbury, and by a number of lady workers. Various other friends gave kind help in the daily morning prayer meetings. Numerous testimonials to blessings received were constantly coming in from young and old.

Gorleston Beach.

This is the first summer that children's services have been permitted on Gorleston sands, and the workers thank God for the permission now given. Gorleston is a small but rapidly-increasing place, two and a-half miles from Great Yarmouth, and is already well known to those interested in the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The sands are splendid and were this season crowded with thousands of children, affording a hopeful field for the Children's S.S. Mission. Two young students and their friends began services for the children and young people on August 11, and continued with much encouragement till August 27. Many children, it is believed, returned to their homes and schools to be little soldiers and servants of Christ. Over forty new members were obtained for the Children's Scripture Union, and most attentive audiences of both old and young gathered daily round the "platform" with its red banner.

The Great Tent at South Tottenham.

The meetings in Mr. Leonard Weaver's American Tabernacle are still going on. Christians attending during the past week have been privileged to rejoice over sinners coming to the Lord, and backsliders being restored. There is a great spirit of expectation amongst the people, as they realise that prayers so long going up to God for a revival in the place are now being answered.

Messrs. Charles Inglis, Leonard Weaver, and William Grove have preached nightly to well-filled meetings. Sunday was a field day, the evening meeting commencing long before the advertised time, and hundreds of people standing round the tent. The interest in the work seems deepening; quite a large number of men and women have stood up, desiring prayer for their salvation. For these things we thank God, and desire the continued prayers of Christians for the work.

Meetings will be continued nightly at half-past seven during the month; Sunday afternoon at three, and Saturday afternoon for children at three. It is intended to hold a conference on aggressive Christian work on Thursday, 29th inst., at three and seven o'clock. Tea will be provided for friends coming from a distance.

Evangelists' Movements.

Messrs. Fred G. Willard and Henry Crowhurst, evangelists, Tunbridge Wells, have finished a Gospel Tent Mission at Marsh Green, Edenbridge, Kent. The Lord has blessed the addresses of these friends.

Rev. E. P. Hammond, of Hartford, Conn., has been busy in Gospel work all the summer in different parts. He recently preached at East Windsor, Conn., the birthplace of Jonathan Edwards.

The work at the Brighton Branch of the Evangelistic Mission continues to be prospered of God, under the superintendence of Mr. Edward Hurditch, at the Athenæum Hall, 148, North-street. Large open-air services have been held on the front and other places throughout the summer, with pleasing instances of blessing.

Mr. W. R. Lane conducted a mission in Luton, from September 3 to 12, under the auspices of the Free Church Council, the various Free Churches of the town combining in the effort. Mr. Lane's messages were much appreciated, and there were a good number of enquirers.

The Lord has graciously visited Surrey-square Mission, Old Kent-road, during the last week. Many have professed decision for Christ, and backsliders have been restored in connection with the mission held by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh. All classes have been dealt with, and it has been a real time of blessing.

Now that the tent season is over friends may like to know a little of what has been done during the summer months with No. 7 tent of the Evangelisation Society, which, under Mr. John Harris's care, has been pitched in several Suffolk villages. Shelley, Layham, Whatfield, Hitcham, Thorington Street, Hadleigh, and Raydon have been visited. The time at Shelley proved one of revival and refreshing; many were converted and received by faith the gift of salvation, and are still rejoicing in their Saviour, pressing onwards. The memory of that wonderful time will long remain in the hearts of those who were present. At Whatfield, also, many professed to be brought to God. As we have seen numbers gather night after night, often wearied with the day's toil in the hay and, later, in the harvest fields, the conviction has been pressed home to the heart that no new Gospel is needed, but the simple "old, old story of Jesus and his love" still meets the longing of hungry souls. In some places the attention has been most noticeable. We are indeed thankful for such a Society.

Mr. Josiah Nix's Engagements.—Kendal, Sept. 18 to 26; St. Just's, Oct. 2 to 10; Rotherham, Oct. 16 to 24.

Sergeant Pullinger's next engagement will be at the Old National School-rooms, Windsor, on September 25.

Requests for Prayer.

"Reformation under Asa."—2 Chron. xiv. 2-12.

Golden Text.—Help us, O Lord our God, for we rest in Thee.—2 Chron. xiv. 11.

LAST quarter we studied the history of the N. kingdom, Israel. This quarter, beginning with the divided kingdoms, we trace the history of the S. kingdom, Judah. This lessons covers the same period as that of Lessons 1 and 2 of last quarter.

First King of Judah, Rehoboam. For his character see Lesson 1 of last quarter. His folly divided the kingdom, and under the guidance of his vain and wild young friends he led the nation into wrong worship.

Asa.

Grandson of Rehoboam. His mother and grandmother were worshippers of idols. History of Asa shows us that "a man need not be a horse because he is born in a stable." He was surrounded by idolatrous influence, yet he revived the true religion. It is possible to overcome our surroundings and the tendency we have inherited from ancestors. Some men are heroes because of their beginnings and surroundings. Some men are heroes in spite of these things. The handicapped man will not be blamed by God for not coming in first. "Did he run well?" will be the question.

The Warning.

In his father's case Asa had seen the result of wickedness. He had proved from the experience of his ancestors that it was better to serve God than idols.

Lesson.—Our eyes should be open to the danger-posts as well as the finger-posts of life. There is ample proof around us that "the way of transgressors is hard," and that "the path of the just is as a shining light."

The Reformation (3).

"He took away the altars of the strange gods and the high places," etc. Destroyed at once their encouragement to idolatry and licentiousness. He cut down an obscene idol that had been made by and for the queen mother Maachah. Commanded the people to turn to God.

Asa must have been a strong man to do this, but God was with him strengthening him and defending him. His action is heroic like that of the prophets. Courage as needful for us as for Asa. Always difficult to do the right. We must be

Strong in the Lord of Hosts
And in his mighty power;
Who in the strength of Jesus trusts
Is more than conqueror.

Asa the Builder (6, 7).

Two classes of people in the world—builders and destroyers. Asa destroyed what was wrong, built up what was right. The true follower of Christ has this twofold work to perform still.

Many who have not the courage to destroy and uproot the wrong may have patience and perseverance to go on building up the right. Sunday-school teachers are the world's most important builders. They lay the foundations of society.

Lesson.—(1) We should all try to do some little building. Make the home and the school stronger, more peaceful, more beautiful.

(2) We need not only to destroy the sin in our hearts, but to build ourselves up with the righteousness of Jesus Christ.

Asa in Battle (8-12).

Zerah was probably a king of Egypt. Mareshah about twenty-five miles S.W. of Jerusalem.

Judah was terribly outnumbered. There was great disparity in the size and wealth of the two kingdoms opposed. Asa prayed to God. This would—

(1) Strengthen his own heart.
(2) Nerve the arm and heart of his men.

Asa's Failure.

He did not complete the destruction of the groves; or if he completed it, they soon sprang up again in some places.

Teacher should compare Asa's work with the work of temperance reformers. Both have to deal not alone with external institutions, but with the wrong desires of the heart of man. Only the grace of God can cure this.

Lessons from the Sea.

I WONDER if the dear young readers of this page, many of whom no doubt are, or have been, enjoying the pleasures of the sea-side holiday, have ever noticed four words which they may find in Job xxxvi., "Who teacheth like Him?" and, as we remember it was said of Jesus Christ that when He was here on earth, "Without a parable spake He not unto them," and that all his discourses were illustrated from the surrounding scenes of life, let us ask the great Teacher to speak to us afresh from the book of nature spread open before us. Our eyes have been continually upon the sea, beautiful in all its many changing moods, and what has the voice been teaching us which has sounded forth from its midst?

Sea-perils (2 Cor. xi. 26).—We gaze upon the sea on a calm, sunshiny day, with the sunbeams dancing on its rippling surface, and can scarcely believe that it could be perilous; but the clouds gather in the sky, the wind rises, the waves dash against each other and break with foaming crest, and amidst the howling of the storm a cry of distress may be heard from some storm-tossed vessel, someone longing for help. Some ships weather the storm, others become shipwrecked (see Acts xxvii.). There is no life without its storms. It may seem all bright and sunshiny, but sooner or later the dark clouds appear in the sky; temptations, trials, disappointments, sicknesses, sometimes ending in death. Picture to yourselves the scene mentioned in Mark iv., 37-41; the storm of wind and the waves breaking into the little ship on the Sea of Galilee, but there is no cause for alarm, for One is on board whose "Peace be still" is at once followed by a great calm.

And you, dear young readers, need never fear anything that may come to overcast the sunshine of your lives if you have Christ within. "When the waves thereof arise, Thou stillest them" (Ps. lxxxix.).

"With Christ in the vessel I'll smile at the storm," but without Him you will surely make "shipwreck" (1 Tim. i.). "He led them on safely, so that they feared not; but the sea overwhelmed their enemies" (Ps. lxxviii.).

And now just a few words to those who have taken Christ on board. Don't forget when the storms come that He is always at hand to help, and do not let Him pass by unrecognised (see Mark vi. 47-51). He alone can bring us out of all our distress into the "desired haven" (Ps. cvii.). Not only the storms, however, are perilous, but even the calms. "Calm seas have their dangers; mariner, beware!"

The boat that sails with the wind makes very little progress in the calms, and if life were one unruffled calm we should make but little progress in the heavenly way. "Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God" (Ps. lv.). And, again, during a calm the sailors may be off guard and a sudden squall upset the vessel; let us beware, when everything seems to be going on smoothly in our lives, that we do not fall under sudden temptation; then is the greatest need to "watch and pray" (Matt. xxvi.). Another source of danger on the seas we find from fogs. Only the other day the lovely picture of the blue sea under the bright sunshine was obliterated quickly from our sight as the grey, misty fog came creeping over, hiding everything from view; and the not very musical sound of the fog-horn from the lighthouse sounded every minute the danger signal. Dear boys and girls, beware of the fogs of doubt and sin—yea, anything that would come between you and Jesus, hindering your seeing Him.

We might mention many other perils of the sea, but must not forget the rocks upon which many a vessel has stranded. Let us be on the alert. Rocks abound around us; let us steer clear of all, and avoid the dangers on the sea of life, by having Christ as the Captain of our salvation (Heb. ii.), consulting daily our chart, God's Holy Word (Ps. cxix.), and seeking the guide of the unfailing compass of God's Holy Spirit, Who alone can guide us "into all truth" (John xvi.).

Let us now turn from the perils to what we like better to think about—Sea-breezes. Why are they so much desired? Are they not health-restoring, invigorating? Do they not put new life and energy into us?

And now turn to your Bibles a moment. Find Ezek. xxxvii. 9: "Breathe upon their slain that they may live." Turn again to John iii. 8, and still further to Acts ii. 2-4, and you will find God's Holy Spirit mentioned under the similitude of the wind. He it is who must breathe into us the breath of life: Who alone can quicken us when our love to Christ seems to flag and lose the ardour of its first impulse: Who alone can empower us to walk the heavenly way. But we must be in the position to catch the quickening breezes. Sometimes the boats have to tack in order to catch the wind, and we, too, must

> Spread our sails, while heavenly breezes
> Gently waft our vessel on.

Do not neglect the means of grace; let Christ empty you of self, that there may be room for his infilling power:

> Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
> With all thy quickening powers;
> Come, shed abroad a Saviour's love,
> And that shall kindle ours.

Sea treasures.—Who would think there were so many beneath the briny waters? Seaweeds of all hues and descriptions, shells, corals, pearls, sponges, etc. How do they retain their beauty amidst the fury of the waves? There are several reasons. We notice it is only the seaweed that is attached to the rock and kept under the water that is so fresh and beautiful—when it is detached and cast up on the beach it fades and dies; and it is only as we are fixed on the rock Christ Jesus, and bask in the ocean of his love, that we are kept fresh and beautiful for Him. The delicate shells lie on the bed of the ocean in the depths, where they are unagitated by the storms above. We are told the deeps are calm, and amidst the roar and storm of life there is an abiding calm and settled peace. In the world—tribulation; but in Him—peace (see John xvi.). Have you found it?

> We bless Thee for thy peace, O Lord, deep as the unfathomed sea,
> Which falls like sunshine on the road of those that trust in Thee.

We must not forget that the treasures of the deep require searching for. The pearl-diver goes right to the bottom of the ocean after his treasures. God's treasures are all stored up for us in Christ, eternal life, joy, peace, strength, etc.: "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (Col. ii.); and heavenly knowledge is ours "if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures" (Prov. ii.).

Sea depths.—They tell us some of the depths of the sea we can never fathom. The prophet Micah, seeking to explain how completely the Lord puts away sin, says, "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Micah vii.), and, as true as it is we can never get to the bottom of the ocean depth, so true is it that the Lord's greatness, his judgment, and his riches are unsearchable (Ps. cxlv., Rom. xi., Eph. iii.); "His love passeth knowledge" (Eph. iii.). How much have you proved?

In closing, let us notice the sea is never still or resting. How it reminds us, especially on a stormy day, of the word of Isaiah: "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest" (ch. lvii.). Who can rest with a guilty conscience? Whose heart is unrelieved from the burden of sin? What a contrast are the prophet's words in ch. xxvi.: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee." And then, almost in the last chapter of the Bible (Rev. xxi.), we read, "There was no more sea." No more separation! All our barques will be "safely landed." Dear young friends, when you have crossed the ocean of life, on what shore will your barque be? Can you answer this question now?

NITA.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Christ's Resurrection.

Dear Sir,—Your readers will be grateful to Dr. Pierson for his long and interesting reply to the question which I ventured to raise on the above subject a week or so ago. Will you kindly extend to me the favour of space for a few remarks?

In a matter of this sort imagination and sentiment can have no place. We must carefully seek to ascertain the exact statements of Scripture, as Dr. Pierson has done, and then submit ourselves to the truth they contain. The event was absolutely unique—nothing that ever occurred can supply us with an analogy to support a conclusion one way or the other. May I state three sets of considerations which appear to me almost, if not quite, entirely in favour of the commonly received interpretation?

(1) The actual language employed by the Evangelist. There can be no difference of opinion about the manner of embalming. The body was wrapped round, and bound tightly by the linen cloths. It is equally certain that at the resurrection those cloths were left behind. But in what condition? The Apostle says they were lying (keimena), the head-cloth lying (keimenon), "wrapped up" (entetuligmenon). The words entulisso and eneileo are general in their use, and mean to wrap or roll up. The linen cloths were wrapped or rolled up, not left in disorder. That is the bare statement. Nothing whatever is implied as to what form or shape they were in. So far as the text is concerned we know nothing more than this. Then it may be said that the idea now under discussion is as probable as any other. I think not, for

(2) Had St. John seen "all the cloths rolled up as they were when on his body," surely he would have added some word or phrase to that effect. Such a startling fact would have been recorded for the comfort of all succeeding ages; and surely we should have had some reference to it in subsequent utterances of the apostles. But such a proof of a "miraculous resurrection" appears to have been unknown to them. Nor have we any evidence that these two disciples were firmer in their faith than the others were. The two going to Emmaus a few hours later knew all about Peter and John's morning visit, but they give no hint to the stranger (St. Luke xxiv. 24) that at any rate "one of their company" (John) was fully convinced by what he had seen. John did believe. But there are degrees of faith. I agree with Dr. Pierson that such a sight as he believed St. John to have seen "would have left no doubt that Christ had miraculously risen," and I presume we may assert the same of St. Peter. And yet we have no hint whatever that these two were ahead of the others in their belief. Indeed, comparing St. Luke xxiv. 12 with St. John xx. 6—9, it almost looks as if St. Peter saw nothing which absolutely convinced him. He went away, "wondering in himself." They all apparently "were slow of heart to believe"; gradually by "many infallible proofs," not by one overwhelming fact, they received the truth, proofs spread over those forty days. There was something in that sepulchre which left room for doubt, and consequently required further confirmation.

(3) If we desire to strengthen our "view of the unmistakable miracle of Christ's resurrection, and of the unsearchable and immeasurable power of his resurrection life in the believer," should not our attention be fixed on the sacred body rather than on the wrappings? To change and raise that is an unspeakably greater miracle than to get rid of the linen cloths. "In his own body He bore our sins on the tree," just as "his soul was made an offering for sin"; that body was laid in the grave, to all appearance death's victim; the Power manifested in his resurrection was proved to be Divine by its conquest of death, its deliverance of the body from corruption, its transformation of the body of humiliation into a body of glory. Whatever the arrangements of the linen cloths may have been, it is the veriest trifle compared with the effect on that which for a brief period they enclosed. Scripture never refers us to the linen cloths, but to the body. Not in them, but in this, shall we understand why the "power of his resurrection" is the Divine measure of the "exceeding greatness of God's power toward us who believe." The one might be explained away on the theory of human trickery, the other is confessedly beyond human skill to accomplish.

I would ask your readers to study carefully Rom. vi., especially 5, 6; vii. 4, 24, 25; Phil. iii. 10, 11, 21.

With all deference, and with a sincere desire to know the truth, I submit the above thoughts, only adding that I do not think any of the Greek fathers questioned the ordinary interpretation.—Yours truly,

Arthur Burnell.

Bilbao, Spain.

Dear Sir,—Where no plain statement of fact is made, and only inference is possible, it is unwise to be dogmatic; but I think many of the allusions to the burial and resurrection of our Lord, contained in the Gospels, tend to confirm the view set forth by Dr. Pierson in The Christian of September 8.

In John xix. 39-40 we are told that Nicodemus brought 100 lb. weight of myrrh and aloes (not the nauseous drug of that name sold by chemists, but the wood of a rare and valuable plant), and that these spices were applied to the body with linen cloths, "as the manner of the Jews is to bury." So far as I am able to find out, the method adopted by wealthy Jews in disposing of their dead was a modification of the Egyptian process of embalming, as follows: the body was washed, then tightly bandaged with bands of linen, between the layers of which was spread a paste made of pulverised spices, moistened with water. When complete, the appearance would be like that of a mummy, but the body not having been embalmed, would ere long begin to decay.

In a day or two the plaster bandage—as we may call it—would become hardened, and were it possible to remove the body without disturbing the case, the latter would retain its shape for an indefinite time, like the shell of a Cicada, after the escape of the imprisoned insect, only more complete.

Now, if this was what John saw on entering the tomb, we can understand the words "he saw and believed," for one glance would convince him that no human power could have removed the body without first stripping off the case in which it was enclosed.

When we remember that this same body, while remaining unchanged in outward appearance, was so altered in substance as to be able to enter a room the door of which was barred, it will not seem incredible that it should miraculously escape from the death-bands which enfolded it, and thus present to the sorrowing disciples a positive proof that the Lord had risen indeed, even as he had foretold.—Yours faithfully,

A. W. Douthwaite.

Racecourse Mission at Doncaster.

OUR staff numbered upwards of forty this year, including Mr. Josiah Nix, and in every sense of the word it was "Forward!" In spite of the intense heat, the meetings in the Market-place on the Sunday afternoon, and in the Corn Exchange at night, were well attended. The meetings on the course were times of great spiritual power, as was evidenced by the deep conviction on many faces and tear-filled eyes. It was our joy to deal with many inquirers after salvation. Night by night we had upwards of 1000 people present at the Market-place.

Among the many cases of conversion was one notable case of a professional tipster, whom we have known for the last ten years at Epsom races. During the meeting on Monday night he came to one of the workers and said, "It must be a grand thing to be a Christian." "It is that, my friend, and it would just suit you." They had a long talk, and the next night he came again, saying it was no use, he had tried all day, but could not work. Both got on their knees, and the question was settled. The same evening he was at the meeting and gave his testimony. This caused a great sensation, because of the number of racing men present who knew him. He destroyed his tipping cards, etc., and spent the rest of the week with the evangelist on the course, bearing his testimony to salvation. Friends wishing to join the Mission or help on its work may communicate with me.

South London Christian Union.

THE organisation, familiar under the above title to South Londoners generally, has for its chief objects the combination of all believers of Evangelical denominations and missions in definite efforts to make known the glad tidings of salvation. Prayer meetings, conferences, gatherings for mutual help, and especially vigorous attacks on the strongholds of sin, are the chief characteristics of the work, which has been attended by remarkable manifestation of blessing.

The Union's annual meeting, which was held on the 13th inst., in the Public Hall, Peckham, was instinct with enthusiastic feeling. Mr. Alfred Holness, president of the Union, had a very satisfactory task in his position as chairman; for not only the bubbling energy of the workers, but the obvious soundness of the work, imparted a cheering vividness to the gathering. Addresses were given by Revs. Morrison Cumming, J. C. Postans, and Frank Smith, Messrs. R. C. Morgan, John Jackson, Ned Wright, Cook, and other friends.

Mr. Hardwick, secretary of the Union, gave a sketch of the rise and progress of the movement, specially alluding to the evangelistic work, which aimed at the direct conversion of sinners, and had been especially successful in a series of Gospel meetings held regularly throughout the summer.

The committee have been able, as a result of this gratifying gathering, to secure the large Public Hall for Gospel meetings, which will be continued on Sunday nights throughout the coming winter, and to arrange an extensive programme of spiritual gatherings to be held on week nights in the different churches in the vicinity. The headquarters of the society is at Peckham Rye Mission Hall, Princes-street, Peckham.

Ragged School Work in Dublin.

THE attendance at the Lurgan-street Ragged Schools continues to progress. On Sundays the schools are opened to men and women, who come and sit round in classes to hear the Scriptures taught.

According to the latest report of the work, the district around Lurgan-street has not improved, except in the paving and lighting of the streets, but the tenement houses in which our children live are twenty-five years older, and the wonder is how they continue to prop each other up. The parents of our poor children are frequently their chief hindrance. At a Gospel meeting one evening two women arrived late, and sat together on a form near the door. As the meeting proceeded, occasional mutterings emanated from that quarter which soon burst into a loud and uncomplimentary crossfire between them. A worker approached to try and subdue them, but they suddenly seized each other by the hair, and struggling together fell backwards over the form to the floor. Still fighting they were put into the street. Two little girls who loved the Mission School and their teachers sat by with tearful eyes. They each must go home and call one of these women "mother." But by means of the schools a better life is open to them, and many cheerfully embrace their opportunity, and fit themselves for useful service.

There are three divisions at Lurgan-street—boys, girls, and infants. Many of the boys earn a little after school hours by selling evening newspapers. Others attend night school, trying to make up for lost time, and to obtain permanent situations. The infants constitute a large majority. Poverty and illness are often the only reasons for many of our children being so ill-clad as they sometimes appear.

The average attendance at the day schools is 128. A night school for big boys was attended by numbers varying from 18 to 53, and the Sunday-school register shows 3,789 attendances in the year. At each of these schools food is given to those who need it, the total number of free meals given in 1897 being 64,912.

Kingsdown (Kent) Baptist Church.—Owing to an unhappy mischance, by which the trust deed prepared at the time of the building's erection was never signed, it is found necessary to purchase the property at once. A church has been formed, and it is found that to buy, fence, and secure the property for the use of the people for ever a sum of £150 will be required. Help will be thankfully received by the pastor, Rev. R. W. Clarke, Lime Villa, St. Mary Cray, Kent.

Obituary.

REV. D. JONES.

For nearly half a century Mr. Jones had presided over the Welsh Congregational Church at Ford, Pembrokeshire, and he was a tower of strength to every good cause in the county. His recent decease is widely mourned. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in the district. A large number of old men and women were present. Many of them had painfully trudged considerable distances in order to be present to pay their last tribute of respect.

MRS. WATSON, CAPE COLONY.

This Christian sister, who died at Mowbray, Cape Colony, on September 12, was for many years a well-known worker in Bathgate, her native town, and Edinburgh, where she resided for a considerable period.

Possessing gifts of a high order, she was in great demand as a public speaker. She took a great interest in the work of the Faith Mission and the Railway Mission, and was one of their best helpers. Her home was a centre of Christian hospitality, and the work of rescuing her fallen sisters occupied a large place in her heart. Five years ago she left Scotland for Cape Colony, where she had a wider sphere for her energy and sympathy. She carried on work among soldiers and in connection with the prisons.

REV. THOS. JAS. LESLIE,

The death is reported of Rev. Thos. James Leslie, pastor of Salem Congregational Church, Hull. Mr. Leslie had been suffering during the past three months from cancer on the liver. For several days prior to his death he was unconscious. Formerly he was a member of the New Connexion, and a local preacher. After carrying on a successful ministry at Appledore, North Devon, he received a call to the church at Swinton about twenty years ago. At first he undertook the joint pastorate of the Swinton and Mexborough churches, but after about twelve months' labour he was taken to be pastor of the Mexborough church exclusively. Leaving Mexborough he became pastor of the South Eston Church, near Middlesbrough. Here he established the Northern Independent, a paper devoted to religious intelligence. The next pastorate was at Hull. He leaves a widow, five sons, and two daughters.

REV. JOHN LAWSON, SELKIRK.

This esteemed minister of the U.P. Church, Selkirk, died on September 12, after a brief illness. His life has been abundant in Gospel labour, and has been attended with results for which many at home and abroad will bless his memory. Very few country churches have supplied so many earnest students and useful ministers as did that of Mr. Lawson. Deeply interested in all that pertained to the social, moral, and religious welfare of his native town, he gladly co-operated in any schemes which had for their object the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. Owing to bad health he had not preached much during the past twelve months. He had returned from a holiday, and had prepared a sermon which he intended to preach on the first Sabbath of September. He was unable to do so, though present at both services. He took suddenly ill during the week, and passed peacefully away at the age of seventy-three.

SIR WILLIAM GRAY.

Sir William Gray, the well-known shipbuilder of West Hartlepool, has passed away at the age of seventy-six. He was seized with a paralytic stroke on Sunday week as he was preparing to go to church, and never rallied. A native of Blyth, Northumberland, he commenced business as a linendraper at Hartlepool in 1843, subsequently taking up shipbuilding at the same place. After the failure of Messrs. Pile, Spence, and Co., in 1866, he took over these yards, and afterwards added two other yards. He also established the Central Marine Engine Works, and carried on the steel works owned by his late son, Matthew. Sir William usefully filled a number of important positions, and was in the Jubilee year (1887) elected West Hartlepool's first Mayor. He was a Presbyterian, and his benefactions to the local churches of that body amounted to £18,000. He also gave £6000 to other local Nonconformist churches, and he was a large contributor to the London Presbytery for the liquidation of outstanding debts.

MR. J. J. COLMAN.

Many will learn with sorrow of the death of Mr. Jeremiah James Colman, head of the large mustard manufacturing firm bearing his name, and who represented Norwich in Parliament for twenty-four years. He had served the offices of mayor and sheriff of Norwich, and at the time of his death was an alderman of the city, a D.L. of the county, and a magistrate of the city and county.

Mr. Colman was a munificent supporter of movements for religious equality, for the improvement of popular education, and for the promotion of peace. He was always ready for any call of charity, and was interested in everything which tended to raise the tone of politics, or to apply Christian principles to political affairs. Since leaving Parliament he divided his time between his large but not pretentious establishment at Carrow, next the works, and the pretty little estate at Corton, near Lowestoft, which he carved out of cliff and sand dune, and protected with a stout sea-wall. In early life he was attached to the Baptists; during recent years he was a member of Dr. Barrett's congregation at Princes-street Congregational Church, Norwich.

DR. ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, OF BATHURST.

News has reached England, that, at the age of seventy-seven, Dr. Geikie, whose memory will long be associated with the Presbyterian Church at Bathurst, Australia, has passed away. He was a brother of Dr. Cunningham Geikie, and cousin to Dr. Archibald Geikie, director of the Geological Survey of Great Britain. In the year 1843 Dr. Geikie emigrated with his father to Canada, where they attached themselves to the Presbyterian Church, and there, two years later, the deceased was ordained to his first charge, a wild spot in the Dominion known as Warwick. After energetic work for the Master in various parts of the world, he ultimately settled in New South Wales in 1861. He laboured at Bathurst for a quarter of a century, and was responsible for the erection of the present fine church of St. Stephen's, which occupies a central position in the city. On April 25, 1895, the doctor celebrated the jubilee of his ministry. During his long residence in the Western district he became very popular, and was ever to the front in matters affecting both Church and State. His relations with the clergy and members of other churches were of the most cordial character.

DR. JOHN HALL, NEW YORK,

The death is announced, at the age of seventy, of Rev. John Hall, D.D., minister of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. Dr. Hall had of late been in poor health, and was seeking rest and convalescence in the scenes of his Irish boyhood. He was a native of county Armagh, but died at the residence of his sister in county Down.

After completing his studies at Queen's College, Belfast, Dr. Hall received licence to preach at the early age of twenty, and laboured for a while in the West of Ireland. Taking a charge in Dublin, he was sent as delegate, by the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, to an assembly of Churches in the United States. Shortly after returning home he was invited to fill the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Church in New York, one of the first churches of the order in the United States. He accepted the invitation, and from the close of 1867 until his death he occupied the position with honour and success, also since 1881 filling the prominent and honourable office of Chancellor of the University of the City of New York without salary. Dr. Hall published numerous discourses and sermons, and, in conjunction with Mr. G. H. Stuart, a volume on "American Evangelists." He was a talented writer for the domestic circle, but it is as an evangelist, and as the tutor of other evangelists, that his work is likely to be most highly regarded.

MRS. EDWARD CROSSLEY.

We record with deep regret the death of Mrs. Edward Crossley, of Bermerside, Halifax, in the fifty-fifth year of her age. The daughter of the late Sir Edward Baines, she was a woman of amiable disposition and noble character, and an active supporter of religious and philanthropic work. Mr. Crossley, for whom widespread sympathy is felt in his great loss, is the present head of the firm of John Crossley and Sons, Dean Clough, Halifax, and formerly represented the Sowerby Division of the West Riding in Parliament.

Mrs. Crossley's life was one continual striving for the good of others. She was a prominent Congregationalist, and rendered great service to three Halifax churches—Park, Square, and Heath. She also did useful work in connection with the Crossley Orphanage at Halifax. A Sunday-school teacher from her girlhood, she only resigned her Young Women's Class at the Heath Congregational Church during her last illness, yielding reluctantly to the behests of her doctors at a time when restoration to health seemed to be promised on the condition of absolute cessation from all such work. She was connected with the British Women's Temperance Association from the formation in 1876, and up to 1893 she was vice-president. She was a founder of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, and was an active member and a vice-president of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union. She served also on the board of management of the Women's Inebriate Home, High Flatts, near Huddersfield.

In educational matters she took a keen and practical interest. The Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice early secured her services, and she had a place on the executive of that body. Much, too, was done by her in connection with movements for the assistance of friendless and weak-minded girls. Of these and similar causes she was a generous supporter, and most of them benefited largely, also, from her counsels, her clear discernment, and unsparing attention to the duties of the offices vested in her. Whilst she did her whole duty by her neighbour, nowhere were the high and beautiful qualities of her nature better seen than in the close companionship of near relatives and friends.

In Memoriam.

SARAH GERALDINA STOCK.

"Died in the holidays"—with few to linger
Round that sad spot where she made last brief stay—
So passed from earth unheard God's own brave singer
Who led the van of missions with her lay.

That clarion lay so thrilling, deep, and tender,
Bright with the risen brightness of her Lord,
Roused the long-slumbering Church with swift surrender
To buckle on the Spirit's rescuing sword.

Large faith was hers, intensity of aim,
Sequestered piety of earlier time,
Deep adoration for one glorious Name,
A chastened passion for all lofty rhyme.

Then a low Voice caught her quick ear alone,
"Wilt thou go with this Man?"—and she was gone!

CHARLES A. FOX.

Personalia.

Pastor Faithfull, of the Chamberi Mission, Madrid, writes that nearly £400 has been received towards the £500 mentioned in his letter of June 1st as required for needful additions to and alteration of the chapel and school premises. His address is Paseo de Areneros 6 provl., Madrid.

Canon Tristram.—Many friends will hear with regret that this well-known ecclesiastic has again met with an accident, having slipped and fallen at Edinburgh, and seriously injured his left knee. Two years ago he broke his right leg when travelling in Palestine.

Mr. F. H. Hutchins, who, for the past eight years, has been actively associated with Mr. C. Russell Hurditch in the work of the Evangelistic Mission, and has conducted many successful missions in different parts of the country, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Harmondsworth Baptist Church, and hopes to commence his ministry on October 23.

London's Jewish Children.—Mr. James Dunn, secretary of the Jewish fund of the London City Mission, writes:—"Our seven Jewish missionaries have sent some hundreds of poor Jewish children for a day, a week, or a fortnight into the country or to the seaside. Still there are hundreds pleading to go before the summer ends. Friends may yet make it possible for us to let these poor children from the slums have the pleasure of a sight of the country." The office of the London City Mission is 8, Bridewell-place, E.C.

Items of Interest.

The United States has refused to accept Turkey's repudiation of responsibility for the Armenian massacres.

As one result of the recent visit of Rev. J. Beveridge, of Wolverhampton, to Norway, arrangements are being made to introduce Free Church Councils in a number of towns in that country.

Several important reforms have been promulgated by Imperial edict in China; among others a postal service throughout the country, the right of all subjects to memorialise the throne, and the periodical publication of Government accounts.

The German Emperor attended the funeral of the late Empress of Austria.—Jewels belonging to the late Empress, valued at £600,000, are to be realised, and the proceeds applied to religious and charitable purposes.

Ninety-two Members of Parliament have authorised their names to be appended to a message issued by the International Arbitration League, thanking the Tsar for proposing a conference of the Powers to consider a reduction of armaments.

The Countess de Casa Valencia says that the London fund for the relief of Spanish sick and wounded soldiers is only £1600, the whole of which has been distributed by the Queen Regent. Further contributions are urgently needed, and may be sent to the Countess at "Malvernhurst," Meads, Eastbourne.

China.—Rioting has taken place near Chung-King. The French and American Missions have been attacked, and the former burnt.

Crete.—The Great Powers have agreed that the Bashi-Bazouks must be expelled from the island, and that the entire Turkish army must quit. Admiral Noel's demand for the disarming of the Mussulman population is to be carried out. A European force is to replace the Turkish garrison.

The Far East.—The Marquis Ito's visit to Pekin has revived rumours of a pending Chino-Japanese alliance. An agreement has been signed at Seoul for the construction of the Seoul-Fusan Railway. —The Chinese Government has found it necessary to start an official journal, and has chosen The Daily Chinese Progress as its medium, which is published at Shanghai.

Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools.—Through the generosity of Mr. J. R. Roberts, a new wing for boys has been added to these schools at Purley, at a cost of £9000. The new building was formally opened on Saturday last.

Deaf and Dumb Females.—We gather from the annual report of the British Asylum that the work is progressing very satisfactorily. The committee remark that during the past fifty years "many institutions for the education of deaf and dumb children have been established; but, as regards adults and children and young women above the age at which admission can be obtained to educational institutions, no other such as this exists in the United Kingdom. Indeed, the unique character of this charity constitutes its chief claim for a more extended and liberal support. Its objects are:—(1). To educate or continue the education of adults and children above school age. (2). To give industrial and technical training, as well as moral and religious instruction. (3) To provide a home and protection to those hopelessly precluded from doing anything towards their own maintenance. The Secretary, The Asylum, Lower Clapton, N.E., will supply information.

Shipwrecked Mariners' Society. — One remarkable feature of this Society is that it is not only supported by the contributions of the charitable, but largely by payments of seamen themselves. One of its objects is to give rewards for saving life on the high seas. A further good service the Society has done by ridding the country of "turnpike sailors," assuming the garb of shipwrecked seamen with pretended tales of distress. Honorary agents of the Society always forward, direct to their destination, all genuine cases, thus leaving no excuse for begging. The number of persons assisted in various ways since the Society was instituted in 1839 now exceeds half a million, the figures for 1897 (11,303) bringing the total to 500,365. A somewhat augmented income has provided means for an increase of the relief distributed among the seafaring classes. As, however, the expenditure in a cause so urgent and so varied in its phases is virtually limited only by the receipts, it is hoped that future years may even produce an improvement in this encouraging aspect of the Society's condition. The secretary is Mr. G. E. Maude, 26, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East, S.W.

The Jewish Anniversaries.

THE solemn season in Jewry has come round once more; and Mr. A. J. Lev writes to us from 93, Savernake-road, South Hampstead, N.W.:—"Saturday and Sunday, September 17 and 18, is the Jewish New Year; it is a solemn feast. The 26th inst., the great Day of Atonement, is a solemn fast. The ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement are the Ten Days of Repentance; the Saturday before the Day of Atonement is called the Sabbath of Repentance. The Talmud teaches that on New Year's Day everything is written down and decreed what is to happen to each living person, and that on the Day of Atonement it is sealed, but that repentance, alms-giving, and prayer will turn away a bad decree."

Mr. Ley asks for prayer that God's Spirit may be poured out on the Jews throughout the world. His correspondence with Jews has brought him some interesting letters. A young lady to whom he sent "The Conversion of Lydia Montefiore" and "Old Simeon" writes to him: "I could not understand the New Testament at first, but it came to me in time. How happy I should have been to meet a kind Mr. Cohen like Miss Montefiore, or good and loving Waldhaus people like Old Simeon, to explain the many doubts and fears which came to me at that time. But the Good Shepherd did it all for me, so I am happy to say, with the help of my Saviour and Friend, I was led on and on, until my faith and love for Him became very strong. I now believe in the Lord and love Him with all my heart."

Disaster in the West Indies.

DETAILS have come to hand of a disastrous hurricane that has visited the Windward Islands in the West Indies, and which has been the most destructive ever known there. Thousands of people have been rendered homeless, hundreds killed, factories blown down, houses and bridges swept away, cocoa estates destroyed, and churches demolished. Three large ships were driven ashore at St. Vincent, and many smaller vessels stranded.

In the telegram received at the Colonial Office from Sir C. A. Moloney, Governor of the Windward Islands, he says: "The people are flocking into Kingston from all the country round for shelter and food, which I am endeavouring to supply for the moment, until the weather clears and we can take the damage in detail."

Such a demand upon the resources of the Governor will test them to the utmost. Help should be rendered the unfortunate sufferers without a moment's delay. The people themselves are utterly unable to meet the claims which the fearful disaster demands.

The Queen has sent a message of sympathy, and the Lord Mayor has opened a Mansion House Relief Fund.

Japanese Men of War.—Miss M. McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, 62, Coolfin-road, Custom-road, E., in view of the early arrival in London of a number of Japanese men-of-war's men, asks friends interested in her work to help her by sending book-bags for these visitors.

An Old Age and Sickness Provision Scheme is being brought forward amongst the Primitive Methodists. It is intended to raise a capital fund of £25,000, towards which Mr. W. P. Hartley, of Liverpool, has promised £5000 on condition that the remaining £20,000 is subscribed by the connexion. The object of the fund is to provide sick allowance and an old-age pension, in return for certain small quarterly payments, to the local preachers, of whom there are over 16,000 in the denomination, and class leaders, Sunday school teachers, and other officials.

Capetown Y.W.C.A.—We gather, from the interesting booklet report just to hand, that, in addition to a useful work of a social character, the Bible-classes and mission branch have proved sources of blessing. The home is almost always full of permanent boarders and room holders, most of whom have come across the ocean from the homeland, and are engaged in business in the city; others have come down from the country, having been left fatherless, and thus are obliged to learn how to earn a livelihood; some are waiting for situations, etc., etc. Many casual visitors, among whom have been missionaries, Christian workers, hospital nurses, and teachers have been received; while quite a third of the number have been those arriving by the boats, requiring situations as teachers, mothers' helps, domestic servants, or are passing through Cape Town on their way to England or other parts of the world. Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr has recently become a trustee of the institution. An appeal is being made for £8000, to provide a new building.

The Y.M.C.A.

SCOTTISH CONFERENCE.

THE annual conference of the Scottish Associations was commenced on Tuesday evening, September 13, in Edinburgh. It was the largest assembly of the kind ever held, no fewer than 270 delegates attending. They were received in the Masonic Hall by the Lord Provost, the magistrates and the Town Council. The welcome on behalf of the churches was given by Rev. J. F. W. Grant, of St. Stephen's, and on behalf of the local Association by Dr. Carment, the president, now in his eighty-second year. Mr. Archibald Colville, of Dunfermline, responded, and said there were now in Scotland 259 affiliated Associations, with a membership of 25,330, showing a considerable advance on the figures of the previous year.

On Wednesday morning, when the chair was occupied by Mr. George Kydd, of Montrose, the subject of "The drifting away of young men from the Church, and how to remedy it" was introduced by Mr. William Stewart, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Dundee, and Dr. James Wishart, president of the Innerleithen Association. Mr. Stewart held that the cause was not disbelief in religion, not opposition to it, but simply indifference and lack of thought. Dr. Wishart said he gathered on reliable authority that, taking into account the increase of the population and the number of places of worship, there was a much larger number of church-going young men to-day than there was fifty years ago. In the aggregate, he believed, young men were rather coming forward to help the Church than drifting from it. But the Church was not keeping them. There was little or no sympathy for young men in large numbers of their churches. Looking at the causes within the Church for the drifting of young men from it, he said sermons were too long, too theoretical, and lacking in attraction, that church services were too dull, and that the people had too small a share in them. Outside the Church the main cause of drifting of young men was thoughtlessness, and not unbelief. Love of sport on Saturday afternoons, providing excuse for a Sunday forenoon in bed, was gaining ground. Some of the causes outside the Church were laxity by parents in the matter of church attendance, neglect of family worship, and the bad habit of running down ministers. All these things tended to promote irregularity in church attendance, which was one of the most fruitful causes of young men drifting from the Church. Let them endeavour to get every member and associate of the Y.M.C.A. to be regular in attendance at church, and much good would be effected.

In the course of the subsequent discussion, which was full of interest, Mr. John Connall, Glasgow, held that one great cause of drifting was the want of fixity of opinion on the great fundamentals of our common Christianity. Rev. James Harvey, Lady Glenorchy's Free Church, Edinburgh, said he found a flagrant cause of non-churchgoing among young men to be the way in which the Saturday afternoon holiday was spent.

Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler, secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association, an auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A., reported upon a three weeks' campaign with the troops on Salisbury Plain, where there had been large meetings, with encouraging results.

The Master of Polwarth presided over a public meeting in the Free Assembly Hall in the evening, when addresses were given by Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D., of London, Rev. Professor Orr, of Edinburgh, and Mr. John Colville, M.P.

Thursday morning was devoted to the consideration of the topic, "How best to develop and utilise the Fellowship Associations and United Y.M.C.A.'s as aggressive agencies," introduced by Mr. Andrew Alston, LL.B., of Carluke. In the afternoon the delegates took an excursion to Hawthornden and Roslin Chapel.

The annual conference of the Italian Young Men's Christian Associations has just been held in Turin. The chair was occupied by Comm. Emilio Piovanelli, president of the Italian National Council. The meetings were largely attended and enthusiastic, and, it is believed, will result in a great increase of Association effort throughout the whole of Italy.

THE BOOK WORLD.

LITERATURE FOR CHRISTIAN STUDENTS.

The international convention of Christian students, held at Cleveland, Ohio, in February last, was the largest gathering of its kind, and it is fitting that the published proceedings* should constitute the biggest and most comprehensive collection of facts relating to the great world field ever offered to the friends and students of missions. It is, in brief, a wonderful encyclopædia of impressive and authoritative statements with reference to the needs and opportunities of heathendom. What is required at this crisis in the history of Christian missions is an intelligent and reliable setting forth of the progress made and of the vast gulfs of spiritual necessity that have yet to be bridged over. In this remarkable volume we have that desideratum supplied. An excellent index helps the reader in referring to particular places, persons, and themes, and altogether we have in the book a miniature library on the great subject of which it treats.

The proceedings here reported were evidently planned with system and judgment. First of all the Conference was led to a study of the principles and problems underlying the work of foreign missions, generally and specifically. In the early part of the book these topics are very ably dealt with by expert minds. A sample of these utterances may be found in the clear and highly instructive summaries of the great false religions of the world, by Dr. David Burrell, which have appeared for some weeks in our pages. It is impossible in a short notice to refer to the many aspects of missionary effort and missionary study which the book contains, but we hope many friends will procure and peruse these stimulating pages for themselves.

A great portion of the volume consists of addresses describing the principal mission fields—e.g., South America, India, China, Japan, and Korea, Ceylon and the Straits Settlements, Turkey, Persia, Egypt, Africa, etc. The speakers as a rule had the inestimable advantage of personal knowledge of the fields they represented, and their pictures, here reproduced, form a kaleidoscope of Gospel effort, human need, and Christian responsibility seldom found within the same covers. Then come papers or addresses on different phases of Gospel work among the heathen—evangelistic, educational, medical, and so forth. Besides these there are the weighty utterances of qualified speakers on the best ways of increasing missionary knowledge and zeal in home churches. The reporting and editing seem to be admirably done, and we very cordially commend the book to our readers. In view of its contents it is a marvel of cheapness.

The Culture of Manhood. By Silas K. Hocking. (1s. Horace Marshall & Sons.) Most wise and timely words on work, books, friendships, and personal religion. There is no striving after profundity, but much wholesome plain speech.

Mr. T. F. Unwin is publishing a remarkably cheap edition of Sir Walter Scott's famed Waverley Novels, called the "Century Edition." The latest issue is The Fortunes of Nigel. The type is clear, the shape handy, and the price in cloth only a shilling.

A prettily bound booklet, Blossom and Weed, by Mr. Godfrey Dodd (Gay & Bird), contains seven brief poems in blank verse, enforcing, by parable, high moral lessons. The author secures the friendliness of his readers by the heart he puts into his work.

Messrs. W. & R. Chambers have added to their New Series of Popular Biographies Tennyson: The Story of His Life (1s.), by Evan J. Cuthbertson. The pages are full of interest, and will be specially welcome to those who cannot read the life-story of the poet as more fully told.

England and America. By Washington Gladden. (6d. Jas. Clarke & Co.) These high-toned and well-informed addresses, delivered in this country during the past summer, will certainly help to strengthen good feeling and mutual co-operation between Great Britain and her grown daughter across the sea.

The Queen of the Home. By Lucy H. Yates. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) In nine brief but weighty chapters the author sets forth the sphere and influence of a true woman in the home, which is her peculiar kingdom. The book is highly to be commended for the thoughtful perusal of young and old alike.

Some articles on the Modern Marriage Market that appeared in a ladies' monthly magazine have been published in book form. (1s. Hutchinson & Co.) The writers are Marie Corelli, Lady Jeune, Mrs. Steel, and the Countess of Malmesbury. The opinions expressed do not always coincide, but all are worth reading.

God Planted a Garden. By Rev. W. A. Wilson. (1s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Here we have an excursion into the wide and fruitful field of the analogies between God's working in nature and in grace. Without any affectation of scientific knowledge, the author gathers many lessons and suggestions that will be helpful to the serious reader.

Midland Sketches. By W. J. Gordon. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) We have here the results of the author's visits to various Midland towns associated with some special industry, such as lace making, cycle manufacture, carpet weaving, etc. The articles are clear and popular in style, and are well illustrated. The book forms a most interesting peep into the leading industrial marts of central England.

Those who know William Lincoln's volumes on portions of the New Testament will welcome Lectures on the Epistle to the Ephesians. (1s. 6d., post free. John Ritchie, Kilmarnock.) To such as want a suggestive guide in the reading of this marvellously rich Epistle, with its light on the believer's standing, state, walk, and warfare, we confidently commend this unpretending but thoughtful and helpful little book.

The Housewife's Reference. By Mrs. de Salis. (2s. 6d. Hutchinson & Co.) This comprehensive "treatise on culinary and household subjects" may be described as a practical introduction to the art and exercise of modern housekeeping. In the department of cooking, special attention is given to dishes and condiments not of the common sort, these latter being found in ordinary cookery books. The numerous rules and hints given will prove highly serviceable.

Pocket Dictionary of Hygiene. By C. T. Kingzett and D. Homfray. (2s. 6d. Baillière, Tyndall & Cox, 20, King William-street, Strand.) In this most useful and practical pocket manual, the more common forms of disease, and many of the articles or substances composing remedies, or relating to health, are simply and clearly described. While specially intended for the use of medical and sanitary authorities, the little work will prove invaluable to the general reader.

Dr. Bullinger's forthcoming work on Figures of Speech used in the Bible: Explained and Illustrated, will fill a place peculiarly its own, and that a very important one, among the helps to Bible students. In order to bring the work within the reach of many who could not otherwise buy it, facilities will be afforded for procuring it in parts. Full and interesting particulars are given in the prospectus, copies of which may be had from Dr. Bullinger, 25, Connaught-street, London, W.

The story of the inception and foundation of the British and Foreign Bible Society has been admirably retold in A Memorable Room, in which Mr. Henry Morris, vice-chairman of the committee, relates the recent identification of the offices of Joseph Hardcastle, in Old Swan Stairs, Upper Thames-street, where early meetings of the committees of the L.M.S. and R.T.S. were held, and the idea of the B. and F.B.S. was originated. The pages are admirably illustrated, and afford deeply interesting glimpses of Bible work in "the day of small things." The facsimile letters are particularly welcome. (1s., post free. Bible Society's Office, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

We have more than once indicated the useful character of Thimm's "Self-Taught" library for the study of foreign languages. German Self-Taught is like its predecessors in general features, being provided with vocabularies, elementary grammar notes and phrases, and phonetic pronunciation. The fact that there are conversations, among other things, on photography and cycling shows that the book is thoroughly up-to-date in its appeal to the travelling public (1s. and 1s. 6d.). The Marlborough series of Foreign Commercial Correspondence, as adapted in the handbook German and English, by Mathias Meissner, has been revised and improved by Mr. Thimm, and should prove of great service in its new and enlarged form. (1s. E. Marlborough & Co.)

A capital "sermon story" which has had a remarkable run in America, is In His Steps: "What would Jesus do?" by Charles M. Sheldon (paper, 1s. 6d., cloth 3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson). Christian Endeavourers and temperance workers have welcomed the book with special heartiness. Rev. F. B. Meyer writes a preface to the authorised English edition, in which he says: "The author's purpose is to draw attention to the ethical teachings of Jesus, and to enforce the necessity of compliance with them on the part of those who bear his name. And who shall say that there is no need? Are we not all too prone to set aside large tracts of his legislation as impossible and impracticable in the present day? We may not be able to follow our author in all his applications of the divine principles of the Sermon on the Mount. Liberty must be granted to the individual conscience. But the book will set its readers thinking, will stir their consciences, and lead to that self-questioning which is a first step towards life of the noblest quality."

A copy of an original water-colour drawing, recently sketched in Denmark by the Princess of Wales, was presented as a supplement to the Gentlewoman of last week, by permission of her Royal Highness.

Nannie; or, "The Peety o' It," by J. H. B., is a touching story, aiming to show the saving power of Jesus—in fact, that He "takes the devil's castaways." (1d. Christian Literature Co., 3, Lochrin-terrace, Edinburgh.)

A booklet of great interest to medical practitioners and nurses is Chloroform: Its Absolutely Safe Administration, by Robert Bell, M.D., F.F.P.S., senior physician to the Glasgow Hospital for Diseases peculiar to Women. (1s. R. L. Holmes, 3 and 5, Dunlop-street, Glasgow.)

Mr. T. W. Partridge, of the Stockwell Orphanage, sends us a copy of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," arranged as a vocal march. (Full music size, 1s. 6d. net. Vocal parts, 2d. net). The composition is vigorous, and moves with a good "swing." Doubtless in the hands of the Orphanage and other choirs the piece is destined to become popular. (Weekes & Co.)

Messrs. Headley Brothers will shortly publish Isaac Sharp: an Apostle of the Nineteenth Century; a record of the life of the oldest Quaker minister in active service, recently deceased. As our readers know, he travelled from Greenland to New Zealand, preaching the Gospel. Twice he circled the globe, returning from one journey of seven years at seventy-seven, and penetrating far into the interior of China in his eighty-seventh year.

A pamphlet of great interest to housewives is Cookery for Working Men's Wives, by Martha H. Gordon, teacher of domestic economy classes at Govan, Scotland. There is not only quantity but quality in this publication, as will be obvious from the fact that Professor McKendrick writes a commendatory preface and Dr. J. B. Russell an introduction. Moreover, Dr. W. Snodgrass contributes notes on the benefits to be derived from cooking food, and hints are thrown in on washing and sanitation, and "what to do till the doctor comes." (1d. Alexander Gardner.)

Hastings.—The South Coast Convention for the deepening of spiritual life is fixed to take place in the Brassey Institute, Claremont, Hastings, October 24 to 28. Various well-known speakers are expected. The convener is Rev. F. Whitfield, St. Mary's Church, Hastings.

Women Prisoners.—The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Prisons are concerned in the welfare of female prisoners. They are anxious to secure the services of discreet and judicious ladies in the locality of Her Majesty's prisons to undertake the visiting at regular and methodical periods of female prisoners, with a view not only of endeavouring to provide for deserving cases on discharge, but to converse with them in their cells, or of addressing lectures to them in a selected class.

Moravian Missions.—We are sorry to learn from Rev. W. Wetton Cox, of the London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions (7, New Court, W.C.), that the society is face to face with a serious and growing deficiency, already exceeding £12,000. This has arisen, not from increased expenditure, much as it is needed, but almost entirely from the widespread erroneous impression as to the terms of the Morton legacy. So grave is the situation that, unless the deficiency be soon met, the society will have no choice but to withdraw from some of their most richly blessed fields.

Railways and the Sabbath.—The Shareholders' Union for the defence of the Sabbath is actively agitating on behalf of the interests it has at heart. Memorials have been presented to the Great Western and London and North-Western Companies, and the question of Sunday work on railways has been brought to the front at the shareholders' half-yearly meetings. There were interesting discussions, but unfortunately the matter was subsequently shelved. The union is, however, undismayed, and the hope is expressed that Christian shareholders will come forward in greater numbers, in order that the aggressive effort may be more thoroughly developed. Correspondence on the subject is invited by the secretary, Mr. Jas. Fox Wilson, 22, Western-road, St. Leonard's, Sussex.

Vagrancy Amendment Act.—In view of the interest taken by many Christians in the new Act, and the desirability of bringing about a better state of affairs socially, it may be advisable to state that, coming into force on October 12, the Bill (which, by the way, does not apply to England or Scotland) provides that male persons living wholly or in part on the earnings of immoral women, or in any public place persistently soliciting for immoral purposes, shall be deemed as rogues and vagabonds, and may be dealt with accordingly. In cases of suspicion, by information on oath a Court may issue a warrant authorising the police to enter, search, and arrest the male person suspected, and if he be proved to live with or be habitually in the company of a prostitute, and have no visible means of subsistence, he shall, unless he can satisfy the court to the contrary, be deemed to be knowingly "living on the earnings" as above stated.

Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, states that he is arranging for twenty-five to thirty missions to prisons, and hopes to be able to hold them annually in each prison.

The Bishop of Worcester has issued an appeal to employers of labour asking for permission to hold services in their several workshops during a special Church Mission to be held in the diocese in November.

The committee of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation, at their last fortnightly meeting, considered thirty-five applications from distressed clergymen, widows, and orphan daughters, and, in addition to gifts of clothing in fourteen cases, made grants amounting to £388, including £140 for holiday grants.

The Hon. Mrs. W. H. Gladstone has laid the foundation-stone of a new church in the rapidly-growing district of Shotton, near Hawarden. Shotten forms part of the ecclesiastical parish of Hawarden, and the nucleus of the fund for the erection of the church was formed by the generous contribution of a thousand pounds by the late Mr. Gladstone.

The chaplain of the Missions to Seamen on the Tees has received a gift of £300 to clear off the remaining sum due for the Missions to Seamen Church and Institute at Middlesbrough. A Jubilee wing enlarging the building, which is overcrowded with seagoing men of various nations, is also near completion, and partially subscribed for by sailors and their friends.

Among recent shipments from the Bible House to the C.M.S. Mission in Uganda have been 2000 Luganda Testaments, 5000 copies of St. Matthew, and 2500 copies of St. John. In addition to these, the committee made last month a further grant, "on missionary terms," of 2500 copies of St. Luke, 2500 more of St. John, and 2500 copies of the four Gospels and Acts in one volume.

The Archdeacon of Dorset presided at a meeting at Park House, Wimborne, on Friday last, in aid of the work of the Church Army among the outcast and destitute. Strong testimony was borne by the chaplain of H.M. prison, Wormwood Scrubbs, to the value of the Church Army Social work, and at the close of the meeting a substantial measure of support was promised for the work.

At a recent meeting in a Cambridgeshire village Dr. Joseph Parker said nothing would delight him more than to be set at liberty for three months every year from the church to which he ministered, and work amongst ministers in the country.

Memorial-stones have been laid at Wheatley, Oxon (Rev. J. Plommer), of a new Sunday-school in connection with the Congregational church on land presented by Mr. W. Iliffe Pike and his sister. The place of worship is also to be improved. The whole cost is estimated at £600, towards which three friends have contributed £300.

Rev. John Jameson closed his ministry at Arundel-square Church, Barnsbury, N., after six years' most successful pastorate, on Sunday week. On Monday there was a final send off, when tokens of love and affection were presented to Mr. Jameson and family. The great gatherings bore eloquent testimony to the way in which Mr. Jameson's services are known and appreciated. Mr. Jameson goes to Yorkshire, followed by the prayers of hundreds blessed by his ministry.

Baptist.

Through the labours of the Pioneer Mission a new church has been opened at Woodside, South Norwood. The pastor is Mr. S. W. Gentle-Cackett.

The summer services at Cromer, noted in a recent issue, were the outcome of services begun last spring by Rev. E. G. Ince in the upper room of the Town Hall.

The anniversary of Coedpenmaen Chapel, Pontypridd, was held on Sunday, Sept. 11, when three sermons were delivered by Hon. D. T. Phillips, American Consul, Cardiff. A number of conversions were recorded.

At the village of Boughton a disused carpenter's shop has been converted into a place of worship in connection with Ashford Christian Endeavour Society at a cost of from £20 to £30. At the opening service Rev. J. Whitaker preached.

At the anniversary meeting of the Dunfermline Church, Pastor H. Gilbert Hoare, B.A., said that during the past year a large number of young men and young women had been brought to a knowledge of the truth by the power of the Holy Spirit.

At the annual assembly of the Baptist Union at Nottingham a discussion will be introduced by the President concerning the erection in London of a Church-house, to serve as a centre where ministers may assemble. The building will include a hall for meetings, a publishing-house, a library, and, possibly, sleeping accommodation, etc. It would be the headquarters of the Baptist Missionary Society.

Methodist.

The health of Mr. J. Bamford Slack, of the West London Mission, has been completely restored by his stay at Pontresina and Venice.

A new Primitive Methodist chapel is to be erected at South Moor, Stanley Circuit, at a cost of £1,400. It will be in amphitheatre style.

Rev. Charles Humble, Superintendent of Cockermouth Primitive Methodist Circuit, has declined a unanimous invitation to remain for a fourth year as minister at that station.

Rev. G. Wiles, of the Primitive Methodist Mansfield Circuit, has received and accepted an invitation from the Missionary Committee to go to the San Carlos Bay Mission, West Africa.

A serious breakdown has occurred in the health of Rev. Thomas Jackson, the founder of the Primitive Methodist Mission at Clapton, owing to the heavy strain to which the mission work has subjected him.

During the renovation of a Wesleyan chapel at a village near Scarborough, the vicar of the parish placed at the disposal of the society the village reading-room for tea on Sunday, and the parish schoolroom for the evening gathering.

At the pastors' meeting of Chatham district (Bible Christian), arrangements were made for a district convention of local preachers, class-leaders, Sunday-school teachers, and Christian Endeavourers, at Sittingbourne on October 26. This is a new departure in Kent.

On Wednesday, 14th inst., a meeting was held in Eden-street Church, Kingston-on-Thames, to publicly welcome Rev. James Morrison, later of Chester. The attendance was most cheering. Addresses were delivered by representatives from various parts of the circuit, and an encouraging speech given by the new minister. The church's watchword is "Forward."

At South Downs, a suburb of Redruth, Cornwall, a service was recently conducted by three octogenarian United Methodist local preachers—Mr. William Wasley, who is in his eighty-sixth year, Mr. John Nichol, who has done in past years good service on Connexional committees, and has entered his eighty-fourth year, and Mr. John Martin, a cultured preacher, and an earnest and prominent official in past days, who is in his eighty-third year.

The ministers and laymen associated with the Wesleyan second London District Synod held their annual autumn meeting last week at Great Queen-street Chapel. The attendance was large. Rev. H. Price Hughes, President of the Conference, was in the chair. Rev. Dr. Waller, late chairman of the district, congratulated Mr. Price Hughes on his election as chief officer of the Wesleyan Church, and dealt with the position and progress of Methodism in the district.

Dr. Stephenson and the committee of the Children's Home are naturally uneasy lest the promise of £50,000 from the Twentieth Century Fund should lead any supporters of the Home to imagine there is not the same need for generous giving as formerly. If any such notion obtained credence the promised good might speedily work almost irreparable disaster to one of the most beautiful charities of Wesleyan Methodism. The £50,000 cannot be utilised for maintenance. Every penny of it must be devoted to extension.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. Urquhart, tutor at the Baptist Theological College of Scotland, has become minister of the Free Church, Glenluce.

The Synod of the English Presbyterian Church, through the various presbyteries, is endeavouring to raise £50,000 for church building and debt extinction.

At a meeting of the Liverpool Presbytery, Rev. J. Peddie presiding, a proposal that the Presbytery should be responsible for the raising of £6140 towards the £20,000 yet required for the church extension scheme was discussed, and ultimately referred to a committee.

The Irish Presbyterian Mission is doing a good work. It has thirty-nine colporteurs in the field, while twenty-five students who are preparing for the ministry have been at work during the summer in the south and west selling Bibles and speaking to the people in the fairs and markets

The Wellingboro' Railway Accident.—Referring to a statement we published, on the strength of the newspaper reports, that the recent railway accident at Wellingboro' was caused by the thoughtlessness of boys playing with the luggage truck, a correspondent points out that at the Board of Trade inquiry the boys were entirely absolved from blame.

The Lord's Day in Wales.—The gradual secularisation of the Lord's Day is seen, among other ways, in the increasing number of shops that are being kept open. This evil is increasing even in Wales, and at Llanelly a meeting has been held, attended by the leading ministers and laymen, with a view of drawing attention to the disgraceful condition of affairs. The chief offenders are the "sweet shops"; while the vendors of teetotal drinks often tempt young men into a longing for stronger drinks. This matter is to be brought before the committee of the County Council, who are expected to deal seriously with the matter. These various signs of encroachment on the sanctity of the Day of Rest should be more closely watched by the authorities throughout the country.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SOME souls come into great distress, fearing that they have sinned against the Holy Spirit. The fact of their distress in most of such cases proves that they have not done so. The breathless haste, however, of this generation, which was years ago described by one of our daily papers as "an age out of breath," is not productive of such experiences. Its placing of humanitarianism above reverence and godly fear, and its consequent slight sense of sin, are scarcely compatible with dread of having committed the unpardonable sin.

Whilst it is to be hoped that most of those who have been or are distressed with the fear of having sinned beyond forgiveness will find their names in the Book of Life, it is to be feared that many who come under the influence of the Gospel of God, not taking heed to its promises or its warnings, let them slip, and neglect and miss the great salvation ; and that not a few who were once enlightened and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and tasted the good word of God and the powers of the age to come, have fallen away, so that it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance. Impossible, not because the love of God has failed, or the blood of Christ has lost its efficacy, but because a seared conscience has lost its capacity to respond to the movings or the strivings of the Spirit. There are Gospel-hardened people whom it would be an unspeakable relief to the soul-winner to find distressed with the fear that they had sinned against the Holy Ghost.

One of the characteristics of the Christian Conference held every year at Dundee is the prominence given to evangelistic effort. At each of the three evening meetings Gospel addresses are given, so that the occasion combines, as it were, a conference and special mission in one. The idea is a good one and is worthy of imitation, for large numbers of unconverted hearers gather to such conferences, to whom teaching upon advanced truth is unsuited. Further, it gives Christian workers opportunities of putting into practice, in personal dealing, the exhortations received at the earlier meetings of the day.

A preacher's power in winning souls will be in proportion to the fidelity with which he strives to unfold the treasures of the Scriptures. The fulness of the Book is never exhausted, and its charm never dies away. A striking evidence of its influence over the great human heart may be seen in the classes of working men who can be gathered together to read it and hear it expounded, although it is the constant object of attack among unbelievers and profane men in industrial centres. A London city missionary testifies that the meeting which has most gladdened his heart is a men's Bible class, which he started nearly eight years ago, and which has been continued with vigour and with excellent results. Many of the men have been converted ; one young man offered himself for foreign service ; two or three are anxious to enter the service of the City Mission ; while one young man has been a successful worker in connection with the L.C.M. for three years. This is good work, built upon a good foundation.

An address on "Local Preachers' Prayers" in the Christian World Pulpit contains some important advice to such as lead the devotions of others in public. It is a gift involving great responsibility, and should be well considered. It is a great thing to venture into the presence of the All-Holy and All-Powerful in our own individual behalf ; it is a greater to undertake to voice the petitions of a congregation. It is surely little less than an insult to appear before God in the name of others without preparation of mind and soul. "The prayer must be so framed that the congregation identifies itself with it...and feels itself at the same time solemnised and gladdened as it is lifted above the smoke and dust and noises of the earth into the serene upper air of the Delectable Mountains." It should express the actual thanksgivings and needs of the congregation, and at the same time be a real outpouring of the speaker's own heart.

We are persuaded that more prayer-meetings are spoiled by the undue length of the prayers offered up than by any other cause. Those who engage should remember that prayer is an exercise that makes large demands on the attention, the emotions, and the spiritual sensibilities ; and that a succession of brief, pointed, characteristic petitions are far more helpful than one or two long and rambling effusions. Intensity and brevity are quite compatible ; and when from the point to which one short and earnest petition or outpouring of thankfulness, another and another carries us up to ever higher ranges of thought and desire, the summum bonum of public prayer is to be attained. And in order to make this result more sure and frequent, we believe that the voice of women might with advantage be often heard in the assemblies of God's people. Many of them rise to a beauty of Christian life seldom attained by men, especially on the devotional side. Why should they not oftener lead the devotions of others into the secret places in which their souls dwell?

The Times is casting its enormous influence on the side of Protestantism ; it declares that the extreme section of the clergy are out of hand ; that the authority of the bishops, so long unused, is now nearly forgotten ; and that the laity demand protection. The enforced confessional and the Popish character of many of the manuals of devotion show that "a point has been reached at which some stand must be made." The people have Parliament to appeal to, and if once Parliament is appealed to an answer will have to be given by whatever Government is in power. During the present discussion it is easy to see that opinion is advancing towards severing the bond between Church and State, and giving the people a due influence in Church affairs. From present signs we judge that a great many small questions which have claimed the attention of politicians will presently be pushed on one side, and the nation will find itself facing one of those vital questions with which our fathers had to deal. It will do us good to have conscience and faith made a standard of appeal.

There is one trap of which the nation must be warned in the anti-Romish struggle, lest it should fall into it. The ritualistic papers are loud in declaring that England never liked Rome-rule and never patiently submitted to it, and that all she has ever done has been to reject the Pope while still retaining the faith and practices of the Catholic Church. The Times says that Englishmen are determined never again to submit to the spiritual pretensions of Rome. That is not exactly the situation. The nation is asked to submit to teachings which are avowedly Romish, but not to the Pope—at present. That can come, and undoubtedly will come, when the minds of the people are saturated and demoralised with superstition, for then they will not only be ready for Papal rule, but will desire and seek it. Even some who now are honestly opposed to the Pope will find that he has become a necessity.

It is not very easy to understand the exact purpose of the letter on religious education in elementary schools from the Bishops of London and Rochester. They make a clear acknowledgment of the efficiency of the religious teaching in Board Schools so far as it goes, but they say that "undenominational" teaching must necessarily be less perfect than "denominational." They plead, therefore, for some method whereby children in elementary schools may be taught according to the religious tenets of their parents, if possible, by someone on the staff of the school. Considering the multifarious character of the parents' belief, it is not easy to see how this is to be done. It would end in the subdivision of the schools into sectarian classes, which would inevitably tend to bewilder the children rather than help them. It seems far more reasonable to teach them the broad principles of Biblical truth, and to leave the more definite teaching of religion to the Churches and Sunday Schools, which exist for that purpose.

There is one suggestion in the bishops' letter, however, which deserves special mention and support. They rightly point out that elementary teaching is successful in proportion as it supplies those who are taught with the desire and the facilities to continue their studies after leaving school ; and suggest that it is of the utmost importance to carry out this principle in the matter of religious education. This can be done only by attaching the child to some church or chapel ; this being again made into an argument for denominational teaching from the start. We would point out, however, that there are other means of carrying out this principle without reopening the religious question which has proved such a fruitful source of trouble in the recent past. Let the churches become doubly active in providing better and more attractive methods of instruction for the young, and in looking after the welfare of those who are leaving school for business.

The reports of special correspondents in the Soudan, which continue to come in by every mail, give vivid pictures of the terrible carnage of the battle of Omdurman, and still more vivid pictures of the horrors of Mahdism of which that struggle was the death-knell. The representative of the Westminster Gazette writes:

> There is a mysterious law in the working of Providence which forbids the continued existence of systems which have ceased to subserve the cause of progress. Mahdism has proved the most shameful and terrible instrument of bloodshed and oppression which the modern world has ever witnessed. It has reduced whole provinces to utter desolation, so that tracts once smiling and fertile are now but solitary wastes, the habitation of wild beasts. Thousands upon thousands of homesteads have been laid in ruins, and the innocent villagers outraged and tortured and murdered. As I entered the Madhi's tomb this morning I saw a crowd of natives casting stones with loud curses upon the spot where his body lay, and scores of unhappy creatures who on Friday night were liberated after long years of imprisonment lifted up their hands, and with streaming eyes thanked God for the destruction of their oppressor's rule.

Awful as was the loss of life which the downfall of Mahdism has cost, there are few evils whose destruction was so imperative and which will result in such widespread benefits to mankind.

In Sir George Grey we have lost the greatest Colonial statesman England has yet seen—one who, unlike some of our "Empire-builders," worked steadily and faithfully for the ideals of our race—justice, peace, liberty. He was a man who had the rare tact that turned foes into friends, and the sense of honour which made him as true to his word to a Maori or an Australian Bushman as to a white man. He was at one time called a "dangerous man" among the officials of the Colonial Office, because he thought and acted for himself when technically he should have obeyed "superior orders." The following extract from one of his old despatches gives a true insight into his spirit and methods:—

> When Parliament, for want of sufficient information, legislates wrongfully or unjustly for a distant nation subject to its laws—unless the high officers of the Empire will take the responsibility by delaying to act until they have further instructions—the Empire cannot be held together....In declining, therefore, to break promises which I made as Her Majesty's representative...I felt that I did my duty as a faithful servant of my Queen and country, and will cheerfully undergo every risk and punishment which may follow from my having adopted this course.

These are the words of a brave and high-principled man.

The names of some Englishmen who have adorned our history and who have died recently ought to convince all young men who need convincing that personal godliness is a great support of courage. General Gordon was a courageous man, so was Mr. Gladstone, so was Sir George Grey. There is a power in conscience, in the fear of God, and in the persuasion that an ever-loving Father cares for us, which lifts the soul above all miserable anxieties as to the judgment of men. Prudence often degenerating into timidity, and expediency often sliding into complicity with evil, are the poor worldly substitutes offered for faith and obedience which make men saints.

The report of Mr. Berkeley, Her Majesty's Commissioner in Uganda, of the mutiny in that country, relieves our British officers of blame. "The mutiny was the immediate result of a series of untoward circumstances which aggravated and brought to a head amongst a limited number of men grievances which might otherwise have found more general and more peaceable expression from the whole body of troops, and have been adjusted, like so many other difficulties that beset the path of administration in Africa." Major Macdonald is emphatically exonerated. In one of Mr. Balfour's despatches to the Commissioner the conduct and assistance of the various missionary societies in the Protectorate, both in the field and in the care of the wounded, is specially recognised. This is all very satisfactory, but when we inquire how these natives happen to have "grievances," missionaries who have lived and laboured in the heart of Africa tell us that the wrongs inflicted by white men have kindled fires of anger in the minds of native boys which smoulder always, and on occasion burst into flame. The white man has laid the material for many a conflagration.

China is once more in the throes of a revolution. The deposition of the Emperor and the assumption of power by the late Queen-Regent throws all the reforms that had been promised into the uncertain future again. This unhappy country, after centuries of stagnation, seems doomed to pass through a fierce crucible of trial. Threatened with partition from without and by commotions and divisions from within, she is face to face with unknown changes. What the immediate future may be it is impossible to tell, but if the history of other peoples is any guide, she may find in this terrible unrest the opportunity for a new birth as a nation. Nations, like men, are often regenerated by trouble. Moab of old, "being at ease from his youth, had settled on his lees," while Israel had been "emptied from vessel to vessel," and so had been purified and strengthened for higher things. One thing seems certain, that everything in China seems to work just now in favour of missionary enterprise, and in this great fact there are immense and glorious possibilities for the future.

Notwithstanding the number of exciting topics which have lately filled the public mind the Czar's rescript is not forgotten. The Daily News has commenced a series of articles by a special commissioner on the opinions generally held in the various capitals of Europe as to this proposal. Meanwhile religious bodies are expressing their sympathy, and here and there a town's meeting. The volume of sympathy we believe will grow. We only hope it may be possible for the peoples of other countries to speak out the thoughts of their hearts. Freedom to do this might lead on to wider freedom and growing contentment.

The National Conference for the relief of Armenian widows and orphans which met at Cardiff last week, is working hard to help the sufferers by opening markets for the fruits of their industry, and in other ways. The method of political agitation in their favour has been entirely unsuccessful, and this new plan is started in the hope that something may be done in this way. As the men killed in the massacres of two or three years ago were almost all fathers of families containing on an average four children each, the extent of the suffering is appalling, and the need of help is very great. Orphanages have been started to provide for children who had lost both father and mother, but a large number remain in the homes of their mothers, and it is desired particularly to assist these mothers to provide for their little ones. This must be done in spite of heavy duties laid on the goods by the Turkish Government. In this way something may be accomplished to mitigate the desolation that yet reigns supreme in that unfortunate country.

Mr. Rudyard Kipling tells the world through the columns of The Young Man that he "understands now why the preachers rave against drink"; better than that, he has himself been made a Prohibitionist. In this way—in a concert hall in America he saw two young men get two girls drunk, and then lead them reeling down a dark street. Then, recanting previous opinions, he became a Prohibitionist. Any self-denial that Prohibitionists may entail, any trouble it may give, any annoyance it may inflict, he believes is better than that he should, by his drinking, help to bring temptation "to the lips of young fools." With refreshing candour he says that it is not good that we should let drink lie before the eyes of the children, and "I have been a fool in writing to the contrary."

The General Servant is a useful and much-needed member of the community, and the demand is far beyond the supply. An advertisement by one of them for a situation, in our columns a fortnight ago, has elicited 101 answers. Many of them contain stamped envelope for reply: and more than one lady offers to teach a willing girl to cook. There is a plethora of female labour. Why is it that so few girls are qualified or willing to take the place of a General Servant?

In some of our manufacturing districts there is a deplorable laxity of morals among the young. We were recently asked by a devoted Christian worker in such a locality what remedy could be devised. Second to the Gospel, we think the bodies and minds of the children should be occupied in an interesting and attractive way. A few nights ago, at the anniversary meeting of the Grove Mission, Crouch End, we saw a display of calisthenic exercises, which we considered no less than a means of grace. Not only were the limbs exercised, but the children learned obedience, order, watchfulness, precision, unity of action, beauty of form, and much besides. Nothing tends to immorality more than idle hands and empty minds. To provide suitable occupation for body, soul, and spirit, requires thought, and labour, and self-denial, and faith, and love; but no investment yields such a return as the human subject, especially the young.

Some time ago a cry was raised against the Y.M.C.A. because it did not provide a smoking-room and other similar attractions for its young men. The position taken by the institution did not then seem to be very vigorously defended. Now, however, a decided attitude is being taken up on the original ideal. It is affirmed, and rightly and wisely as we think, that the fact of being a Christian or a member of a church does not of itself entitle to membership of the Y.M.C.A. It was commenced as a band of Christian young men, engaging to seek the conversion of other young men, specially those employed in the same houses of business. It has never relinquished this purpose. A young man, though a Christian, is not eligible for membership of the Association if he only desires to avail himself of its educational, or social, or athletic advantages, and does not intend to devote himself to its missionary obligations, its evangelistic and soul-winning opportunities. All the above advantages are open to him as an associate.

Eternal Life.—1.

By Rev. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

No one has difficulty in apprehending what is meant when told of being dead to sweet sounds, dead to natural affection, or dead intellectually. Need we be surprised when told of being dead to the Divine and spiritual? For such is the state of men, according to the New Testament, as the Gospel finds them. Being out of harmony with God, his true environment, man is pronounced by the New Testament to be "dead." This is no mere figure of speech, but a dread reality. The burden of the New Testament is that man needs to be saved, not merely from soul-sickness, but from death. That book may be refused as an authority, but, if it is accepted, this truth must be accepted with it, that man is destitute of that life which God meant for him. Though Jesus never once mentions the Fall, He finds man in that very state in which the Fall left him—dead to the Divine and spiritual.

The New Testament does not enter into argument to prove this, but assumes it as indisputable; and tells how God proposes to deliver men from this mournful condition.

BEGIN WITH THE RECORDED WORDS OF JESUS.

He describes the great change which He pronounces necessary for every man, as a "passing from death unto life." In his interview with Nicodemus, He points out man's true need as the need of life; he requires to be born again. "Verily, verily (He says), except a man be born again"—any man, every man, man as man—"he cannot see the Kingdom of God." He cannot form a right idea of it, far less have part or lot therein. The whole Gospel pre-supposes this deep necessity. It is no mere Gospel of culture or reform.

The first birth is our entrance into a world of sense and intellect and human affection—to breathe, and eat, and drink, and labour, and get, and enjoy or suffer, and at last sleep. But the mere continuance of all this is not what Jesus means when He speaks of the everlasting life. He means not only something unspeakably higher, but something radically different—a new kind of life, differing in all its perceptions, in all its interests, in all its qualities, in all its enjoyments, from the old. The whole teaching of Jesus pre-supposes that what man needs is not merely a fresh and fuller revelation of duty, not merely a perfect ideal of life placed before him, with an authoritative summons to its imitation, but a new principle of life which God only can kindle. I can conceive some sinful man, who has been vainly struggling after virtue, hearing this announcement for the first time, and exclaiming, "Yes, Jesus understands my case; He has pointed out my deepest need—the need of new life." Whatever else the words of Jesus carry in them, they carry in them this implication, that man's condition as the Gospel finds him is a condition of death.

THE APOSTLES SAY THE SAME THING;

and when it is not said in so many words, it is deeply implied. "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead." "We know that we have passed from death unto life." "God loved us with a great love, even when we were dead in sins." "He that hath not the Son hath not life."

The New Testament will be unintelligible to us unless we accept and realise that man, without the new birth, is in a condition of death, not in some sense boldly figurative, but in a sense most real, profound, and awful. He is fatally out of harmony with his true environment, which is God, "in whom we live, and move, and have our being." Whatever account may be given of it, the whole world of men has passed into the realm of death.

Christ's errand into the world, according to his own announcement, was to give life to the world—life in its broadest, deepest, truest sense, life eternal. Life, even in its lowest form, as it exists in a worm or a fly, is a marvel and a mystery. Once it is gone, science cannot rekindle the lost spark: it needs God for that. And the marvel and mystery deepen and grow more intense as we pass upwards from one order of being to another, till at length we come to man, and find him born again to life eternal.

We have got greatly into the habit of conceiving of eternal life as

and the enjoyment of never-ending happiness in heaven. We shift it forward into the next world, instead of understanding it to be a present gift, which we are to enjoy now and here. We talk of everlasting spring and never-withering flowers, and golden harps and starry crowns. Whatever these things may suggest by way of parable as to the circumstances and accompaniments of eternal life, they do not in the least tell what in itself it is. It is deliverance from the wrath to come and happiness for the whole nature; but when you have said this as fully as you may you have not described the life itself.

Take a common picture. Here is a man pushing his way in the world, and trying to make his position secure. He is pleasant in his manners; he is prosperous and fortunate; he is clothed in purple and fine linen, and fares sumptuously every day; he has health and strength and troops of friends; time and tide seem to wait for him; and all conjunctions of events seem to favour his designs. All things that the world can give are his to command—jewels, books, pictures, leisure, travel, entry into good society, and so forth; but his life is essentially and thoroughly selfish.

Deep down in his heart is a profound and settled conviction, against which it seems vain to argue, of the sufficiency of worldly possessions for the life that now is. He has no thought of anything beyond or above this present world. His whole mind moves in the region of things seen and temporal. All his endeavours, all his fears, all his enjoyments, all his desires, all his hopes, all his ambitions, belong to the present and the seen. You spend an evening in his company, and you cannot help seeing on what his heart is set, and what sways his actions.

JESUS SETS SUCH A MAN BEFORE US

in one of his parables. He is a rich man, who has obtained through the goodness of heaven what so many are eagerly seeking after—not only sufficiency of this world's good, but superabundance. His ground has brought forth so plentifully that he has no room in storehouse or granary for God's bounty. We are introduced into his bed-chamber, and permitted to overhear what he "thought within himself." Many a man's perplexity is to make the two ends meet; how to fill the hungry mouths around his table. This man's perplexity is different: "What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits and my goods?" After consideration he resolves: "This will I do; I will pull down my barns, and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods; and I will say to my soul—(surely he mistakes his body for his soul)—soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." It is all self and sense. There is no acknowledgment of God as the giver; no recognition of God's will in disposing of his wealth; God is ignored altogether. The man is going to spend all for his own gratification, in taking things easy, in eating and drinking and merriment; and this is to run on for many years, with no thought of the "shadow that sits and waits."

What a hideous mockery of life is here—a winged soul that might have risen above the stars, and rejoiced in fellowship with the eternal God, planning for himself a respectable sensualist's sty. The poor man pleases himself with the happy future he pictures. He is going to retire from busy life and to enjoy the bright years that smile to greet him. Ah, yes, he is going to retire—but in another way than he thought. As he lay in his bed, settling his plans, God said "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." God said this. How? Not in a voice that rang like the trump of doom in his ears; not in a secret whisper, curdling his blood; but just as he was laying out the future, and indulging his delicious dream, God pronounced his sentence in the heavens, "This night" (so ill-timed a visit shall death pay thee), this pleasant night, "thy soul shall be required of thee." Perhaps disease of the heart does it; perhaps an apoplectic seizure, or something else that men call "the visitation of God"; perhaps a murderer's dagger does it—a murderer, covetous of gold, has stolen in, and (as soon as all is quiet) buries the blade in the sleeper's heart, rifles his safe, and then escapes with his plunder. There is outcry when the discovery is made; there is awe-struck moralising over the uncertainty of life. The body is laid in the grave to rot; the man himself has leaped at one bound away from all his possessions into an eternity dark, fathomless, and awful, for which he has made no provision. "Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches."

Of whom does Jesus speak? Not of some poor fool who died suddenly one night in a Judæan village two thousand years ago, but of "every one who layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." You understand what sort of life such a man is living, and it is not "life eternal."

(A Belated Memorial Wreath.)

Such honour as the world will never pay
To those who worship at her mammon shrine,
Or court her smile, such honour now is thine,
Friend of the orphan! Will it die away,
The thunder of applause that peals to-day?
Or will it through the ages echo still?
What matters it? Those lips so white and chill
Ne'er made a bid for aught that fame could say.

God's honour the blest secret—open now,
Why ninety years sat lightly on thy brow,
Nor bent thy form beneath the complex weight
Of cares, and toils, and needs insatiate.
Straight as a line thy life-track marked the truth,
Crowned at the goal with an eternal youth.

Elgin, N.B.—In the rooms of the Young Women's Christian Association, Elgin, an enjoyable social meeting was held on Friday, September 23. Mrs. Scott, U. P. Manse, Fraserburgh, and some members and friends spoke on women's influence, temperance, and other kindred subjects well calculated to stimulate and encourage the members of the Association.

*The Splendour of the Risen Saints.

By Dr. NATHANIEL WEST.

"THEY that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that have turned the many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever" (Dan. xii. 3). The angel employs two words nowhere else found in the Old Testament. (1) Hayi Olam, life everlasting, i.e., to die no more; and (2) Hizhir, shall shine, from Zohar, splendour. This last is beautifully rendered by the German word Himmelglanz, the gleam of heaven. Moses describes the firmament as a "sapphire pavement" beneath the feet of the God of Israel, "the body of heaven in its clearness" (Exodus xxxiv. 10); and Elihu compares it to a "molten mirror," shining with undimmed resplendency (Job. xxxvii. 18). Ezekiel describes it as "an appearance of brightness, as the look of the brightness of burnished gold" (Ezek. viii. 2). To the golden sheen the angel adds the incandescent glory of the "stars," literally of the "glitterers."

Our Lord and Paul allude to these expressions in their brilliant language when speaking of the resurrection and its different degrees of glory (Matt. xiii. 43; 1 Cor. xv. 41). An instance of the reality we have in the Transfiguration of the Lord in the "holy mount," when his face did shine as the sun, and his "raiment was white as the light" (Matt. xvii. 2), "white as snow and glistering" (Mark ix. 3, Luke ix. 29). What the angel teaches is that the wise shall shine like the crystal sheen of a sunlit firmament, and the converters of the many to righteousness shall glow with the glitter of the stars in a cloudless canopy. Still more, their effulgence shall be eternal—a glory unobscured for ever (Dan. xii. 3). This their Zohar. Degrees of glory there will be, even as the three in Orion's belt excel in magnitude and glory the lesser stars of the constellation. The transfiguration of the living will equal that of the dead.

The Lord extends the splendour to all the "righteous" (Matt. xiii. 43). Allusion is here doubtless to the Maccabean teachers of the law, in xi. 33-35, but the prophecy includes the whole sacramental host of God's elect, who share the glory ready to be revealed. All who are instrumental in the salvation of the many will be clothed with a surpassing brightness. Eminent, the martyrs of Jesus will shine, saints who have not deemed as dear to them their lives, for Jesus' sake (Rev. xx. 4, xiv. 13; 2 Thess. i. 5; Heb. xi. 35-39; Rev. xii. 11; 2 Tim. iv. 6-8).

Such the "out-resurrection" (Phil. iii. 11). If a splendour so great and enduring, for the body alone—even to be glorified like Christ, whose brightness Paul tells us eclipsed the noonday sun—is the reward of a Tribulation so brief, then, indeed, the sorest afflictions are but as the puncture of a pin, and the longest but as a moment—not worthy to be compared with the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (Rom. viii. 18). Earth never wore a diadem so royal as that composed of risen saints. The eloquence of all antiquity, or modern times, has furnished no description equal to this conclusion of the prophecy—a scene so imposing, majestic, and impressive; so sanctifying and sublime; so solemn and subduing!

We have seen the rainbow braided on the brow of the dying storm, but here a glory-crown of saints, the jewelled diadem of God, is placed upon the head of the dark Tribulation itself—a vision that can never vanish from the soul of the believer. How quick the transit from the cross to the crown, from shame to honour, from suffering to glory! The end of the "warfare great" is the outburst of an illumination which celebrates a victory for the Kingdom of God that is everlasting. Time cannot dim its brightness; eternity will only enhance its greatness.

SATAN.—2.

IN Thessalonians we see the loving carefulness of the apostle, lest by any means the tempter had tempted them, and his labour should be in vain. The Spirit suffered him not to go to Troas, but here Satan hindered him from seeing those whose face he exceedingly endeavoured to see with great desire. How important to discern between the restraints of the Spirit and the hindrances of Satan. The coming of the Lawless One is after the working of Satan.

In the Epistles to Timothy the Apostle tells him that some are already turned aside unto Satan; no Church authority of the present day would so speak; to call them backsliders would in their view be considered enough. He warns his son in the faith not to make a bishop (an overseer) of a novice, lest, being puffed up, he fall into the condemnation of the devil; and that a bishop must have a good testimony from them that are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil. And the servant of the Lord must be gentle to opposers, that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are led captive by him at his will.

The Epistle to the Hebrews assures us that because we were partakers of flesh and blood, Jesus took part of the same, that, through death, He might destroy him that had the power of death—that is, the devil—and deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

James counsels us to resist the devil, and he will flee from us; because, adds Peter, he goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour.

As the beloved John had made frequent mention of Satan in his Gospel, so in his Epistles he says that he that practiseth sin is of the devil, for the devil sinneth from the beginning. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil." Many times we are reminded by the Pulpit, the Platform, and the Press, that He came into the world to save sinners; how seldom that He was manifested to destroy the works of the devil. The children of God are here distinguished from those of the devil by their righteousness and love.

Jude points the important principle that we are not to speak evil of dignities (because all powers are ordained of God), by the fact that Michael, the archangel, when contending with the devil about the body of Moses, brought against him no railing accusation, but said, "The Lord rebuke thee." It would seem that the early Church understood many things of the spiritual and angelic world which are now for the most part regarded as inscrutable mysteries.

In the book of the Unveiling the beloved disciple unfolds, as we should expect, much concerning the spiritual powers of good and evil.

In the letter to Smyrna those whom we should have spoken of as false professors the Spirit denounces as the synagogue of Satan, and forewarns the suffering church that the devil will cast some of them into prison; where we should have attributed the persecution to the human government. If we used Scripture language touching the massacred Armenians and the expatriated Stundists, we should be led to see these tribulations more in the light of God.

Pergamos dwells where Satan's throne is. Thyatira knows the depths of Satan. God will make them of the synagogue of Satan to worship before the feet of the Church of Brotherly Love, and to know that God has loved her.

Probably Satan is the star Wormwood (Rev. viii. 11), as he surely is the fallen star to whom was given the key of the bottomless pit; the Abaddon and Apollyon, the king of the locust flesh-lusts which war against the soul, and instigate all the wars and fightings in the church and in the world. (Rev. ix.) He is the great seven-headed and seven-crowned, ten-horned dragon, whose tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven and cast them to the earth, and against whom and his angels Michael and his angels fought. He, the serpent who cast a river out of his mouth to destroy the woman who had borne his Conqueror the Man-Child, and who went to make war with the remnant of her seed.

He, the dragon that gave power to the beast of God-opposing worldly government, and of the lamb-like apostate ecclesiastical beast, which ministered unto the first beast, and boycotted all who would not worship it.

Out of the mouth of the dragon and of the beast and of the false prophet come the three unclean spirits which gather the kings of the earth to the battle of the great day of God Almighty.

Another angel has become possessed of the key of the bottomless pit, and comes down from heaven and lays hold on the dragon, the ancient serpent, which is the devil and Satan, and casts him bound into the bottomless pit, that he may deceive the nations no more for a thousand years. But when he is loosed he is the same serpent and dragon and devil still; he gathers the nations to battle against God, and fire from heaven devours them. Then he is cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, and is tormented day and night unto the ages of the ages.

We have seen that in every department of man's nature—in body, soul, and spirit—and in every department of human life, the Holy Spirit shows the baleful interference of this mighty and ubiquitous being, this crafty and cruel enemy. Is it not evident that between the New Testament description of his devices, and the report of the watchmen on the walls of Zion concerning him, there is an appalling disproportion? M.

The Student Movement.—Seven members of the Students' Volunteer Union, Edinburgh University Branch, have this summer been on tour in a large caravan, visiting the Scottish Border towns. They have conducted a large number of interesting meetings, giving missionary addresses, illustrated by limelight views. The attendances at the meetings have been good, and there is no doubt but fresh interest in missionary work has been awakened.

Oporto.—Mr. W. Reid, of the Sailors' Rest, writes to say that British seamen show ready appreciation of the efforts made for their comfort and well-being. They not only use the Rest, but welcome a visit to their vessels. Mr. Reid adds that Mr. George Searle, sen., the parent and for many years the mainstay of the Oporto Rest, has attained his seventy-ninth year, and is still active. Good reading matter for the use of the seamen will always be received with pleasure by Mr. Reid.

By Rev. D. J. BURRELL, D.D.

WE have finished our survey of the six greatest of the false religions. There are some conclusions which we must have reached. First, there is a measure of truth in each of the false religions. How could it be otherwise? God never has left Himself without a witness in any generation or any land. But, unfortunately, the truth is like gold. There is gold in quartz, in old red sandstone, in the granite of the mountains, in auriferous sand, in every wave that rolls along the shore; but the trouble is to get it out. The question is whether it is in paying quantities, and whether it can be separated from the dross.

And, second, there is somewhat of sound morality in each of the false systems. How could it be otherwise? It is a mistake to suppose that the Decalogue was originally written in the Bible. It was first written in the constitution of the race. It is interwoven with the nerves and sinews of our human nature; and every man is conscious of right or wrong by reason of the conscience within him. But there is no religion that has such an ethical system as Christianity. It is absolutely perfect. Did ever a thinking man find fault with the Decalogue? Did ever an infidel venture to criticise the morality of the Sermon on the Mount? These two are the great monographs of Christian ethics, and in between them stands Jesus, a perfect illustration of both, and the only Man that ever lived who was as good as the law. For this reason He stands forth solitary and pre-eminent as our example of right living, the Ideal Man. Thus it appears that the moral code of Christianity is perfect; there is nothing to be added to or taken from it.

Our third conclusion is this: The false religions give no answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Here is the glorious pre-eminence of Christianity; it points out the way of escape from a mislived past. There is not another religion on earth, and never has been one, that has proposed any rational plan of justification. Find we anything like the Cross in any other religion? Find we an answer to the question, "How can a man be just before God?" or "How shall God be just and the justifier of the ungodly?" Here is the word of the Gospel: "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life."

Dr. Chamberlain, who has lately returned to his beloved India to spend the remainder of his life, told me of a strange thing that happened while he was once preaching at Benares. Among the devotees who came to bathe in the sacred river was a man who had journeyed wearily on his knees and elbows from a great distance, with the pain and conviction at his heart. He hoped, by washing in the Ganges, to be relieved of his "looking for of Judgment." Poor soul! he dragged himself to the river's edge, made his prayer to Gunga and crept in. A moment later he emerged with the old pain still tugging at his heart. He lay prostrate on the bank in his despair, and heard the voice of the missionary, who was preaching near by under a banyan tree. He raised himself, and crawled a little nearer. He listened to the simple story of the Cross; he was hungry and thirsty for it. He rose upon his knee and hearkened; then upon his feet; then clapped his hands and cried: "That's what I want! that's what I want!"

It is what we all want. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together until now for this word of everlasting life. I maintain that in this exclusive and dogmatic claim of Christianity you have your only sanction as missionaries of Christ. If there are other plans of salvation, then the death of Christ was an awful wasted Divine resource. But indeed there is none other name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved. Here is our commission. Here is the franchise of our ministry. Let us preach Christ; let us live Christ; let us know nothing but Christ, and Him crucified; let us make Christ first, last, midst, and all in all.

Believe in the triumphing Christ. Let Him be Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end of every noble purpose and aspiration. Believe the word that is written, "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed, saying 'Let us break his bonds asunder, and cast away his cords from us.' He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision." Nothing can withstand the Divine purpose. "Ask of Me," said the Father to the Son, "and I will give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Did Jesus ever ask? Behold Him on the Cross with his hands stretched out! This is his great prayer: "Give me the heathen for my inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for my possession." And his great manifesto is like unto it: "Look unto Me all ye ends of the earth and be saved."

Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

The New Tabernacle.

A SPECIAL meeting of the male members of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Church was held on Friday evening, September 23, in the College Buildings, Newington, to receive the report of the Rebuilding Committee and to inspect the plans. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided, and moved the adoption of the report, the resolution being seconded by Deacon Thompson, and carried amid much enthusiasm. A second resolution, assuring the pastor and officers of hearty and loyal support, was heartily carried.

It was stated that, although no direct appeal had yet been made by the officers, there had already been subscribed £4,570 for the re-building, whilst the Pastor's birthday gifts, to be devoted to the various Tabernacle Institutions, exceed £700.

In its report the Rebuilding Committee state that the work of preparing the basement for public worship is being carried out in the most efficient manner. The bulk of the ironwork is already in position and the fireproof ceiling is nearly finished. It is hoped that the basement will be ready for occupation early in November.

As to the main building, the portico and walls left by the fire are retained and will be repaired. The construction will, as far as possible, be fireproof, much of the material that was previously wood being replaced by iron. The auditorium will be of the same width as before, but the length will be reduced to the extent of one bay, which is equal to about 13 feet 6 inches. The total seating capacity will be reduced by about one thousand. There will be electric light throughout, with reserve gas supply in the roof and at the entrance, in case of accident. The seats will be more commodious than in the old building, and the aisles will be wider.

Work for Christian Women.

By D. L. MOODY.

WE are living in an age which is vastly different from the days of our fathers. Time was when the minister might be sure of reaching the people, and that his Sunday morning audience would include all the adults of his parish, because they were compelled by law to be there. That time has gone by, and especially in our cities the only way to reach a large proportion of the men and women with the Gospel now is to take it to them in their homes. They must be visited and dealt with there, and by personal invitation and continued effort brought to the house of God.

Of course, no pastor can expect to do such work alone, and therefore there has arisen the need for trained workers who can give their time to it. I believe experience has proved that the very best ones to do this work are Christian women. A woman can get into these homes much easier than a man, and by many kind ministrations, such as a woman alone can render, win the mother and children for Christ. This is not a matter of theory, but of actual experience in many churches with which I am acquainted, and I believe is one answer to the old question of how to reach the masses. There ought to be thousands of women giving their lives to this work in the cities and large towns of our land, and more and more the churches are calling for such workers.

I have recently been much interested in a kind of work that has been attempted in some of the rural districts of New England. For years it has been a problem with missionary boards to know how best to help small country churches. Many such churches have steadily run down; the people have moved away, and other causes have weakened them until they can no longer support a pastor, and must be carried on by the Missionary Board or abandoned. Now, one board at least has been sending trained young women workers into such communities. They have lived with the people, visiting among them, giving Bible readings in their homes, and preaching in the church. The blessing of God has been upon their work, and in at least one case that I know of, where all the church services had been abandoned and the work of God given up, the church, in connection with another small parish near by, is now calling for a pastor and preparing to support him themselves. The field for work of this kind is practically unlimited.

I have spoken of only two fields in which the need of Christian women with some training for such work is very manifest. It would be easy to mention others. There is the need of our home missionary fields in the west and south of those who can teach the Bible. There is the whole great heathen world, where 800,000,000 people sit in midnight darkness, perishing for the light which Christ has commanded Christian men and women to give them.

I believe there are a great many Christian young women of from twenty to thirty years of age—women of fair education and good ability—who could and would give their lives to this work if they only knew just how to go about it. We have established at East Northfield, Mass., a training school, where young women are taught the Bible and practical methods of Christian work, giving as nearly as we can just the training that is required in these for whom this great call is coming. Many young women have gone out of it into places of great usefulness, and are making their lives count mightily for the salvation of men and the glory of God. If this has fallen under the eye of such a young woman as I have tried to describe, may I ask her why her life should not be thus spent?

I shall be very glad to correspond with anyone who may wish to enter the school. We can take only a limited number, but our doors are wide open for as many as the building will accommodate.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 2.

"I am...the First and the Last."—Rev. i. 11.

IT is true, O Son of God. Thou art! The First in order of Being, and last in the full completeness of thy glory.

First in respect of Time, for Thou art the everlasting Father, Father and Creator of the ages, and when time shall be no more Thou will last for ever. From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God. Thy years shall not fail.

First in respect to Creation.—Thou wast before all things; thine was an age prior to the creation of matter; all things were made by Thee: and when the heavens and earth that are now have passed away for ever, when the elements shall have melted with fervent heat, when the sun shall be burnt out and the stars wane, Thou wilt still be the last, able to bring into being new heavens and a new earth.

First in the order of Redemption.—God first loved us. From before the foundation of the world Thou wert the Lamb slain; before the foundation of the world we were chosen in Thee. First in the love that resolved to redeem; first in the mystery of thine incarnation, lowest in the depth of thy descent unto death, and in the resurrection through which Thou becamest the First-born among the dead; first to open the way within the vail, to bear our nature risen before the throne, and to inaugurate for man the life of resurrection-power. And as Thou wert the Author, so art Thou the Trustee of Faith.

First in respect to the experience of thine elect.—None is to be compared with Thee, Thou Prince of the kings of the earth. Their Alpha, their beginning, the day-star of their hope, the dawn of their life, the origin of all that is good and blessed in their life; whom they take to be their ideal, their goal, their aim, their Omega, their end; last in this world, first in that.

MONDAY, October 3.

"I will give him a white stone."—Rev. ii. 17.

There is much reason to suppose that this white stone is the diamond, and that it stands for the Urim and Thummim stone, which the high priest wore in his breast-plate, and which he consulted for the oracles of God. It probably darkened with the Divine No, and grew lustrous with Yes.

The believer may have direct knowledge of the will of God.—You may have your white stone. If only your heart is right with God, you may know his will for your path, not only by the pillared cloud of outward circumstances, but by the inner bearing of the heart. By a quick intuition you may know what God's mind is, both when you kneel in prayer and when you are called on to act. Only the surface of the inner life must be unruffled and pure; there must be no anxious agitation, no blurring miasma of sin.

Each revelation of God's will carries with it a truer knowledge of Himself.—On the Urim stone were engraven the mystic characters of the Divine name. On these no eye but Aaron's might rest; so, deep in our heart, these revelations of God's nature are given, which are direct and special for each loving and obedient soul. Eye hath not seen nor heart conceived what God says to his children about life and death, and Himself, and their relationship, and the glorious future.

Such revelations are in proportion to our overcoming life.—If you are perpetually yielding to sin and impurity, and being trodden down by the heel of passion, such communications from the Infinite will be rare and indistinct. To him that overcometh, not once for all, but perpetually, shall be made the revelations of God.

TUESDAY, October 4.

"I will make a pillar in the temple of my God."—Rev. iii. 12.

All who lived on the seaboard of Asia Minor were familiar with the vast and beautiful temples, in which Oriental lavishness and Greek art combined to realise the utmost magnificence. Their ruins strew the deserted sites of former cities to this day. The Lord therefore used familiar imagery in this promise. A column hewn from its rocky bed, richly sculptured, and conveyed to the rising temple-structure to go no more out.

Stability.—"Shall go no more out." God Himself shall stablish, strengthen, and settle the soul which trusts Him, and is willing to follow at all costs where He leads. He will make such a one to be as Jachin or Boaz, the two mighty pillars which Solomon erected in the Temple court, their names signifying establishment and strength. There is no spectacle more inspiring than to behold the steadfastness of the soul that wavers and swerves not, but stands to its post, though all nature rocks.

Responsibility.—The pillar bears up some part of the structure; and it is Christ's good pleasure to call us to share with Him the weight of ministering to his Church. As you show yourself true and faithful, God will allow you to bear up the common life of his people by ministering comfort, direction, encouragement to such as could not stand by themselves.

Beauty.—The mediæval architects and masons took great pleasure in their designs. In many cases each pillar is sculptured as to its capital in its own fashion. There is infinite variety and beauty in the patterns. So Jesus is cutting deep into us the name of his Father and Himself, and making us bear new revelations to the world. Do not shrink from the deep cutting of his chisel.

WEDNESDAY, October 5.

"A door opened in heaven."—Rev. iv. 1.

You must remember that John was in the isle of Patmos, a lone, rocky, inhospitable prison, for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus. And yet to him, under such circumstances, separated from all the loved ones of Ephesus, debarred from the worship of the Church, condemned to the companionship of uncongenial fellow-captives, were vouchsafed these visions. For him, also, a door was opened.

Not to these only, but to many more, doors have been opened into heaven; when, so far as this world was concerned, it seemed as though their circumstances were altogether unlikely for such revelations. To prisoners and captives; to constant sufferers, bound by iron chains of pain to sick couches; to lonely pilgrims and wanderers; to women detained from the Lord's house by the demands of home; to domestic servants, missing the blessed opportunities of the sanctuary—how often has the door been opened in heaven. And what has not Nature been to some of us! How often in a country glade, the first flower of spring, a bird's warble, a gleam of light chequering the path, has been as a door opened in heaven!

THURSDAY, October 6.

"In the midst of the throne stood a Lamb as it had been slain."—Rev. v. 6.

It is a marvellous combination, but how reassuring! Not the throne without the Lamb, else sinners dare not venture nigh: not the Lamb without the throne, or we might question his victory, his omnipotence to succour and save. No, but the throne with the Lamb, the Lamb and the throne, the Lamb in its very midst.

But see: the marks of suffering, of agony and death, of sacrifice, are stamped upon his flesh. "A Lamb as it had been slain." The redeemed ones that stand around tell the story; He purchased and cleansed them by his blood; He is worthy to fill the throne and rule for ever. He who could make Himself the supreme sacrifice and offering for the sins of the world is worthy to be the world's king. The angels corroborate their verdict. In concentric rings they stand around the throne in their massed myriads. From ten thousand times ten thousand clear voices the acclamation rings out, "Thou art worthy!"

Take the scroll of history, of empire, of our lives, O gentle, holy, victorious mighty Lamb. Break the seals, and unroll it page by page. All must be well that passes beneath thy tender and mighty hand. Let life bring what it may, thy rod and staff shall comfort us!

FRIDAY, October 7.

"Come."—Rev. vi. 1.

The A.V. reads it, Come and see. The R.V., with the majority of Greek MSS., drops the two last words, and puts the simple word Come into the lips of the four living creatures. Indeed, that word rings through the corridors of this book like a clarion. Come, Son of God! Come, according to thy plighted word! Come, for creation travails in pain together until now! Come, for thy bride languishes for the marriage feast, and her completed union! Come, for the enemy says that Thou hast grown slack! Come to restore thine ancient people, and bring in the golden age! Come! Take to Thyself thy great power, and reign! The time is ripe! Midnight has faded into dawn, and dawn is lightening fast to day! Why tarriest Thou? Make haste and come!

The ages which are characterised by the bloodless victories of civilisation and peace are incomplete without Thee; and as the white horse issues forth, men are not satisfied with the abundance of this world's goods, there is still an unsatisfied yearning which says, Come.

The ages most saturated with blood, the blood of men, shed by the hands of men, where harvests grow rank because the soil has been so richly fertilised by blood and tears, need Thee sorely; and as the red horse comes forth, sad Mother Earth, who has received so many mangled bodies to her bosom, bids Thee come.

The ages, filled with plague, pestilence, and famine, wherein beasts multiply about the homes of men, because there is no land to keep them back, since men have perished from the earth, as the livid horses go forth, cry, Come.

SATURDAY, October 8.

"The Lamb shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life."—Rev. vii. 17 (R.V.).

We do not live until we have been born again. The moment of regeneration is the first moment of life. All the years before are as though they had never been. But from the moment we receive the life of the eternal God into our being, we begin an endless progression.

The entrance of that life makes us lambs in the flock of the Good Shepherd.—We no longer resist, or fight, or boast in things of which we should be ashamed. We become pure, sweet, gentle, lowly, and submissive. We are willing to lay down our lives for others. We follow the way of the cross without murmur or complaint. Every time we eat of that bread and drink of the cup we witness to the world our desire to absorb more and more of the lamb-like nature of the Son of God. Hence, it is said, the Lamb shall lead, shall shepherd, shall tend us as his flock.

The life which God has implanted yearns for satisfaction.—As a parched flock desires the crystal streams that purl over the pebbles, so the flock of God in this life and the next cry out for God, for the living God. Nothing will satisfy God's lambs and sheep but God Himself. And this is satisfied in Jesus. In Him the eternal God comes near to us; we follow Him without fear.

And in that life there is eternal progression.—Jesus leads us from one fountain to another, from one well to the next, always deeper into the heart of heaven, always further towards the very centre of all things, which is God. We shall always be satisfied; but our capacity will constantly enlarge, and it will become necessary to give us fuller manifestations, according to his own promise: "I have made known thy name, and will make it known, that thy love may be in them, and I in them."

(7/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan & Scott.) Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job, will be ready shortly, and will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

*Religious Fellowship.

By DR. JOSEPH PARKER.

"Not forsaking the assembly of ourselves together, as the manner of some is."—Heb. x. 25.

OBSERVE that the text does not point to secret devotion, but to open religious fellowship. There is a devotion which is to be hidden from all human knowledge, in which the soul discloses itself without reserve to the scrutiny of the Most High. To neglect such devotion is to dry up the springs which rise from the very rocks. Without it there can be no spiritual life.

Yet there is something beyond it. What solitude brings sympathy completes. Into every lonely sanctuary there goes this rousing admonition: "Forsake not the assembly of the saints; claim thy kindred. Having communed quietly and deeply with God, go forth with the whole church to make a joyful noise unto the Rock of our salvation."

There is a subtle and indescribable power of sympathy in public worship. Individually we sing the more expressively because of the joyful and animating song of those who are round about us. Our idea of worship is enlarged. We get glimpses of a whole world engaged in common prayer! Though we may come to the assembly faint in heart and clouded in hope, the very gathering of the host or the thunder of the song may help to revive and brighten our life.

The day of the Lord comes with a rare and most precious sweetness to men who have had a week's hard work. All the week long we have had anxiety, trouble, disquiet; we have lived in excitement and noise and strife; our heads have been bowed down to the dust, and we have been seeking for our bread amongst the stones of the earth. How sweet, then, is the sound of the bell which announces the light of the Sabbath and rings us to the banquet of the sanctuary. We pause for a while. The very act of standing still does us good. The soul over which the rough, cold wind has been fiercely blowing day after day enjoys the shelter and comforts itself by looking towards the light.

Public worship helps us to see deeply and clearly into the unity of human nature. On the streets we are many, in the sanctuary we are one. In taste and whim and special fancy we are an innumerable throng; but in the true hunger of the heart we are as one man. In other places we may meet as groups, but in the house of prayer we meet as a race.

A WONDROUS, SAD, GLORIOUS SIGHT

is a great congregation of worshippers. What histories are represented! What madness of ambition, what recklessness of the best gifts, what sin done in darkness, what plots of avarice, what brokenheartedness, what wealth, poverty, loneliness, pain; what strength, fury, nobleness, truth! Yet we are all one, one in sin, one in want. I pray God we may be one in the ineffable ecstatic joy of pardon through the Son of God.

Unrelieved solitude narrows a man's nature. We correct and complete one another. We settle each other into right proportions. We see greater breadths of the bounty and love of God when we compare our common experiences or utter our common thanksgivings. The hermit is a smaller man than the philanthropist. The solitary worshipper is overweighted with himself, the public worshipper is modified and stimulated by the surroundings which encompass him. A man must come out of himself if he would see himself; he must see the completion of himself in every other man in all the human race. Thus

FELLOWSHIP BECOMES TRUE INDIVIDUALITY.

It is not uncommon to hear men talking in some such words as "When I worship I go out into the temple of nature; I uncover my head in the aisles of the forest; I hush myself under the minster roof of the stars; I listen to the psalm of the sea." This kind of talk sounds as if it meant something. It touches one side of life; how far it touches the other remains to be seen. As Christians we claim to have sympathy with nature. From the rash talk of certain avowed lovers of nature it would seem that Christians, by reason of their Christianity, did not know the sea when they were looking at it, and that they required to have the sun pointed out with a rod before they could distinguish it from the moon. I love nature, I have seen some of her pictures, and heard many of her voices. She is always full of suggestion. When she clothes herself youthfully as in spring; when she blushes with all the hopes and sweet promises of summer; when she sits in all the quiet matronliness of autumn; when her hair is white with age in winter—throughout the whole there is beauty. Again and again we have been blessed by her soothing ministry.

But let me tell you something further. Nature is to me often the saddest of sights. She is

BUT A SUCCESSION OF PHRASES.

I cannot keep her at any point. The spring dies; the summer vanishes; autumn delivers her gifts and turns away; winter is a presence I would not detain; the sun is but for an appointed time, and the stars withdraw long before I have half counted them.

More than that, nature is but an alphabet, or, at most, a primer. I soon begin to find that she has no answer to my deepest wants, and that I can ask her questions that will stagger her with dismay. She pleases my intellect, amuses my fancy, piques my curiosity; but in all her meads and groves she has no plant which can heal the fatal wound of my sin! If I ask her for mercy, I am as one that raves in madness. If I ask her to find me a hiding-place from God, she turns away as from an insult! I am a sinner, and I must find an answer to my sin. My heart aches, and I ask for a physician that can extract the pain; my conscience tortures me, and I cry for rest. Then I find the spiritual sanctuary; I pass within the veil; I see the Cross, the Priest, the Sacrifice, and ever after nature is but an open court, and grace is the presence-chamber of the redeeming King.

* From STUDIES IN TEXTS. Vol., II. of a series of VI. (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall and Son.) As mere bits of literary polish and sparkle these discourses provide a rare treat. But that is their smallest claim to attention and admiration. They are full of the highest inspiration and suggestion, and luminous with fresh meanings and uses drawn from familiar passages and well-worn themes.

Harvest Praise.

In calm of autumn eve,
We in thy courts appear;
To thank Thee, Lord, for all thy gifts
That crown the passing year.

Thy bounty makes us glad:
With thankful hearts we see
The golden wheat-sheaf from the field,
The apple from the tree.

And hand is grasped in hand,
And hearts together flow—
Yet here and there we miss a friend
We met a year ago.

Though deserts we have crossed,
Where we could only pray,
Still manna fell—for God was there
To feed us day by day.

We praise our God with joy,
For this and many years;
Yet for the poor returns we make
Our songs are sung with tears.

Still for the gift of gifts
That brightens all the rest—
The gift of God's eternal life—
Hosannas swell the breast.

WOMEN'S MEETINGS.

A LARGE gathering of women was addressed on Monday evening by Rev. JOHN SMITH, D.D., of Edinburgh, speaking on Luke xix. 10.

Mrs. BARBOUR of Bonskeid, who presided at the tea meeting on Tuesday afternoon, spoke to those who had not been privileged to devote themselves to Christian work abroad, but who have the humbler, and not less consecrated, service of life at home as mothers, wives, and sisters. She told of a shopboy who had been led to take an interest in Divine things from observing his master's Christian life. The master, while quite unconscious of his influence, noticed an improvement in the boy's conduct. We are called to be witnesses for Christ. We all know people with whom we would like to share what we have. This may be done by lending them books which have helped ourselves.

Miss BURGESS gave a short account of the McAll Mission, especially in the West of France, and pleaded for deeper interest in this work.

Mrs. MIRRLEES, from Glasgow, spoke of the help of the National Union of Women Workers in organising different branches of work, and asked for sympathy and advice on behalf of young errand girls, who are kept on the street till late at night in all weathers, and who are almost untouched by existing agencies, Y.W.C.A., S.G.F.S., and training homes. It was suggested that public opinion should be aroused against girls being employed in this way.

Mrs. CUMMING told of a cottage lately taken by the Montrose branch of the Y.W.C.A. as a Holiday Home. The members have helped to furnish the house and do the work themselves, without even a matron. The cost is as low as possible—3d. a night.

After a few words from Miss Sandeman and Mrs. Stuart Thomson, the meeting closed.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. OATTS, from Glasgow, presided, and spoke of Abijah's motto (2 Chron. xiii. 12).

Mrs. STUART THOMSON urged the claims of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, which brings the Gospel to Europeans in India. The greatest stumbling-block to missionary work is the ungodly lives of professing Christians. They need help. God fades from the life of a man who never prays.

A letter was read from Miss OMOND, who is engaged in the Y.W.C.A. at Hutti, and who tells of the ravages of the plague in that district. Prayer for India was offered by Miss MURRAY GARTSHORE.

Miss LOUISA HOPE gave a short account of the Society for Female Education in the East, especially of the Orphanage at Nazareth and the day schools in the neighbourhood, where Moslem girls receive Christian teaching. A little fellaheen pupil, ten years old, who was dying, asked her teacher to read about the sufferings of Christ. When she heard the words, "Father, forgive them," etc., she said, "I have forgiven my enemies"; and at the words, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit," she began, "Into thy hands," and fell back and died.

Miss IMRIE spoke of work among the herring-fishers and curers at Fraserburgh. The fish have been so abundant this season that one man, counting his spoil one day, exclaimed, "It's Klondyke here!" The men and girls are out all day, but come to Gospel meetings at night. Many of the wives and mothers are godly women, and are pleased to be visited.

Charterhouse Science and Art Schools.—The winter session commenced on Saturday last. During the late session upwards of 700 students, mostly elementary teachers, availed themselves of the privileges afforded. Instruction of a decidedly practical character is given in most of the sciences at a nominal fee, whilst in art, at an equally low rate, students may be advanced in their studies. Classes will be held to prepare candidates for matriculation (Lond.), the clerical, medical (including mental), legal, and other exams. Students who aim at becoming proficient in chemistry (organic and inorganic) have the opportunity of working in a well-fitted laboratory. Aspirants for University honours can, at a small expense, be assisted in their studies. Those interested in education will rejoice to learn that the work commenced by the late Rev. William Rogers, M.A., and continued by a late vice-chairman of the London School Board, is so vigorously continued by the present president, Rev. Henry Swann, M.A. Full particulars may be had from C. Smith, at the schools.

Lady Henry Somerset at Pontymoile.

An address on Social Reform was given by Lady Henry Somerset, in the Mission Hall, Pontymoile, on Wednesday evening last week. The rector of the parish, Rev. A. W. A. Williams, presided. The hall was crowded, and hundreds were turned away from the doors.

Lady Henry commenced by saying that she had pleasant memories of successful meetings in that beautiful hall. She was also glad to be present to show sympathy with Mr. Wintle, whom she counted amongst her warmest friends. She believed in praise; she thought they would be better men and women if they did but praise each other more. They were too apt to wait till the ear was no longer quick to listen, and the hand no longer warm to grasp, before they said the things that would send the human heart bounding on with a fresh incentive to be still worthier of praise.

She had been asked to speak that evening upon a subject which was as wide as the world and as large as the universe. Social reform was making unquestionable and undoubted progress. All reforms and onward movements, everything noble and inspiring, came from God, and God's work could never fail. Although the night was dark, and they saw much that made them sorrowful, and although the sin of the world seemed to rise up like a giant, and they strained their eyes through the impenetrable darkness, their voices crying, "Watchman, what of the night?" there came back the answer, "The morning breaketh."

She did not think there was any division between religious and secular work, for everything that involved the blessing and welfare of mankind was religious, because it was part of the work for which God cared. Social reform was an integral part of religion, and was involved in that one sentence, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." So long as their neighbour suffered; so long as the bread-winner was ground down in poverty; so long as they were compelled to live in hovels not fit for rats; so long as those who made money out of the toil of the poor gave them not proper wages, —so long they as Christians must work on for this reformation.

Even at this end of the nineteenth century there were some who felt it was not a woman's province to advocate any question that so largely affected subjects over which they too long had drawn a veil. But there was no question that men and women were called upon to suffer that they were were not called upon to face. Woman was pleading with more effect for social reforms because she was pleading with the interest of the great trust committed to her—the trust of Home. They too long restricted their idea of Home to the four walls of their own houses. The great human family was their Home.

There were three great aspects of social reform, and there was one evil which was the more terrifying because it grew apace, like a weed, choking all that was best in the heart of the nation—

"THE GREED FOR GOLD" OR "MAMMON WORSHIP."

She had seen too much of the sadness of the world to undervalue the legitimate use of money, but there was an aspect of this money getting which was infinitely serious, and formed one of the great questions of social reform, and that was the idea of getting money without giving value in return. They might have that idea when they were employing underpaid men; when they went from shop to shop to get the cheapest article, little caring what it cost the worker. Oh! if bargain hunters would pause, and think what those cheap goods meant, they would not buy at the price of blood.

There was another aspect, which held in its iron grip the greatest as well as the poorest in the land, and that was the sin of gambling. They thought so little of a game of chance, whether in the gaming room, Stock Exchange, or racecourse, and they heard people say that they never played for more than they could afford. Still, the same idea was at the root of it; it was getting that for which they gave no return. All this was simply the result of the greed for gold.

There was still another evil which they were called upon to face. She had been asked to speak specially on this to-day, as the work of the Pontymoile Mission was connected with it—this was the evil of impurity. Some people might say that this was a subject which could not be touched upon in a mixed audience, but the cry of thousands was rising in their ears too plainly to make it possible for them to be silent, because it was a subject connected with the Home. There was nothing so strong in the interest of Home as purity of man and woman. She believed that the time had come when every true-hearted and noble man was facing the fact that purity was not for one class alone, but that it was a white life for two, an equal standard for men and women. They talked of fallen girls; they sought to rescue fallen women. There was no fallen woman without a fallen man; there was no woman condemned to stand in the shadow of shame but there was a partner in guilt to stand by her side in the sight of God, and it was only just that they should recognise this,—that God never created any class of women to be degraded by men.

We often hear of illegitimate children. There was no such thing as an "illegitimate child" or "illegitimate mother," but there were such individuals as illegitimate fathers; and they were the men who betrayed a woman and then left her and her little one to bear the shame of the man's inhuman conduct. Her ladyship made an eloquent and touching appeal to the large congregation for funds to carry on the work of Mr. Wintle's Pontymoile Rescue and Preventive Home.

The Church Congress.

EVANGELICAL CONFERENCE.

A LARGELY-ATTENDED conference, convened by the Church Congress Evangelical Union, was held in the Technical College, Bradford, on Monday evening. Sir John Kennaway, M.P., was in the chair, and the subject for consideration was "The Present Crisis in the Church of England: its Gravity, Causes, and Remedy."

The Chairman, addressing the meeting, said they met on a most important occasion. They were called together to consider a crisis in the Church. Some would say that was too strong a word. Archbishop Tait had said that ever since he was a child the Church of England had been going through a crisis, and she had always come out unharmed; but certainly no one denied that there was now a very deep-seated anxiety. It was evidenced by the space which The Times newspaper was giving to the question. Men had not known where they were, and it was an open secret that men who were ready to come forward to do great things for the Church by gifts were withholding their hands till they saw what might be the outcome. They could not shut their eyes to this. They must face the dangers with patience and prayer, but with determination, earnestly seeking the guidance of God's Holy Spirit. He thought it would not be denied that there were services carried on in some churches which a Romanist would not distinguish from his own, with the only exception of the authority of the Pope. The English Church Union, a growing and enlarging body, it was stated numbering between 5000 and 6000 supporters, clerical supporters, through its president, speaking at Bristol, said they wished nothing so much from the bottom of their hearts as to be allowed to make their confession to and receive their Communion from the hands of Roman clergy abroad. He also said there was nothing in the authoritative documents of the English Church Union essentially irreconcilable with the doctrine of the Church of Rome.

This movement, the Chairman continued, was not of recent origin. He pointed out that as long ago as 1866 Dean Hook stated that the whole principle of the Reformation consisted in changing the Mass into a Communion; whereas at present the whole object of the Ritualist was to change the Communion into a Mass. Alluding to the pastoral issued by the Bishops in 1874, the Chairman said that notwithstanding that the tide of sacerdotalism had never receded, any ground gained had never been given up, and many feared there would soon be no foothold left for loyal sons of the Reformation. Some tried to minimise that advance; but he quoted figures to show that there had been considerable increase in the number of churches where ritualistic practices were carried on, and he said that the man in the street recognised the existence of a crisis, the enemies of the Church recognised it, and even a political party in search of a cry would be very ready to take it up.

Who was responsible for the present crisis? Some fixed it on the bishops. There was, certainly, a very general belief that the bishops had shut their eyes to much of what was going on, and had manifested a reluctance to pass censure or disapproval, and had even sanctioned it by their presence and with their patronage. But had they not judged too hardly? He thought to some extent that they had. (Cries of "No.") Some of the bishops had spoken out, and he referred to the Bishops of Southwell and Hereford. The Archbishop of the northern province, too, said he realised the gravity of the position, and they should allow for the difficulties of the situation. Were they to institute prosecutions? He drew their attention to the remarks of Bishop Ryle, who said nothing would induce him to take any further action in that direction. No doubt the bishops had got great power and influence. They used in the old time to be rough on the Evangelicals, whom they called "Church Methodists." He did not believe, however, that they all realised the gravity of the situation, or they would have shown the world and the Church that they realised it, and were determined to drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's Word. They were looking forward to an utterance from the Archbishop of Canterbury. They wanted him to take the matter up, and hoped he would put forward some plan by which the Church might be able to present a united front to Rome and infidelity.

Granted a crisis, he hoped they would approach it in a spirit of faith and trust, and not of panic and fear, and keep their heads clear and their hands clean. They must also look ahead, and if they wished the future generations to be Protestant they must show that Protestantism was not a mere negation, but a witness for truth.

Prebendary Eardley Wilmot read a paper on the gravity of the situation, in which he asserted that practices were being carried on which were directly contrary to the doctrines of the Church of England, and which could not be distinguished from the worst errors of Rome. He urged the clergy to realise the danger and reassert their position.

Rev. A. E. Barnes Lawrence, speaking on the causes of the crisis, stated that the Church of England knew no sacerdotal system, and he warned Ritualists to be wary of the dangers of Disestablishment, which would certainly not suit their plans. He asserted that if anything was clear it was that the laity were not in favour of the Oxford movement. He also declared that a large number of High Churchmen were on their side, and that the mass of the people were also with them.

Archdeacon Madden said that the most objectionable feature of the Ritualist movement was the persistent attempt to restore the Mass with the objective presence. He asked the clergy if they were determined to stand by the party as represented on the platform, and if they were prepared to discountenance the fingering of the trinkets of Rome by the English clergymen, and to resist the undoing of the Reformation settlement. If that were so, they would be invited to join a committee for maintaining the apostolic character of their Church, and to resist with the utmost determination all efforts to introduce services and practices which were contrary to the Reformation.

Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, D.D., moved:—"That this meeting cordially invites all loyal Churchmen, prepared to uphold in their integrity the principles of the Church as derived from Apostolic times and authoritatively set forth at the Reformation, to unite in furtherance of a memorial on the present crisis to be presented to the two Archbishops." In moving the resolution, he said there were a great number of Nonconformist brethren who were ready to join with them in the present crisis. Mr. Cruddas, M.P., seconded the resolution.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe moved that—"The following gentlemen be elected to serve on a committee on the part of this meeting, and that they be instructed to add to their number Churchmen of other schools of thought who are loyal to the Reformation settlement:—Sir J. H. Kennaway, M.P., Sir Henry Bemrose, M.P., Rev. E. R. Eardley Wilmot, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. H. C. G. Moule, D.D., Dr. Robertson, and Rev. A. E. B. Lawrence." The resolution was supported by Dr. Robertson, Dean Fremantle, and Sir H. Bemrose, M.P., and carried.—The Times.

The Late Mr. Cheyne Brady.

A LITTLE while ago there fell asleep at Cannes, after a brief illness, one whose name had been widely known in Christian circles for many years, although more recently his personality had not been so much before the public. His contributions to the Evangelical Press, and specially to tract literature, have had an immense circulation in many countries. Cheyne Brady, who was born in Dublin in 1817, was the second son of Sir Nicholas and Lady Brady, and nephew of a famous Lord Chancellor of Ireland, Sir Maziere Brady. After being educated in Ireland and trained to the profession of law, Cheyne Brady became eventually Chief Registrar of the Irish Court of Bankruptcy, and this office he held for many years.

When that mighty spiritual renaissance, the Revival of 1859-62, swept over the kingdom, it left its most enduring traces among the educated classes of the Emerald Isle. It was then that Cheyne Brady, with a host of others learned in the law, first received that definite spiritual impulse and awakening to a new life, which we call "conversion." Conversion in the Sister Island in that day implied much more than perhaps it does to-day with not a few. It carried with it a simplicity of life and an unworldliness of thought almost absolute. It meant the cheerful renunciation even of social successes and distinctions for Christ's sake, and a real recognition of the brotherhood of all believers. It was not that any hard or fast rule on these points was laid down or accepted as the fixed standard for the religious life. Nothing would have been more foreign to the very spirit of those who, yielding in all things to the "expulsive power of a new affection," declared in their daily lives that they were not their own, but Christ's. But there was an intense realism about this new life, and probably it was that which made it so powerfully attractive, just as asceticism has always, and will ever, powerfully influence those who, rejecting scornfully other evidence, cannot away with the subjective proofs of "other-worldliness" given in a daily denial of things which most men set highest store by. So during this period of great religious awakening nothing was more potent in drawing within the ranks of the Christian host members of the learned professions (classes often supposed to be sceptically disposed on other grounds) than the spectacle of distinguished and leading professional men, lawyers and doctors, apparently "counting all things but loss that they might win Christ and be found in Him."

Early in 1862 it was stated at a public meeting in Dublin that at that time there were few really eminent lawyers or physicians in that university town who were not themselves either pronounced followers of Christ or favourable to the deeply religious movement which had then reached its highest point. Among members of the legal profession, Cheyne Brady was not the least known, and he lost no time in bearing witness to the great truths which had transformed his life. When, in 1861, he was enabled to rejoice in the full light of the Gospel, he seems to have asked, like Paul of old, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Hosts of young Christians living in and around Dublin then began to illustrate by their zealous activities the conduct of those early disciples who, scattered abroad, "went everywhere preaching the Word." Prominent among those was the subject of our sketch. Every hour that could be withdrawn from professional duty was cheerfully and gladly devoted to the winning of souls. There may have been crudeness in the teaching of those "unauthorised laymen," as an eminent clerical critic of that day called them. Some aspects of the doctrine of the Gospel may indeed have been presented at the expense of others. But behind all and sweetening all, and carrying with it a divine afflatus that was irresistible, was a downright love of Christ and an earnest yearning for the souls of men. For "the Word of the Lord had free course" in those days, and "was glorified."

Cheyne Brady was gifted with a great amount of common sense. He had also naturally a kindly and benevolent manner, and, better than all, he was full of the zeal of the Lord. So, without pining for "some great thing to do or secret thing to know," he quietly did the work lying at his hand, and he began to see his harvest almost immediately. The writer once heard him say that the first convert given him was one associated with him professionally at the Four Courts. Always an earnest and humble-minded student of the Word of God, he was meanwhile being prepared for larger and more fruitful service. In 1867 he resigned his office, and, retiring on a pension, devoted his life from that hour to the spread of the Gospel. He was encouraged and sustained in all his ministry of love by his devoted wife, daughter of the late John Arnold Sanders, of Bath. Entering every open door, Cheyne Brady devoted himself to telling out sweetly and persuasively the old, old, yet ever new, story, which alone can satisfy the yearnings of the hearts of men. He and his message found wide acceptance. It was all so real to him. The man was so unconventional and so true; the Bible was so implicitly put forth as the one and sole fount and authority for all that was taught, that it is not to be wondered at that in a quiet way—for Cheyne Brady was no orator to sway vast crowds—hearts were touched and anxious souls were led to Him who is the life of men.

In 1869, his first visit with his family was made to the Continent, and here, as elsewhere, ever on his Master's business, amid his various wanderings up and down Switzerland, Italy and Germany, opportunities were unceasingly sought and found to scatter the seeds of the Gospel, and to lead men to Christ, as well as to encourage and strengthen the hands of Christian workers in all the churches. Ultimately his field of labour extended to the United States of America.

As may be imagined, Cheyne Brady was no ecclesiastical partisan. He cultivated a large, brotherly and sympathetic spirit, and all who loved our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity were as his brethren and sisters. Meanwhile, his special gift as a tract-writer began to be developed. About the year 1868 his first tract, entitled "Alice," was published, and from that date almost till his death his pen was usefully employed in preparing little books and papers for evangelistic purposes. Some of these have had almost world-wide circulation. Among others may be mentioned the series of "Gospel Leaves," begun in 1880. The Leaves have been translated into nine or ten different languages, and circulated literally by millions. Mr. Brady's various publications nearly reached 200 in number, and were originally brought out by Drummond, of Stirling. Now they may be obtained in London, either from the Religious Tract Society or from the Children's Book Room, 158, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Of late years Mr. and Mrs. Cheyne Brady, with their eldest daughter, took up their residence at Cannes, where their house was ever open to welcome Christians passing through the Riviera, and meetings for the regular reading and study of Holy Scripture became an established means of grace to many who, compelled by feeble health to live abroad, found in Mr. Brady's house and companionship the fellowship and encouragement they needed. Here it was that the end came. Two years ago, in consequence of a serious fall at Acqui, Italy, he suffered from congestion of the brain. Then those valuable meetings formerly held in his house had to be reluctantly given up. Ever since then increasing feebleness and the infirmities of age became more and more manifest to those who lovingly watched the declining years of this dear servant of the Lord. In the last week of May he took to his bed. The end was not far off. On the early morning of his last day he asked the nurse in attendance to sing to him, and he seemed greatly to enjoy the familiar words and tunes of "Rock of Ages" and "Abide with Me." A little while after, without pain, he sank quietly to sleep about 4.30 in the afternoon of June 3, leaving behind him a widow and three children to mourn his loss and to revere his memory. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them."

An Unusual Prayer Meeting.—On Saturday evening, being the day before the Jews' great Day of Atonement, a special prayer meeting was held for Israel at Chatsworth-road Church, West Norwood. The peculiarity of the meeting was that all the prayers offered were by Jewish converts. They came from different parts, but chiefly from the East of London. Pastor Archibald G. Brown presided, but beyond reading a few portions of Scripture took no part, as he wished the whole meeting to be conducted by Jews. About 300 Gentiles attended the meeting.

Home Missions.

The Metropolitan Theatre.

We have used this building for twenty-three years, and with some little difficulty I have again secured it for another year. Last year it was rebuilt and enlarged to seat 3000 people, and though the rent was raised fifty per cent. yet we were encouraged to take it, and were greatly cheered by overflowing audiences, and by seeing many definite and distinct cases of conversion.

It should be known that a determined effort will be made at the County Council meeting, early in October, to permit music-halls to open on Sundays, ostensibly for so-called sacred music. This would permit the Sunday League or the proprietors of these places to charge for admission, providing there are a few free seats advertised. The Sunday League are trying to get the Alhambra for this purpose; if they do, the other places will follow. The object will then be to fill the music halls with people who pay to go in.

I have had to decide whether to be willing to have my rent raised again very considerably for this year, or permit the Sunday League to make an offer. I have decided to continue to hold and use the Metropolitan Theatre for the preaching of the Gospel for the twenty-fourth season, despite the very heavy extra expenses; but should be thankful for the help and fellowship of my fellow-Christians.

We have closed our week-night meetings in the Park. At the last meeting we were greatly cheered by a young man saying at the end of the service, "I was brought to Christ here a fortnight ago," and by a middle-aged man saying, "Fourteen years ago I was converted in the prayer meeting one Saturday night, and my wife also soon afterwards." A man has since called and told me that he was awakened and converted in the Park during July. We are full of praises to God for great encouragement given this summer in Hyde Park.

On Sunday last we closed our twenty-seventh year of Gospel services in the Park, and are praying for God's blessing on our winter campaign. Will those to whom this work and testimony for Christ commends itself help us at this time? Hyde Park Hall, which we have used for twenty-five years, we have been obliged to repair and re-furnish, and it was reopened on Saturday last; and at the prayer meeting five young men bore testimony to having been converted through the services recently held.

Dublin Medical Mission.

Fifty years ago a medical missionary was sent by the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society to labour amongst the Roman Catholic population at Parsonstown, in the very heart of Ireland. The softening effect of this beneficent agency in winning by love those long prejudiced against the pure Gospel was signally displayed for many years in that locality. It is strange that all over the country there are not by this time similar agencies steadily at work. In Dublin for the last six years, and in Limerick for a year, medical missions have been established. It was the writer's privilege, a few days ago, to visit the medical mission in 6, Chancery-place, Dublin, and no apology is needed for bringing before your readers the great and good work there going on.

A committee, uniting all sections of the Christian Church, supervises the mission, and the only paid officials at the present time are the matron, the Bible-woman, the nurse, and the caretaker. Three honorary physicians render their services freely, and a large staff of lady dispensers, speakers and others help to carry forward the work.

Although no compulsion is exercised in regard to attendance at the Gospel address at the dispensary, which always accompanies the giving out of the medicine, the great majority of the patients are perfectly willing to listen quietly to the words spoken and the testimony given. Prejudice has been conquered by gentleness and love, and those who before were ready to greet the workers with hisses and stones now in many cases regard them as their best friends.

It was a Monday when the writer saw the actual work in full swing, and when he had the opportunity of addressing the patients, of whom some sixty had gathered together. One who knew the people well thought that only two or three of these were Protestants, and yet, with hardly an exception, they listened well to a brief Gospel address, and joined heartily in the singing of Sankey's hymns. They were gathered from amongst the very poor, and evidently highly appreciated the skilful treatment, the friendly greeting, and, above all, the love with which they were welcomed.

There is no doubt that many a one who, in that hall from time to time, had heard the truth, has yielded his heart in simple trust to the Lord Jesus Christ, and will thank God through eternity for the Dublin Medical Mission.

Such a work should appeal to Christians far and near. Funds are needed for its further development. The hon. sec., Mrs. E. J. Figgis, jun., Hawthorn, Sidney Parade, Dublin, will be pleased to send a report or to answer inquiries.

Rev. Thomas Connellan.

This well-known worker has been preaching and lecturing in Oban, Belfast, and elsewhere. At a public meeting in Oban, presided over by Mr. Louis P. Nott, Chairman of the Manchester Protestant Thousand, Mr. Connellan replied to an extraordinary charge delivered by Bishop Chinnery Haldane, of Argyll and the Isles. This Bishop has placed the Cowley Fathers in Iona, and in a public charge he advised his clergy to make retreats there and go to confession. He declares he has been going to confession to a priest himself for thirty years, and that each time he confessed his sins to a priest he found he had made a new start in righteousness. Mr. Connellan's address on the confessional was greatly appreciated. Copies of it have been printed and widely circulated in the district.

In Grosvenor Hall, Belfast, Mr. Connellan preached to over three thousand people. He gave most interesting information regarding his work among the Roman Catholics, and appealed for funds to meet the growing needs of his mission. He told, among other instances, of an awakening among Irish Roman Catholics, of a gentleman who had been a professor in several Roman Catholic colleges, but had recently been led to give his heart to Christ, and was coming to labour as an evangelist in Ireland. He also told of a nun twenty-nine years in a convent, who was now in Dublin engaged in writing a book on her convent experiences. Mr. Connellan had a busy week in Belfast.

The Protestant Forward Movement has for several years been carrying forward Evangelical testimony in the parks and public buildings of the metropolis. The president, Mr. Job Williams, is well known on controversial platforms. Particulars of the work may be had from the hon. sec., Mr. Thomas Walker, 22, Daleview-road, Stamford Hill, N.

Homes for Working Girls.

In issuing the annual report of the work in these very useful institutions, Mr. John Shrimpton, the founder and director, remarks: "The lifting-power of these Homes, in the building up of the lives and characters of virtuous working girls and young women, cannot be over-estimated, and yet our financial needs just now are great."

As many readers are aware, "in addition to providing home-like comfort and advantages for the younger women workers of the Metropolis, the Homes afford much profitable recreation for those who dwell in them, and, above all, they surround them with Christian influences and friendly guidance at the most critical period of their lives. A leading characteristic of them, too, is that their object is to assist solely the industrious, and that no lazy or indolent ones can live in them. Any respectable working girl or young woman, not more than twenty-five years of age, who has to earn her own livelihood, and who can substantiate her character, is eligible for admission, but not those who have 'fallen.'"

The Homes have been well filled during the year—it might be said, rather, that they have been crowded—and often has it occurred that applicants without a home or friend in London have had to be denied admittance because of lack of accommodation. Few, perhaps, can enter into the feelings of an almost penniless girl, timid and modest, and without relatives or friends in London or in that particular quarter in which her work lies; indeed, it is often distressing to have to send such a one away, and the more so as it is difficult to direct her where to go. Still, these Homes will accommodate only a certain number, and therefore, in spite of her helplessness and loneliness, many an applicant has at times to be refused.

Bible talks and other meetings are a prominent feature of the home life, and it is interesting to note that the inmates contributed nearly a hundred pounds to missionary societies and philanthropic work. On the annual "thanksgiving day" a united morning service was held at six o'clock in Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone-road. Imagine the surprise of finding, when the clock was striking six, a congregation of between 600 and 700 girls and young women already gathered, most of them having risen to a five o'clock breakfast, and then travelled a considerable distance from the respective Homes dotted over various districts of the metropolis.

The scientific lectures, readings, recitations, etc., have lent variety to the daily round, while strong personal interest in the spiritual welfare of each inmate remains a cheering characteristic of the work. The address of Mr. Shrimpton is 3, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

King's Own Mission.

It has been a grand summer for open-air work, and we have made good use of it. In addition to the week-evening services three meetings have been held every Sunday, and we praise God for the many results we have witnessed in changed lives. The work of the mission generally has been blessed. Our congregations have been larger this summer than at any previous time, and many have confessed Christ. Our prayer-meetings are amongst our best gatherings.

Notwithstanding the big effort we have made in connection with the purchase and cleaning scheme we shall only require about £50 to enable us to close our account at the end of the year free of debt.

O. L. Heatley.

Wood Green, N.—The work known as "The Welcome Mission" is situate in Acacia-road, a very poor district of Wood Green. It was founded about sixteen years ago by a small band of working men and women, and God has graciously blessed the work. The present accommodation is totally inadequate to its needs, and if it were not for the kindness of a neighbour between thirty and forty scholars of the Sunday-school would have to be refused admittance. Workers have decided to open a building fund for the erection of a small hall, which it is estimated will cost about £400, and which will be placed in the hands of trustees. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. J. E. Chandler, Park Villa, Palace-road, New Southgate, N.—Geo. A. Pike.

Church Enterprise in the Soudan.

THERE has been active missionary enterprise in the Soudan for many years past; but, with one exception, it has been entirely Mohammedan. The tribes, which were pagan or Christian at the time of the first Egyptian conquest in 1825, are now, as far as Khartoum, Mohammedans; Coptic Christianity, which had lingered on in some villages, has withered away, and the Soudan in general may be looked upon as the scene of the greatest modern triumphs of Mohammedan missionary zeal.

Meanwhile the Christian Church has been at work on the fringe of the Soudan. On the east as far as Kassala there are Italian Franciscans; at Lado, a thousand miles beyond Khartoum, we believe that there is a Belgian Mission; in the Ubanghi district there are French Missions; and in the Western Soudan we believe that at one time French Missions had, like French explorers, advanced much further than any English Missions; but they suffered a sad check, and the reason of it ought to be very significant to us. Some ten or fifteen years ago it was the policy of France to back up Samory, the great Mohammedan conqueror of the Soudan, hoping for his assistance in repelling the extension of the English sphere of influence in West Africa. But their Missions were not long in learning the truth that we are so slowly apprehending, in spite of our experience in Egypt, that it is not the Englishman or the Frenchman that the Arab hates, but the European and the Christian. As Samory's dominion increased, the area open to French Missions was contracted; at present we believe that all Missions within his dominions have been withdrawn; and the burden of colonial letters in the French papers is continually that until Samory is crushed, by a joint expedition of French and English troops, all advance of civilisation in the Western Soudan is impossible.

It is a lesson full of warning to Christian people and to statesmen in England. We are about to set up a Mohammedan Government in the Eastern Soudan, which will probably extend its rule over as large an area as Samory's has. Egyptian government has so poor a record in the Soudan that we may take for granted that for very shame Englishmen will remain to direct and control, and the English power will be paramount there. But are we to see these provinces gradually closed to Christian influence through the extension, under our auspices, of Mohammedan civilisation? They were once a fair field for Christian enterprise. According to the report of the so-called Austrian Mission, the "Missione dell' Africa Centrale," at El Obeid, the capital of Kordofan, they could reckon upon about fifty baptisms a year in the later years of their Mission, which was destroyed in 1883, within ten years of its foundation; up the river the Nubas, Shillooks, and many other tribes were still pagans, and therefore disposed to receive the faith, as the Mohammedans never are. Whether they are fetish-worshippers still it is hard to say, but that they will be in ten years Mohammedans if they are not Christians there is little doubt. No doubt they will have opportunities for learning the faith in some form or another.

The American Presbyterians, who have done such notable educational work in Egypt, will probably be the first to open schools at the future seat of government. The Italian Fathers of the Austrian Mission, who have kept their colony of Soudanese Christians, which they successfully withdrew at the last moment from Khartoum, upon their farm behind the Gezireh Palace Hotel at Cairo, are ready to go back to claim their great mission building, which is still standing at Khartoum, and in the garden of which several of their brethren are buried; and we have lately read that the Church Missionary Society, who have a small but efficient hospital in Cairo, have so strengthened their staff there as to be ready to move up the river, and to open a medical mission as soon as possible. But ought these sporadic efforts by various missions, two of which in no way represent the mass of Christians at home either in faith or in nationality, to satisfy our sense of responsibility? Is it not plain that something much more decisive and much more strenuous on the part of the English Church is called for if we are to do our duty to these provinces which we are now bringing under Egyptian rule? In a word, ought there not to be a mission sent to Khartoum to lay the foundations of a strong native church, which shall eventually join hands with that of Uganda, Likoma, and Capetown?

There is one obvious difficulty which may be noted. There will probably be some official objection to such a step. It has been our policy in Egypt to get everything to work under our control, and yet to leave the Egyptians apparently in complete possession. And the consecration of an English Bishop for the Soudan will be an open assertion of our right permanently to occupy the Nile Valley, and will by no means pass unnoticed. But this is a difficulty that may disappear in a few weeks, as our Egyptian policy must seriously be modified by the overthrow of the Khalifa's rule, and in any case could not be insuperable.

We note that the Nile Valley lies within the missionary jurisdiction of Bishop Blyth, and within the sphere of influence of the Church Missionary Society. As the Bishop has hitherto not been able to do much in Egypt beyond maintaining a mission school in Cairo, and the Church Missionary Society have had only two clergy working there, we do not suppose that these somewhat conflicting presumptive rights to undertake missionary work in the Soudan will cause any real difficulty, if once English Churchmen realise what are the duties imposed upon us now that we are subjecting vast provinces to the rule of a Mohammedan Government, which at its best has no elements of progress native to it, and which, if we were criminal enough to leave it to itself, would probably relapse into the state it was in twenty years ago, when the tribes that it misgoverned were driven to welcome even the Mahdi as a deliverer.—The Guardian.

Dundee Christian Conference.

THIS annual gathering of Christians took place last week, and was productive of much blessing to the large numbers who attended from day to day. On Tuesday morning Lord Kinnaird presided, and in a few well-chosen remarks introduced the subject of the past day's conference, which was "The Grace of the Father is the Gift of the Son."

Rev. T. S. Dickson, Edinburgh, gave the first address. The grace of the Father, he said, is the very fountain-head of redemption. Grace is one of the great keywords of the New Testament. God might and does love worthy objects such as holy angels and unfallen man, but He chooses to love the unworthy, and his love thus becomes grace. He went on to show that grace is eternal in its origin, sovereign in its actings, visible in its form, and universal in its scope.

Rev. W. M. Clow, Edinburgh, followed, on "Christ as the Gift of the Father." God manifests grace in providence, but his goodness is most fully manifested in redeeming man. When Christ became incarnate He passed out of glory, leaving God the Father and God the Spirit behind. The Godhead was thus impoverished. When Jesus walked among men God felt that He was bereft of his Son that the world might be saved.

In the afternoon a conversation took place on the subject of

"LUKEWARMNESS AND ITS REMEDY."

Lord Kinnaird again presided. Rev. W M. Clow stated that lukewarmness was a disease from which many Christians were suffering. Some of its causes were disinclination for prayer, little relish for the Scriptures, the spirit of criticism, and the giving up of good habits.

At the evening meeting Rev. T. S. Dickson discussed the "Lack of Conversions and Causes Thereof." Men, he said, were not converted in the old-fashioned way, and in such numbers now. The railway and the cycle were competing with the Sabbath services, and carrying tens of thousands to the country and the seashore. There is a growing reluctance to accept Christ on the spot. The spirit of the age has affected many. Few are ready for the good news of salvation; they need first the bad news as to their awful condition. Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich, followed with an evangelistic address.

WEDNESDAY.

On Wednesday Lord Overtoun presided. Principal Rainy, Edinburgh, spoke on the "Self-sacrificing Love of Christ in his Life." Jesus was laying his life down from day to day till He reached the great sacrifice by which it ended. That love was repeatedly assailed. It had to meet friends and foes; it had to face the wise and the unwise; it had to come into contact with all the features of this manifold world in their interminable variety, yet it remained the same. His life was one of strange sorrow. Few understood Him. Yet his love was always true to itself, and never swayed from his great purpose. Though his teaching contained stern elements, yet all was in harmony with his love.

The same sacrificing love was seen in his treatment of his disciples. They were liable to fall into many mistakes, yet He made companions of them. He knew all their weaknesses, yet He called them friends, and looked forward to an eternal fellowship with them. Only love could have done this. We may claim a part of this interest, for it is powerful to adapt itself to each individual case.

Rev. T. Galland Hartley, Blairgowrie, spoke on "The Self-sacrificing Love of Jesus in his Death." Christ spent his last night in comforting his friends. When his enemies had found Him He asked that the disciples might be allowed to go their way. In the midst of his trials He looked lovingly towards Peter, who had denied Him. On the cross He prayed for his foes, plucked the dying thief as a brand from the burning, and entrusted his mother to the care of John. This love is to be at once trusted in and then commended to others.

In the afternoon an address was delivered by Lord Overtoun on

"FAMILY RELIGION."

He said God deals with men first as units, then as families and communities and nations. He has made certain sheltering places for the young, and one of these is the home. The acknowledgment of God in family life is one of the links which bind it together. Let the Saviour be made a welcome guest, and parental authority will be all the stronger.

THURSDAY.

On Thursday Mr. G. E. Morgan presided, and announced as the subject of conference "The Grace of the Spirit." Different aspects of truth, he said, had been emphasised at different periods. Once it was the Atonement, later on it was the Fatherhood of God, now it is the work of the Holy Spirit. In these days there is so much error that it is highly important for every child of God to know the Spirit of truth.

Rev. Dr. Black, Inverness, then addressed the Conference on the "Personality of the Spirit." The Spirit is a person, He is called the "Comforter," a term which contains all that is implied in the word friend. He came to impart knowledge. A principle could not do this. The Spirit and Jesus Christ are interchangeable terms. The visible Christ is away, but the unseen Christ is present by his Spirit in the Church. The Spirit is the sent One. Only a person can be sent. The Spirit is the messenger of God to the world, and He comes to those who are prepared for Him and exalt Him on the throne of their affections. What of the Spirit's work? In the world He convinces of sin, righteousness, and judgment. In the Church his office is to glorify Christ and to guide his people into all truth.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, followed, speaking on "The Work of the Spirit." Referring to Acts iii., he said that the Spirit produced unity. Intrepid Peter and timid John could walk together and forget their individual angularities. The Spirit also produces prayerfulness, and teaches Christians to see the needs of others and help them. A British Association may admire the beautiful gate of the Temple, but it is Christianity that looks at the helpless mendicant humanity lying in front. To reach effectually the half-damned slums of our great cities there is needed the irrepressible element of Pentecostal power.

In the afternoon a missionary gathering took place under the presidency of Rev. G. H. Morrison of Dundee. The first speaker was Rev. M. N. Posa, a coloured preacher, who told of work among the villages of India. Mr. W. J. Sinclair, of the Congo Balolo Mission, described his journey from Antwerp to the centre of Africa, and the founding of Christian Churches among the native tribes on the Upper Congo.

The concluding meeting took place in the evening, when there was a crowded attendance. Mr G. E. Morgan again presided, and stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. J. E. Houston, of Cambuslang, and Rev. Henry Montgomery, Belfast.

FROM OTHER LANDS

Notes from Tasmania.

GOD has been working manifestly in connection with some of the churches of this city. In the Memorial Church, which was built in memory of Mr. Henry Reed, there are crowded congregations, and all the agencies connected with the church are full of activity. The ministry of Mr. Piercey is fervent and spiritual, evangelical and evangelistic, and conversions are constantly enjoyed.

A recent mission at the Primitive Methodist church, in which several of the city ministers took part, resulted in many cases of clear decision for Christ. Special prayer meetings at one of the Wesleyan churches last week resulted in a number of conversions. The wave of blessing has not reached our place yet; but we have unfeignedly rejoiced in the success of our sister churches.

Good news came to hand lately from Deloraine, where Rev. M. G. Hart, of Launceston, has been holding mission services. A goodly number of persons, representing all sections of the Church, have been led to inquiry, and many of them to actual decision for Christ.

Tattersall's Gambling Agency, introduced by our Treasurer because of the financial gain to the Colony, and blessed by the Premier, continues to curse the people. It has only been with us for a few years. These have been years of sowing; what the harvest will be it is impossible to tell.

Our Sunday Closing Act is notoriously disregarded, and the number of young men staggering through the streets on Sunday is becoming a disgrace to the city.

The winter is nearly over, and has enjoyed a larger rainfall than has been known for a few years. Already the warm sun is causing the trees to bud and the green grass to spring, but the farmers are still asking for more rain.

If any are concerned to know of my health, I am thankful to be able to say that it seems to be quite established, and when God has achieved his purpose by me here I am hoping to return home.

Launceston, Aug. 23. GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Victorian Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

FOR some considerable time there has been little to report in regard to spiritual matters in Victoria. Things have gone on in the usual routine, and some are inclined to think that little progress has been made, and that things are drifting backward. Certainly, these are quiet times. Worldliness appears to be creeping into the Church again; in some cases the destructive force of Higher Criticism is doing its work, and people complain that we need not look much to the pulpit for spiritual help. There is another side to the picture, however. Among all denominations there are stirring seasons in certain directions.

The Christian Endeavour Society is doing much to promote good-fellowship amongst different denominations. In September the intercolonial sittings of the delegates from all quarters of Australia are to be held, and great interest and enthusiasm are shown in the preparations for the gatherings.

The C.I.M. has always a good time in Melbourne, and the interest in China has been increased since the massacre of the two Misses Saunders in that country, and the departure of their mother from Melbourne for the scene of their martyrdom to assist in the evangelisation of their benighted murderers and others. The Hawthorn Church of England, a suburban church near Melbourne, held a series of evangelistic services about a fortnight ago, and concluded the series by a missionary gathering. One lady from India gave a stirring account of work among the women in India, and Miss McIvor delivered a most interesting address on the opium question and its bearing on China.

Those interested in the Y.M.C.A. are now making an effort to restore this institution to a better position than it has occupied for some years. Public lectures are being given by well-known Melbourne preachers to assist in raising funds, and it is expected that shortly a general secretary, to devote a portion of his time, or the whole of it, to the special working up of the association, will be chosen.

Victoria suffered severely last summer. The season was exceptionally hot, and bush fires of an appalling character ravaged many parts of the country. These fires were terrible to witness when they were tearing through the Gippsland and Heytesbury Forests away to the east and west of Melbourne. For two months they raged almost unceasingly, and many homesteads were destroyed, while fencing, grass, orchards, and stacks of oats, wheat, and hay were swept away with awful rapidity. The wonder was that very few lives were lost. Some men lost their reason when they saw the devouring element carrying their all before it, and many were the terrible rides for life and the hairbreadth escapes. There was much kindly sympathy evoked throughout the Colony, and some £12,000 or so were subscribed towards the relief of the most necessitous cases among the sufferers.

Fortunately the winter has been comparatively mild, so that starving stock have been able to subsist better than they would have done had it been severe and trying in its earlier stages. Latterly we have been having good rains, causing an early spring in the grass and giving hopes of a good harvest.

Japanese Jottings.

BY GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

OUR first Bible Conference held at Karuizawa, one hundred miles N.W. of Yokohama, was owned of God to strengthen and comfort the hearts of the missionaries who assembled there. It was a great joy to meet with these consecrated workers, some from the far-off fields of Southern China, and others from Korea. We did not wonder at their expressions of appreciation when we learned that many of them had not heard a sermon for months, and had never previously attended a series of services for Biblical exposition and for the promotion of spiritual experiences. Teaching and preaching among heathen people for months and years has a tendency to deaden spiritual sensibilities. Brought into close contact day by day with idolatry, indifference, indecency, and ignorance of all moral law is both disappointing and depressing. To leave the field of labour and mingle with fellow-believers; to hear new voices setting forth precious truth; to have the opportunity to lay the burdens of the work before the Lord in united prayer, and to find opportunity for counsel with Christians of mature experience, are privileges which the isolated missionary can fully appreciate.

One of the unique services held daily was the question meeting. We gathered in the open-air on the steps and court of an old Shinto temple. At our back stood the nice fresh wooden Union church building, erected by the missionaries for their annual gatherings, while before us and around us were temples and shrines, old, dilapidated, moss-covered, neglected. Once a year the natives hold a festival within the enclosure, and make great ado on this occasion. But there is neither religion nor reverence. Thousands of the Japanese are no longer idolators. But they are not nearer Christianity. They are gliding into blank agnosticism and animalism. It is sad to see a people naturally amiable sink into apathetic indifference.

The brave missionaries are making great efforts to give them the Gospel of Christ. We could not help seeing in the contrast between church and temple a prophetic parable of the future. And although the flood-tide of revival has receded, and many of the churches were left stranded, there is a profound conviction that it has reached its lowest ebb. There is a great spirit of prayer at all our conferences, and expressions of absolute dependence on the Spirit of God. Liberal theology has expended its force, and its superficial results are a painful warning. Many of the oldest and bravest missionaries have assured me that the preaching of the native pastors is more wholesome than formerly. But it is a matter of grave moment that there is so little knowledge of the Old Testament among them; they do not know Moses, and in consequence they cannot fully know Jesus.

At our Bible conferences the foreign brethren have spoken words of appreciation in that we give so large a place in our addresses to the types of Moses and the testimony of the prophets. And many have determined to give attention to the Old Testament in their study and in their instruction of native teachers.

I do not know how much time is given to open-air preaching generally, but the services I witnessed in remote towns were orderly and respectful. Not even in Protestant England have I noticed less disturbance. Young and old listened attentively, few leaving before the services ended. The singing of Gospel hymns gave evident pleasure, and the adults eagerly received the tracts handed them. But there was no joy lighting up their faces as they listened to the Gospel. It touched no chord of the heart so far as we could observe; but the missionaries sowed good seed, which the Holy Spirit can use to save these benighted, amiable people.

Spanish Soldiers.

DEAR SIR,—Some thousands of Spanish soldiers have lately been sent to the north-western ports of Spain from Cuba, and many more are following. These men have endured most terrible sufferings from privation and sickness. Crowded vessels have carried the returning soldiers across the Atlantic, and many deaths have occurred on each ship making the voyage. One vessel, the Cheribón, which took fifteen days on the passage, carried 845 sick soldiers; of these 105 died on the voyage, and two more whilst the others were landing in Spain. The local Vigo paper says: "The voyage of the Cheribón was more sad; not a day passed but several corpses were committed to the deep, beginning on the day of departure from Santiago de Cuba, when eighteen soldiers were buried at sea, six of whom could not be identified." The condition of other troops which had previously landed by daylight, haggard, half-naked, and almost shoeless, excited popular indignation at Vigo, the port of landing.

At each of the N.W. ports of Spain, Vigo, Corunna, and Santander, to which the troops come, there are missionaries who preach the simple Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and their work has been owned of God. Already some effort has been made to reach the returning soldiers, and some hundreds of Gospels have been judiciously distributed, as well as a little material aid; the men are not allowed much freedom, and they are sent off by train as soon as possible to avoid congestion at the landing ports; but many sick remain for some time, and fresh bodies of men are constantly arriving.

An earnest English missionary, Mr. Henry Turrall, 14, Carral, Vigo, has been active in this work, and also a converted Spanish colporteur, named Galo, at Monforte, the railway junction where the trains from Vigo and Corunna unite on their way to Madrid and other parts of Spain. There is a considerable delay with the trains at this place, and Galo, who is himself an old soldier with ten years' experience of service in Cuba, is eminently suited to carry the good news of the Gospel to his distressed countrymen.

Even in time of peace the condition of the Spanish soldiers, who are forced to serve, is not an enviable one, as I often noticed during our two years' residence in Vigo, but under present conditions their lot is sad indeed.

Who can tell if this is not the time to reach many a Spaniard with the glorious Gospel message of the love of God in Christ Jesus! The returning soldiers, free from priestly influence, are not likely to forget the sympathy and kind words of the Lord's servants as they give the Word of God to those who have never had the opportunity of reading it before; and we may be sure that the great majority of the books will be carefully studied by the men as they return to their homes over the length and breadth of the afflicted and dark peninsula.—Faithfully yours,

GEORGE MACKINLAY, Major.

Armenians in Egypt. — An effort is being made to arrange for the support of Rev. M. H. K'nadjian (who after completing his course at Hackney College returned to Armenia to assume a pastorate, but was expelled by the Turks) as a missionary to his fellow-countrymen in Alexandria and Cairo. Mr. K'nadjian has been accepted as an associate by the North Africa Mission, which will direct his work, though not feeling led to become responsible for Armenian work in addition to that already in hand. It is hoped, therefore, that friends interested in Armenians will raise the necessary funds. Mr. Budgett Meakin, El Manár, Parliament-hill, Hampstead, N.W., will gladly answer inquiries.

The Baptist Union.

TWENTY-FIVE years have passed since the Baptist Assembly was last held at Nottingham. Since then the boundaries of the borough have been extended, and the fourteen Baptist churches contained in the present area of the city have grown to nineteen. Nottingham, it may be remembered, was made a City last year in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee. All the ministers have changed; not one Baptist pastor who assisted to welcome the Assembly a quarter of a century ago being in charge of a Nottingham Church to-day. The present body of ministers—many of whom are comparatively young men—have united with laymen manfully to undertake the onerous task of providing for twelve or thirteen hundred delegates.

A number of sermons were preached in connection with the assembly, more particularly urging the claims of the Baptist Missionary Society. On Sunday a number of missionaries home on furlough occupied various pulpits. Rev. G. Hill preached at Derby-road church; and Rev. W. J. Avery, who has long acted as assistant secretary to Dr. Booth, and upon whom the main burden of the work has fallen of arranging for these meetings, preached in the Presbyterian church.

The reception at the Castle by the Mayor, with which the proceedings commenced on Monday afternoon, was very largely attended. There was no speaking, but for over two hours a great crowd of delegates and friends, including many ladies, enjoyed the hospitality provided, and inspected the well-filled galleries of the art museum. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and the Baptist Assembly has rarely been welcomed in a more interesting or enjoyable spot.

BAPTISTS AND RITUALISM.

Following this hospitable reception, a crowded meeting was held in the Castlegate Congregational Church, lent to the Assembly this week for their gathering. Mr. G. Hoffman, president of the Nottingham Baptist Union, occupied the chair, and in his address of welcome sketched some of the numerous changes which had taken place in the City since last they met there. Referring to the Ritualistic controversy with what he defined as a disloyal section of the Church of England, "We tell them" (said he, amid loud applause) "theirs is a yoke that neither our fathers nor we are able to bear."

In his reply, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, acknowledging the heartiness of the welcome, said it was as extensive as their market place (which is probably the largest in England), as warm as their hosiery, and as exquisite as their finest lace. From what he had heard, the dry rot of Ritualism was showing itself in their fair city. There were traitors, as he deemed them, in the country—unshorn shavelings of Rome, who had stood trembling at the gates of the Pope, knocking and saying, "Let us in"; to whom the answer came, "Depart; I never knew you."

The loud applause aroused by Dr. Spurgeon's vigorous speech having died away, Rev. Samuel Vincent took the chair as President of the Assembly, and local delegations were received from the District Free Church Council.

One subject which has not been provided for in the official programme, but which may be discussed during the business meetings of the Union, will be the erection of a church house in London. The Congregationalists have long had one in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, the Church of England is slowly completing one at Westminster; the Wesleyans will provide one with their Twentieth Century Fund, and a somewhat similar building has been for some time discussed by the Baptists, Colonel J. T. Griffin mentioning it some few years ago when he was president. A favourable opportunity seems now to arise. The new thoroughfare which the London County Council are about to form will place Kingsgate-street Baptist Chapel, Holborn, in a very advantageous situation. The proposal is to use this valuable site for the suggested Church House, after satisfactorily dealing with all present interests. The proposed building would provide offices for the missionary and some other societies, a book-room, library, large hall, and perhaps a few bedrooms, like a club. The building would meet a want long felt by the denomination, and the scheme will no doubt be seriously discussed.—Daily News

Convention at Rothesay.

THE sixth Convention in connection with the Faith Mission at Rothesay was held last week, and was favoured with the choicest weather. Rothesay (says a writer in the N. B. Daily Mail) is very attractive at this season of the year, when the autumn tints are beginning to spread across the woods and the fields are golden-yellow. There is sufficient sharpness in the air to dispel all lethargy; and, while the crowds of visitors are no longer causing a busy stir, there are many who are seeking a quiet holiday change in the pretty bay, some of whom have come from far distances. "So like the Bay of Naples," one remarks; and "Quite as nice as the Lake of Geneva" is the verdict of another who has come to be refreshed and invigorated before winter sets in. To some of these visitors it has been a pleasant surprise to find that their holiday has brought them to Rothesay at the time of the Convention; and not a few others have chosen to spend their annual holiday at Rothesay, so that they may derive more than physical benefit during their short resting-time.

Among those attending the Convention meetings we find some who have come from South Africa, China, South America, as well as numerous representatives from some of the remote counties of Ireland, and from both Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland. Many of the faces are new to Rothesay Convention gatherings, but others are familiar, and, indeed, the pleasure of associating with these friends gathered from all quarters for the few days of Christian fellowship is not the least of the blessings that we feel grateful for. Of course we miss faces that we welcomed last year. Many especially feel the absence of one of the older workers of the mission—Pilgrim Morrison, who conducted some of the meetings in past years, having lately been called to the higher service. We have just heard, too, of a bright young soldier lad, who, in his kilts and plaid, hastened away from the closing meeting of the Convention last year, after giving a few words of joyous thanksgiving for blessing received, and who has since passed away during the campaign on the Niger.

Mr. J. G. Govan presides as usual, and the speakers this year are Revs. G. C. Grubb, C. G. Moore, London; J. Gregory Mantle, Brighton; missionaries from China, Africa, and elsewhere, and other workers.

The Convention proper began with a general meeting on Thursday afternoon, and was addressed by Miss May Grimes, from Pondoland, and Rev. J. G. Mantle. Miss Grimes contrasted the lives of those who trust in men and those who trust in the Lord (Jeremiah xvii. 5, etc.). Mr. Mantle followed with an address based on the passage in Hosea ii. 21-23, which shows how the chain of God's blessing had been broken by Israel's forgetting and non-recognition of God, and was to be restored by penitence and giving God his right place. He appealed for that entire yieldedness to God which alone accords to Him his rightful place.

On Thursday night, Mr. Grubb, who was the first speaker, gave definiteness to expectation by asking, "All who want a real blessing to-night, hold up your hand." There was a great show of hands, and then the speaker took for his text the 28th verse of the 73rd Psalm, "It is good for me to draw near to God." "The object of these meetings," he said, "is to get us near to God. Holiness is the intimate union of the soul with God. Salvation, sanctification, usefulness, all depend on our being near to God. There are two sorts of Christians in the world—viz., those who are near to and those that are far from God. Nearness to God is also the secret of nearness to one another." Then he proceeded to answer the questions—How near can I get to God? How am I to get near to God? And what do I get when I come near to God? "The object of these conventions," said Mr. Grubb, "is to make what is positionally true experimentally true." Rev. J. G. Mantle followed with an exhortation from the words, "According to the pattern" (Heb. viii. 5), showing how necessary it is that our lives be conformed to the Christ life—God's ideal, and dwelling on the importance of little things in our lives. God allows no departure from the pattern.

The meetings were continued till Tuesday morning.

Noon Prayer Meeting.

THE Noon Prayer Meetings at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. centre continue to constitute an agreeable rallying place for evangelistic workers in home and foreign missions.

Monday last Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke to a large audience on the passage in Philippians in which Paul indicates the true methods of settling a difference between two of the women workers of the church.

After noting Paul's high command of the eminently Christian virtue of tact, the speaker dwelt on the nobility and gentleness of the spirit of correction which underlies the whole epistle, and which was evidently directed so to elevate experience and conduct that mere local misunderstanding and difficulty should be lost sight of in a realisation of the grandeur of the spiritual possessions and aims of Christ's followers.

A number of brief interesting experiences followed. Mr. James Wharton, whose work lies among the negroes of the Southern States of the Union, spoke in simple glowing terms of the opportunities there awaiting Christian workers. There is no difficulty in persuading the negroes to listen to the Gospel. They are ever ready and indeed anxious to hear. Many have been converted, and the good work is speeding on. By the way Mr. Wharton related a story illustrative of practical faith. A fanatical preacher, asserting his powers to raise the dead, requested a white woman to allow him to cut off her head, assuring her that she should be raised again in three days. She declined the proffered and doubtful honour, but a poor black woman rushed forward and submitted her neck to the downward sweep of the lunatic's huge cavalry sword. She was killed on the spot, and her slayer is in the local penitentiary. The forcibly-deduced moral was—if the blacks can be so swayed by [illegible] and excitement, how much the more [illegible] readily yield to Truth?

Mr. Newton Jones was able to speak of good times in a mission at Stockwell Orphanage. He unrolled, for the inspection of the audience, a series of pictures illustrative of Christ our passover, which had been blessedlyused to the salvation of children.

Mr. Chas. Cook sounded a note of gratitude for the fine weather and attendant success of the open-air services in Hyde Park, and asked for prayer on behalf of the coming indoor campaign.

In passing out, Mr. William Grove mentioned to the writer that Sunday's meetings in the American tent at Bruce Grove had been crowded, and that a large number sought salvation.

The Well and the Fountain.

To H. C. G. M.

I HAVE a well: it stands
Amid the thirsty sands,
Beneath the blazing heat of tropic day,
Or silent dark of desert night alway;
Mysterious well!

It is not deep, but yet
My life from it I get;
And little lowly creatures come to drink
And seek refreshment at its shallow brink—
My humble well!

So shallow and so small,
How does it last at all?
From high among the hills' celestial crown
A Spring abysmal pours its treasures down
Into my well.

And so my emptying pool,
With waters fresh and cool,
In crystal beauty from the eternal hills,
The quenchless Fountain ceaselessly upfills
My waiting well!

And this my only care—
To keep, from hence to there,
The channel free from silting sands, and I will
To bear the flow of that all-glorious tide
Into my well.

And oh, how glad am I!
This fountain, erst so dry,
Is all my joy, and peace, and pure delight,
In scorching noonday sun or lonely night.
My peaceful well!

From thine unfathomed deep,
O Living Water, keep
This nether-spring, o'erflowing, strong and [illegible]
That some may come and bathe their [illegible]
Beside my well.

"I Will" and "I Won't."

HERE are two little words which little folks are very fond of using. Ah! how fond we are of having our own way and saying, "I will do this," and "I won't do that." Well, that is all right if you use these words in the right way. We must always say "I will" to all that is right, and "I won't" to all that is wrong.

I want to have a little talk with you about our "I WILLS," and God's "I WILLS."

Jesus told us a story, it is written in Matt. xxi. 28-31, about two boys whose father wanted them to go and work in his vineyard; he found one and said, "Child, I want you to go and work in the vineyard to-day," and the boy said, "No I won't go"; but after a while he began to feel unhappy about it and could not enjoy his play; so he repented and went after all. The father found his other son and said the same to him, and he answered, "All right, father, I WILL go." But he never went at all.

Now I am afraid there are a good many boys like that now. "Willie," said a father one day, "here is a very important letter that I want you to put in the post. Just go straight there with it, for you only have ten minutes." "Yes, father," said Willie; "I WILL be sure to be quick," but on the way he met some schoolfellows and stopped to talk, and the letter was too late and father got into sore trouble. "Mary," said mother, "I am obliged to go out for several hours, and I want you to promise me not to leave the house, but watch baby all the while." "Oh, yes, mother," said Mary; "I WILL be so careful of her;" but a young friend, whom she wanted to speak to, came by, and Mary forgot her promise and her baby-sister, and ran out and had a long talk; and, when she came back, baby was gone, and, oh! the trouble they had before she was found again. Little Henry was very fond of playing with matches, but father talked a long time to him about the danger, and he said "Father, I WILL remember, I won't ever, ever play with them again"; but alas! one day he found the box of matches, and sitting down on the drawing-room rug, he began to strike one after another, and the rug caught fire and burnt all round him, and if mother had not heard his screams naughty little Henry would soon have been burnt to death.

Dear young friends, I do want you to be very sure that God's I wills are never like that. When God says "I WILL" He always does it; if He says "I won't" you need never be afraid, for it is impossible for Him to forget or to break his word.

There are such a number of God's "I wills" in the Bible, far more than you can count. There are actually seven in three little verses in the xci. Psalm, ver. 14-16.

God says there: "If you will love Me with all your heart, if you will learn to know my wonderful Name, and all you can about Me, if you will ask Me for all you really want, I promise you

1. "I will deliver." Read farther back in the Psalm, and see all the things God will deliver you from, then try and remember the people in the Bible whom He delivered.

2. "I will set him on high." Isa. xxxiii. 16 repeats this promise. Some day, too, all who trust in Jesus will be set up high in heaven.

"I will answer." God answered David (Ps. xxxiv. 6) and thousands of others also. He has answered you and me.

4. "I will be with him in trouble." Just as He was with Peter, and Paul, and John, and others we read of in the New Testament, and some know now.

5. "I will honour him." As Joseph was honoured in Egypt, and Mordecai, the poor Jew, in the time of Esther.

6. "I will satisfy him." Jesus satisfied all the hungry people (Mark vi. 42). We shall all be quite satisfied some day (Ps. xvii. 15).

7. "I will show him my salvation." Make him see it, like Elisha saw the armies of God round about him so that no one could harm him (2 Kings vi. 17).

All these wonderful "I WILLS" of God are for each one of us who says "I WILL" to God in answer to His loving call, "Come unto Me," which He has given us by His Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

October 9.

"JEHOSHAPHAT'S GOOD REIGN."—2 Chron. xvii. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths."—Prov. iii. 6.

JEHOSHAPHAT = Jehovah is judge; he began to reign when thirty-five years of age.

THE WORK OF DEFENCE (1, 2).

He set garrisons on the border between Israel and Judah, and raised an army of one million soldiers. It was for the defence of his country and not aggression. This is one of the good works of a soldier king. It is an assurance of peace.

Lesson.—True of the individual in spiritual affairs. He who is clothed with the whole armour of God is not so likely to be attacked by evil as one who is irreligious.

HIS CHARACTER (3-6).

He was a good man (4); zealous for the well-being of his people, both materially, mentally, and spiritually.

(1) He sacrificed his principle for what he considered the material benefit of the nation.

(2) Set up schools for the education of the people. An educated nation is a strong nation. Stronger now than the warlike nation (7-9).

(3) He broke down the groves and took away the high places.

HIS BESETTING SIN.

He became associated with the idolatrous kings round about. For his nation's good, no doubt; but God could not bless the man who made companions with his enemies.

Lesson.—Bad company spoils the good in us. We rise or fall with the companions we keep.

Illustration.—The tree frog, which takes its colour from its surroundings.

The coal that does not burn blackens the hand of him who touches it.

Most children have some "sin that doth so easily beset." Seek it out, and do not rest until it is driven out of your nature.

BENEFIT OF EDUCATION.

The people were educated in the Scriptures most likely more than in anything else. All knowledge of truth brings

(1) Power with other men.
(2) Strength of character.
(3) Adoration of the Mighty Maker.
(4) More sympathy with others.
(5) Helps a man to succeed in life.

Teacher should impress on class need for attention to their school work—and on the elder scholars the fact that education does not cease with School Boards. They must study after, and perfect their knowledge and character by reading good books, and communion with great minds.

EFFECT OF ONE SIN.

The sin of Jehoshaphat was a rope round his neck all through his life. He married his son to Ahab's daughter. He twice entered into a league with the kings of Israel. He never got over it. All through life he struggled to do right, but these tethers were fettering him.

Compare:—(1) Sin of Moses preventing him from entering into the Promised Land.

(2) Sin of David making him sad all his days.

(3) Sin of Elijah in fleeing from Jezebel, throwing back the work of God.

One sin has lifelong if not eternal effects.

CONSIDER REPROOF.

In some of his speculations with Ahaziah he came to grief. "Sent ships to Ophir for gold, but they went not, for the ships were broken at Eziongeber."

Thus God reproves us sometimes. We should accept his reproofs and mend our ways. Accept the rebukes of parents and teachers and profit by them.

Illustrations.—Lais broke her looking-glass because it showed the wrinkles on her face. Some people hate those who criticise them. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend."

Ragged Children.—The Corporation has granted the use of the Guildhall for the usual annual banquet to be given to 1500 poor children of the Ragged School Union. Subscriptions are invited, and it is proposed to send out Christmas hampers to 5000 poor crippled children. Last year 4000 hampers were sent out. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. Alderman Treloar, 69, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

Dr. Fairbairn's Indian Mission.

THE annual report of Mansfield College contains the following reference by Dr. Fairbairn to his mission to India:—"We have our standards of judgment and the Hindus have theirs. To go and speak to another people on this basis, that the religion which created our civilisation must be good simply because the civilisation it created seems to me so excellent, would be to go on a mission that carries its own disaster within it. It will never do that the question of a universal religion should be argued simply from the standpoint of the West, for that which is universal can never be taken as the special concern or possession of any people. But then there is the other side that one feels not less. Missionaries that are through long generations accustomed to the people know the circumstances and the subject, and how difficult it is to one from afar to set himself in immediate relation with the needs of the educated Hindus. And yet they are educated by Western men, largely in a Western tongue, and according to Western thought.

"The men who advocated for India a higher education by Englishmen acting on Western methods as a great preparation for evangelisation forgot this—that the English tongue is used by men who are not Christians, as well as by men who are, and that the power to read English thoughts carried with it the power to read a philosophy, or a criticism, or a history that set the educated mind to the Christian religion in a more unfriendly attitude than any local tradition or inherited prejudice could do. That feeling involves a larger sense of our responsibility. We have not yet measured what it is. We lightly have taken into our hands the lives and destinies of more than 200 million and a-half of human beings, and we commit the government to a few hundreds or a few thousands of our sons. We cannot take that large responsibility and feel that it is exhausted if we supply them with laws and magistrates and discipline, all tending to paralyse and dissolve their own ancient order, and then fail to put anything higher in its place. The responsibility of England for India is moral, spiritual, intellectual, political, and it ought to be above all transcendentally religious; and unless the interpretation be taken in that large sense, such a poor endeavour as that on which it is my destiny soon to enter would be an impertinence and in vain."

Wesleyan Methodist Missions.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

A GATHERING, probably unique in the history of Wesleyan Methodist Missions, took place in Wesley's Chapel, City-road, on Friday evening last. A great valedictory service was held under the presidency of the venerable Dr. Ebenezer E. Jenkins, for the purpose of bidding God-speed to some thirty missionaries who are proceeding to foreign fields of service. Of these seventeen are young men who are beginning their missionary work. They include Revs. H. Waldron, A. Oswald Brown, Ralph E. Grieves, and John Breedon, who are proceeding to Madras; Revs. Albert E. Nightingale and W. B. Trewhella, who are appointed to the Mysore; Revs. Enoch Carter, Wm. Frost, and Sidney J. Baker are designated for the Transvaal; Rev. A. Walton goes to Mashonaland; Rev. Geo. H. Ryes to Dominica; Rev. T. G. Phillips to Burma; Rev. T. N. Phillipson to Honduras; Rev. G. B. Robson to Jaffna; Rev. Simon Thwaite to Galle; Rev. Charles P. Cape to Jhansi; and Rev. Geo. B. Woodford to Bankura.

The strengthening of the missionary staff in these several fields by the simultaneous sending forth of such a goodly band of young ministers marks a "forward movement" in Wesleyan Missions. There has been a welcome turn in the tide in regard to missionary enthusiasm at home during recent years, as shown by the rising income of the society. In 1896 there was an increase of £1500, and in 1897 an increase of over £4000 in the ordinary home income. The debt of £30,000 has been wiped out, and £10,000 been raised for the consolidation and development of the work. In addition, several thousand pounds were contributed last year for the special purpose of sending out additional missionaries. The Missionary Committee has gladly responded to some of the most urgent calls from abroad, being encouraged therein by the cheering signs at home.

The Evangelistic Field.

The Weaver Brothers.

THE Weaver Brothers recently concluded a fortnight of evangelistic services in White Memorial Free Church, Glasgow. This is the third September on which they have opened our winter campaign, and, as on the previous occasions so also on this, their singing and preaching were in demonstration of the Spirit and in power. With almost no advertising the attendances night after night were exceedingly good. Better than that, every evening there were anxious souls to be dealt with. The honoured brothers are in Belfast in Mr. Witherow's church during the present fortnight. They are under promise to give the first fortnight of October to their late revered father's comrade, Rev. Robert Howie, of Free St. Mary's, Govan. J. P.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Scotland.

A WARM welcome was accorded to Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz on her return to Glasgow, after a considerable interval, to conduct a sixteen days' mission in Shamrock Street United Presbyterian Church. Although the congregation has not been accustomed to hold such services the attendance was ... from the first, and rapidly increased till the spacious church was completely filled night after night. Of course the audiences were drawn from a wide area, but it is specially gratifying to record that among the members of the Church themselves the interest steadily deepened.

During the second week there were frequent expressions of regret by those who had neglected to take earlier advantage of the privilege. Many testify to the great blessing received through the Afternoon Bible Readings. "The Bible has been made a new book to me," said one not given to extravagant speech. The last day was specially memorable, and particularly the closing holiness ..., which none who were present can ever ....

The blessing attending Mrs. Baeyertz's work amongst us is itself an abundant apology for it, and has removed objections which no amount or quality of argument could ever shake. She has all the natural qualifications which go to make a successful evangelist. Her addresses are an intellectual ..., her theology is sound. She is mighty in the ...ptures, but, above all, she has the Divine ...t" which is most manifestly the secret of her ... power.

...rly three hundred professions of faith resulted ... the mission; while to God's people it was ... strengthening and stimulating. Mrs. Baeyertz impresses me as an eminently wise worker in the ... to which she has been so manifestly called of God. John Pollock, Minister.

Beach Services at Tenby.

MR. E. ARROWSMITH, assisted by various friends ... from Oxford and Cambridge Universities, and a number of lady workers, had services at Tenby for six weeks. There were five meetings a week on the sands, principally for the children of visitors. Though there were many attractions all around, it was delightful to see the children grouping together ... morning with bright and happy faces to sing ...pel hymns and listen to addresses setting forth Jesus as the Saviour of sinners. The students, as well as the lady workers, threw their whole souls into the meetings. Many, besides the children and their parents, heard the faithful preaching of Mr. Arrowsmith and the students who helped him. We continually observed people as they came near the place stand for a time and listen.

Mr. Alvarez interested the children much by exhibiting different things he took with him from his field of labour in Africa, with appropriate addresses.

...les these beach services there were meetings ... boys in the evening at Sparrow's Nest, where ... Arrowsmith and his helpers were staying. He ... had a children's service in the Public Hall on ...day afternoons; and in the evening he gave ... to parents and guardians, which were full of blessed instruction. The lady workers had ... girls only in the Public Hall on Wednesday and Friday afternoons. One of the lady workers gave addresses in the same hall to young ladies over fifteen. There were half hour Bible readings every morning and a little time for prayer, and these were very refreshing.

There were also occasional open-air meetings on the Esplanade, where stirring Gospel addresses were given to very attentive audiences. Many have expressed their appreciation of the labour of these servants of the Lord, with a heartfelt desire that they may be led to visit Tenby again.

During the past summer over forty services (morning and evening) have been held in Bush Wood, Leytonstone. They have been a source of great blessing, not only to the children, but to parents and others. Messrs. Ellis, Spain, Silver, and others have been able, under God's blessing, to make the services bright and interesting, whilst proclaiming in simple language the truth of the Gospel. E. L. H.

During the past week a most happy mission has been conducted by Rev. J. Manton Smith, under the auspices of the Sawbridgeworth P.S.A., in the Shaftesbury Hall. Obituary.

REV. JAMES LEWIS.

Methodists are mourning the loss of Rev. James Lewis, of Southport. He was lately ordered by his medical attendant to abstain from public work, but it was hoped his illness would only be temporary. It proved otherwise; he gradually grew worse, and died on Monday, 19th inst. His whole ministry, extending over twenty-seven years, has been spent in the North. He was one of the three ministers nominated by the Foreign Missionary Committee for the recent vacancy in the secretarial department.

REV. JOHN FOSTER.

The death is reported of this esteemed Congregational minister, who passed peacefully away at Hastings on Friday last, aged sixty-eight. For many months he had cheerfully borne a complication of diseases, culminating in paralysis. Mr. Foster entered the ministry in 1862, giving up the prospect of a successful commercial career in order to accept the pastorate of a church in the village of Rayleigh, in Essex. Thence he removed to Plaistow in 1865 as the minister of Balaam-street Union Church. During this charge the Victoria Docks Church was built by Mr. James Duncan, primarily for his own workpeople, and placed under the care of Mr. Foster. In 1870 he received a call to Claylands Chapel, Kennington, to succeed Rev. Baldwin Brown, and laboured there for nearly seventeen years. The following three years he was pastor at St. Leonard's Congregational Church, resigning in 1890. Mr. Foster was also for many years an active temperance worker.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

In the beautifully-illustrated volume, Bo-Peep (Cassells), a splendid nursery book is provided, of that should interest the juveniles for many The short stories and verses are both simple and well calculated to rivet attention.

Bright Eyes is a volume which appeals to the opening minds of the young, while entertaining th with merry readings and good pictures. This favourite never appeared in a better form and with richer contents than this year. (2s. 6d. and according to binding.) Another pretty gift book is Childhood (1s. and 1s. 6d), which contains good stories and a variety of sketches and para amply illustrated. (Stoneman.)

The annual volume of Chums is, in the language of youth, "simply enormous." A glance at th table of contents almost oppresses one. There six serial stories, and nearly 200 short tales; upw of 130 chatty articles on subjects of special to boys, with over 50 portraits of living celeb and then, as it were to fill up, thousands of a dotes, puzzles, and items of an amusing and instructive character. Besides all this, twelve coloured plates, and a thousand other pictures. If this book does not satisfy the demands of our growing bo then he is hard to please. (8s. Cassells.)

The Fruit of the Vine. By Rev. An Murray. (1s. Marshall Brothers.) Six chapters on fruit-bearing, each of them rich in heavenly sentiment, and redolent of Spirit-instructed wisdom. The last chapter shows the close connection between prayerfulness and the fruitful Christian life.

The Harvest of Fruit. By Constance E. Cory. (A. D. Innes & Co.) Those choice meditations the meaning of the seasons, and the passing periods of time, show much spiritual insight and power of poetic expression. The short poems interspersed are simple, musical, and helpful.

From Forecastle to Pulpit. By John Spence F.R.A.S. (John Robertson, 43, King's-road, Chelsea.) Mr. Spence, who is the able pastor of Chelsea Baptist Church, here tells very simply his life story, and the stages by which he rose from sailoring to preaching. The narrative is fraught with encouragem to those who have a proper ambition to mak most of life.

Hiram Golf's Religion. By George H. Hepworth. (R. D. Dickinson.) Hiram Golf was a "shoemaker by the grace of God," and possessed th sententious wisdom that is supposed to mark the more thoughtful members of that meditative craft. His views on religious questions are freely as well quaintly expressed, and the dialogues with his fellow church members will repay a careful reading.

Enquire Within Emergency Cards. (1s. Houlston & Son.) The idea of these cards is most excellent. They contain brief but sufficient directions for meeting sudden emergencies in the shape of burns, falls, fainting, fits, bites, bleeding, poiso drowning, and other accidental experiences that require prompt and skilful treatment. The c are in a neat case for hanging on the wall, so as to secure a ready reference.

The errors of Romanism and the evils domination have been set forth with more or l plainness and vigour in several recent bo People and the Priest, by Rev. R. E. M.A. (2s. 6d. James Bowden), is a good work, sacerdotal pretensions and practices, chiefly found in Anglo-Catholic circles, being brought to the light of Scripture, and contrasted with primitive Christian institutions and worship. An eloquent appeal is made to history, whose important teachings regarding Romanism and Protestantism are admirably summarised. A more popular book, crowded with facts, even to the inclusion of many letters and utterances on the present crisis in the Church of England, is A Strong Delusion: A Book for the Times, by Arthur Lee. (3s. n Digby, Long, & Co.) An appendix, entitled " and Bones of Old Mortality, Lying Wonder other Objects of Superstitious Veneration Church of Rome," is a sadly interesting feature.

The latest issue of Mr. W. T. Stead's "Penny Poets" is the Merchant of Venice. It is finely printed. (Review Reviews Office.)

The Melbourne Argus speaks in high terms of Commandant Herbert Booth's reproduction in the Melbourne Exhibition building of a series of "living pictures" of the Australasian social work.

Sixteen years have passed since the Army commenced operations in India and Ceylon. There are now 1109 corps and outposts, seventeen social institutions, and 1077 officers. There are also 306 children in the various industrial schools, and 172 settlers on the Gujerat Farm Colony.

Last year 480 ex-prisoners passed through the Prison Gate Home at King's Cross. Of this number 280 proved satisfactory. Many were provided with temporary situations or permanent employment, and a number despatched to the farm colony and other departments of the social work, while a few were received home by their friends.

The waste-paper and rag industries employ about 400 men daily. Last year 5000 tons of waste-paper were collected from London firms and sorted. The waste collectors travel about 2300 miles each week, and bring in nearly 100 tons weekly. After it is sorted and baled it is ready for the market. About 3000 tons a year are sold to British paper mills, and the remainder exported to the Continent.

The Distress in Crete.

The homes of 60,000 people have been burned, their trees cut down, and all labour during twenty-four months rendered impossible. Some of the distressed families found refuge in the Kingdom of Greece; the great majority fled to the mountains, where they are living in shepherds' huts, in caves, and in the open air. They have subsisted till now on herbs, and on crumbs from the tables of the more fortunate. The incendiarism and massacre within the last few days call aloud for renewed help for the wounded, homeless, helpless victims. I urgently ask, as winter approaches, for money, garments (new or cast-off), yarn for spinning, materials. The distribution is executed promptly and most carefully by the Archbishop of Crete and the Central Committee (Athens) in aid of the Cretan sufferers.

Notes and Comments.

THE cartoon which appears on p. 16 of this issue is one of a series which the artist, Miss Manning, has been contributing to the Protestant Crusade.

The great Gospel Tabernacle at Tottenham adds another proof day by day that when Jesus is lifted up from the earth He draws the people to Himself. If any class is absent it is the formalists and the Gospel-hardened people. The congregations seem to consist of earnest Christians, of those who are concerned about their souls, and of those who have been persuaded to come in by the buttonholers outside. Some of these hear the Gospel in its fulness for the first time, and not a few believe and are saved.

Our venerable brother, Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, now more than half-way between ninety and a hundred, says that except we exercise daily self-judgment on our ways, words, and thoughts, the prayer to be filled with the Spirit is wasted breath. Grace takes away guile. A youth, we will call him Charley, got into debt all round, and when he knew that it had come to his father's knowledge, he was very anxious that he should not know how much he owed. But his father told him that he had learnt how many debts he owed, and had paid them all. Then Charley was just as anxious that he should know every one of the debts.

Did Dr. Parker speak in too sweeping a way when he said :—

With one or two exceptions, what do I see before me in the political life of the country ?—a gang of agnostics, worldlings. Go to the country with them! Better go with a death's-head. Politics is not a game of dice; politics should be an aspect of providence. First the kingdom of God. That is the statesmanship we want. Not a little twaddling statesmanship which says: "If they say one-and-ninepence, don't you think we had better say one-and-ninepence-halfpenny ?" Call that politics!

The policy here condemned, of one party giving a little more than its competitor for the sake of place and power, is demoralising; and signs are not wanting that the time draws near when power will come to the hands of the politician who dares to put conscience before everything, who has a character for sincerity and love of principle. Which party he may belong to is a small matter; that the country should have him is the important thing.

The Christian life is one that works not from without to within, but from within outwards. "Your life is hid with Christ in God." It has a secret principle at work transforming the nature from death to life, and permeating the character with regenerating influence; it is blessed with the hidden fellowship of the Divine Spirit, which is the secret of peace, strength, and successful service; and it conforms to a hidden ideal. There is a family resemblance among God's children all the world over; amid all the divergencies of race and culture and outward circumstance, they remind one of Christ, who is in them "the hope of glory." This Christ-life is hidden also in its social work; "it cometh not with observation," but it has the power of leaven to permeate and uplift those "among" whom it is planted. In these days of organisation and institutional activity there is peril of forgetting the power of this quiet Divine energy at work among men, and to depreciate the potent influence of modest lives who have no public status, but who do the will of God in sincerity.

The general impression left by the report of the Church Congress is the extreme desire of the leaders in the Anglican Church to minimise the extent and the perils of the "Ritualistic Revival," and to cry out, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." This keynote was set by the Archbishop of York in his inaugural sermon, and it was repeated again and again to the end of the Congress. It is a perilous policy, for it means the ignoring of facts that are widespread and obvious to every observer. Another feature of the speeches and papers was the guarded use of the term Reformation and the total suppression of the word Protestant. This grand word will soon drop out of the Anglican vocabulary, and with it all that was really precious and significant in the word Reformation. Englishmen have for three centuries been accustomed to call themselves Protestants, and to mean by it not only the throwing off of the yoke of Rome, but also the errors of Rome. It is well to remind ourselves that the latter may be revived without the former, of which this use of terms is a significant sign.

The plea of the Archbishop of York for the use of vestments and symbols in public worship is ingenious, but fallacious. In his "epoch-making sermon," as it has been called in one of the daily Press reports, he builds up an argument in their favour on the ground that the Church should "counteract the attraction of the outward things of the world and awaken the interest of the careless in their religious life by presenting before them more prominently the symbols of religious faith." It is to be feared that spectacular worship is but a substitution of one kind of outward things by another, and that the simplicity that is in Christ, and the worship that is in spirit and in truth are not likely to be helped by the distracting rites and ceremonies of high celebrations and such-like proceedings. To imitate the tinsel and the show of the world in our religious services is no compliment to the simple majesty of the Gospel. The Apostles conquered the world by other means, which are as powerful to day when followed with earnestness and conviction as in the first age of the Faith.

One of the difficulties, it seems, that will have to be faced in exposing the degrading practices of the Confessional, is the odium which is thereby cast on those who do the work. It is an old device of Satan to cry shame on any who call attention to his shameless deeds. You may compile "manuals of devotion"—what a perversion !—that are unfit to be read in public, and you may bring them under the notice of women and young persons, no blame attaching to you on that account; but if anyone calls attention to your evil deeds he is to be banned as indecent. To carry out this policy consistently would make the world a paradise for sinners. There would be no exposure possible of such a hideous system as the regulation of immorality, and in point of fact it has always been defended in this inconsistent way. It would be highly improper to take the veil off the horrors of an opium den or of a gin-palace. No doubt there ought to be an observance of time and place in doing these things, but there must be no submission to the insincerity which practises a thing that it is a shame even to mention. We may not tolerate in silence, which means acquiescence, the ways of that Church of Rome which has never ruled a people save to their unspeakable harm.

The death of the aged Queen of Denmark, full of age and full of honours, and surrounded by the members of her family, forms a striking contrast to that of the murdered Empress of Austria, dying in a foreign land at the hand of a strange assassin. It brings home the extraordinary diversity in human lot which exists among all classes and grades of society. Here were two good women, eminently faithful to their public and private duties, both pious in their nature and simple in their personal habits, and yet how different their lives and their fate! One was pursued by perpetual trouble to the end; the other lived to see several of her children on the throne, and her descendants rise up and call her blessed. Both, however, illustrate the supremacy of character in high places, and the immense value of high and simple ideals. It would be difficult to estimate the range and quality of the home influences in the Danish Court distributed throughout Europe through the Queen's children, and perpetuated by coming generations. Its most beautiful side is in the fact that it can be repeated in every home, however humble.

It may not be easy to appraise at its true value the vote which has just been taken in Canada on the question of Prohibition. By a majority which some call small and others regard as decisive, the voters have said that they are in favour of the passing of an "Act prohibiting the importation, manufacture, or sale of spirits, wine, ale, beer, cider, and all other alcoholic liquors for use as 'beverages.'" Whether the Canadian Government will conclude that it has received a mandate to proceed to legislation remains to be seen. This much, however, is clear, that a majority of voters would like to see a stop put to a dangerous trade, which has done its worst on this occasion to corrupt the vote. A correspondent says :—

Secret circulars sent out by the executive of the Ontario Licence Holders' Association have just come to light, and reveal the desperate tactics and tyrannical methods of the Ontario whisky sellers. Among the executive committee's recommendations was one to the effect that a campaign be entered upon by the trade to secure by doubtful practices the largest possible vote against Prohibition, and that part of the campaign to be the work of the Press. "Work the Press—avoid public discussion," was their motto.

Vigorous action has been taken by some American railway corporations against the lamentable habit so greatly in vogue amongst many of their employees, of wasting time, strength, and money in drinking saloons. Very salutary effects have followed. The local management is developed, travellers secure greater safety and comfort, and the homes and conduct of the men demonstrate marked improvement. At the same time the moral effect on the working classes is emphatic, since no person addicted to tippling possesses the ghost of a chance of securing employment on a line, even in the country of railways. A side-light on the position is afforded by a comment in The Chicago Record :—

Four years ago, at a saloon much frequented by railway men, fifty-four employees of one line were running monthly accounts ranging from five to fifteen dollars. Recently, at the same saloon, only six men were running bills, none of which totalled more than five dollars.

The thoroughness of the revolution was doubtless accentuated by the readiness to help manifested by the higher officials, some of whom, realising the persuasiveness of example rather than precept, decided to exclude intoxicants from their private cars.

In The Independent of last week some remarkable disclosures were made by Rev. Silvester Horne regarding the astonishing ignorance of the Bible even among recent candidates for theological training. Being examined as to their general reading, several could only give the titles of popular novels, which was sufficiently humiliating, but when asked to give an account of one or two books of the New Testament a truly lamentable ignorance was manifested.

One individual, after a couple of years' service as a Sunday-school teacher, and having had to prepare his weekly lesson (from the "Lesson Aids," as he confessed), was painfully unacquainted with the contents of the Gospels. Intelligent conception of the life of Jesus Christ as a whole he had none. Familiar incidents and points of instruction connected with the Lord's life were quite forgotten.

This urgently suggests that no theological institute should admit a candidate without passing a satisfactory examination in the Bible as well as in the ordinary subjects. Ignorance of the one text-book of Christian truth is shameful in anyone who has already begun to teach others. The above case is, we fear, but typical of a widespread fact among the young people of our churches, and is a very serious sign of the times.

The anticipations and assurances of peace, from the third Napoleon's famous dictum, "L'Empire, c'est la paix," to the recent Rescript of the Czar, always remind us of the Divine premonition, "They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace," and "When they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh." But we do not think the study of prophecy is intended to make us prophets beyond what is actually written. And, whatever may be the views of any as to the latent purpose of the Russian bureaucracy, whatever singleness of eye, or otherwise, there may be in the invitation of the Czar to a Peace Conference, it is a Christian beatitude and the duty and privilege of all the children of God, to be peacemakers. We think also, it is sound principle to treat every man as honest and truthful until we find him otherwise, and therefore, to accept, without suspicion, the proposal of the Czar. We are to honour as well pray for kings and the powers that be. For all these reasons, and notwithstanding that Joel's words, "Beat your ploughshares into swords and your pruning hooks into spears" precede Micah's forecast, "They shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks," we hold it to be obligatory on all followers of the Prince of Peace to encourage every effort made towards the substitution of peaceful methods for the settlement of national quarrels, rather than the bloody arbitrament of war.

The Daily News is in a difficulty ; its special commissioner, who is writing from the capitals of Europe on the Czar's proposals, says from Paris :—

If the conference on disarmament is to realise anything, it will only be because the appeal of the Autocrat fires the imagination and appeals to the heart of the democracy. The bureaucrats, the diplomats, the officials, and the generals will not help, and it will be a miracle if they do not hinder. There is only one potentate in the world strong enough to crown the conference with success. That potentate is King Demos. Everything depends upon him.

In its editorial comments on this view, The Daily News asks "How much is this hope worth? So far as outward appearances go, not very much." It points to the war between America and Spain as one caused by the American people, to the war between Turkey and Greece as one caused by the Greeks, and to France, where "universal suffrage gives its sanction to universal military service." Perhaps it does not allow sufficiently in the two former cases for the power of the Press ; the Press, rather than the people, precipitated these wars. We are, however, of opinion that human nature is the same in all men, and that we shall only get rid of the curse of war as we enlighten and change the minds of the nations. And notwithstanding all unfavourable omens, we believe that God is working among the peoples of Europe to bring to pass a new thing.

The startling revelations which continue to be made in the Dreyfus case, and the exposure of the espionage system apparently in favour with all "civilised" Governments, are producing a painful impression, and, we fear, will do no small harm in some directions. If Governments are so largely dependent on men who are paid to deceive and mislead others, why should smaller institutions not be served by similar means? Where is the harm? At this rate, truth will become, if it has not already become, a thing to be laughed at, and a truthful man will be called "a fool." Of course, in the exposures already made one can easily see that if Governments pay agents to deceive the agents of other Governments, they cannot be surprised if they themselves are sometimes betrayed and deceived. Their iniquity comes down upon their own head. If half the things now being said by responsible and influential journals about diplomacy be true, it seems to us that in every Foreign Office, in the most conspicuous place, should be inscribed the words, "Lie not one to another." "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

The plan of Mr. Watts to begin a series of national memorials to heroes in humble life is excellent. In the churchyard of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, he has promised to build, at his own cost, an open gallery, running along the side of the garden, to be used for memorials of brave deeds. He will himself record the story of Alice Ayres, the servant girl who saved the lives of three children from fire, but lost her own. The brave railway porter of Wick, who sacrificed his life a few days ago, and saved a passenger train from a terrible accident, is one of the men whom our great spiritual artist would honour. No gallery, however, would be large enough to contain the frescoes we might have, were every deed duly honoured. Could we not have also a roll of fame kept in some Government office, and could not its records be printed every year? It would make excellent reading for our day schools.

No doubt the sources of "Hooliganism" are many. One of them has been laid bare by the manager of a Board school who has been to some music halls, and sends to the Times an account of what he saw and heard.

"Some eighteen or more songs interspersed the otherwise varied entertainment; but of these songs it is not too much to say that the great majority of them could never have been written if the loafer, the liar, the drunkard, the thief, and the sensualist had been regarded as subjects unfit to be glorified in a song.

The chorus of one song was set to the tune of a popular Sunday-school hymn. This writer is of opinion that it seems poor policy to spend millions on elementary education, and then allow these night or continuation schools, under the name of music halls, to propagate the worst forms of immorality. But surely the evil would be far worse if we had no Board schools; and whether the law can deal or ought to deal with the evils he names is a very debatable point. The exposures point to the necessity for more voluntary religious work of all kinds.

There is a very popular and plausible kind of teaching which never wearies of assailing creeds and organisations. For example, it is said :—

Churches, with their organisations and teachers, will get at last to their proper business when they realise that their one concern is not with concepts, but with character; that their ultimate is not the development of creeds, far less of hierarchies, but the training of souls.

When we inquire how this is to be done, we are told that it is by receiving the life of Christ into our own ; but when we go further and ask how that is to be done we obtain no answer. If we rightly understand the Gospel it will not be done, apart from the facts of our Saviour's earthly life and ministry, and the interpretation put upon them by the divinely inspired apostles. Paul, and John, and Peter never sought to inspire the souls of men and shape their characters, without declaring that Christ had died for their sins and risen again for their justification. That "concept" has always been an irresistible influence in shaping noble characters, and in prompting splendid deeds. And no vague words about receiving the life of Christ into us can supply its place. The fact is, the life flows in as this apostolic "concept" is believed to be true, and is appropriated by each soul as the message of God to it personally.

In his work "On Councils and Churches," Luther asserts that much misery had crept in under the word Church, from its being understood as consisting of the Pope and the bishops, priests and monks. On the contrary, he strongly and consistently maintained that the Christian Church was the mass of pious Christian people, who believed in Christ, and were endowed with the Holy Spirit, who daily sanctified them by the forgiveness of sins, and by absolving and purifying them therefrom. By losing sight of this cardinal truth, which is obvious on every page of the New Testament, there has been trouble ever since Luther's time, and will be until the Divine idea of the Church is enthroned in its proper place. Confusion, corruption, and decay, come in when the Word of God is departed from, and the world is allowed to rule instead of Christ.

Eternal Life.—2.

By Rev. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE life which Christ kindles in the heart is a new kind of life, quite different from the old in all its forms, not to be attained by educating and enriching the old life, or in any way improving it. It is called "eternal," not because we enter on the enjoyment of it after death, but because possessing it we take it with us into the other world, and it never passes away.

There is a great passage that may help us to understand in what it consists, John xvii. 3: "This is life eternal, that they may know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ."

According to these words of Jesus, eternal life consists in knowing—knowing God and his Christ. It is not said that this knowing brings life, but it is life. You may know much about someone without knowing himself. Personal knowing, to call it so, is a higher thing than knowing at second-hand or knowing by hearsay. It is this personal knowing that Jesus points to when He calls it "life eternal."

This is not hard to understand. Personal experience may help to explain it. You remember some friend of your early days, his fine spirit and lofty powers. You remember and will never forget, your sacred hours of companionship. You remember how all your mental powers were quickened by that companionship, and how it led you, so to speak, into a new world. Looking over the intervening years, you say instinctively, It was life to me to know that friend. Just so, only in an unspeakably higher sense, it is life to know God and his Christ, life in the richest, truest, highest sense—life eternal.

"To know Thee, the only true God," the true God, who is Light and Love, who fills immensity and eternity with his sovereign presence, and beside whom there is none else.

Pope has given us a hymn, suitable for a "Parliament of Religions," which he calls a "Universal Prayer," and which begins:—

> Father of all, by every age,
> In every clime adored,
> By saint, by savage, and by sage,
> Jehovah, Jove, or Lord.

This fits in with the doctrine that the worship of Jehovah, Jupiter, and Baal comes to much the same thing provided it be sincere. Mark how differently Jesus speaks: It is life to know Thee, the only true God. It it not life to know these false gods. On the contrary, it is death to know them, the death of everything noble, true, spiritual, whether in a man or in a nation. It is impossible to walk through the pantheon of heathenism without having your sense of purity shocked and outraged. The lusts and vices of men, as well as their virtues, are attributed to the gods. Nowhere is the conception of holiness met with; nowhere is the faintest echo heard of words like these: "But Thou art holy, Thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel." The couplet is not very far from the truth:

> Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
> Whose attributes were rage, revenge, and lust.

If men become like the gods they worship, the moral results are just what you might anticipate: falsehood, injustice, cruelty, licentiousness, sensuality almost turned into a science. The knowing that is life is the knowing of Thee, the only true God—the knowing that addresses Him as Thou.

To this these other words are added, "and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." We feel at once that Jesus Christ here claims to stand on a different level from all saints, prophets, and revealers of God that have ever appeared in the world. We could not say, we could not bear to hear it said, "It is life to know God and Mary, or David, or Isaiah, and Paul." In the very form of expression there is an altogether unique claim, a claim of some unique personal relation to God shared by no other.

There is special reason for this conjunction of Jesus Christ with the only true God. We cannot know God as we need to know Him, and as He wishes to be known, apart from Jesus Christ. Nay, in knowing Jesus Christ we know the only true God. As matter of fact, we know just what Jesus Christ has revealed to us and nothing more. Apart from Jesus Christ we may believe in some great First Cause, in which resides the promise and potency of all life; but it would not be life to us, we could not love it, we could not say, "Blessed is the man whom Thou choosest and causeth to approach to Thee, that he may dwell in thy courts."

The knowledge which is life eternal, then, is presented in a Person and a Life. Not in an abstract way—in a "body of divinity," in a "system of theology," in a "catechism," in a "philosophy of religion," in a "Handy Book of Revealed Truth," but in a living Saviour, who is the Son of the Father, the Messenger of the Father, the Love-gift of the Father, the Servant of the Father, the Father's Representative Image.

Not merely has Jesus described eternal life, He exhibits it. More than once He calls Himself the Life, and one of his apostles (1 John i. 2) says: "The Life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us."

Take a parable. A boy is born, and spends his boyhood deep under ground in the darkness of a mine. He never saw the upper world—the blue sky, with its cloud scenery and its sunrise and sunset glories; nor this fair and wondrous earth, with its mountains and green fields and flashing streams. You describe the upper world to him. What a poor conception you convey! He interprets what you tell him by what is familiar to him. The dome of heaven is the roof over his head; the stars are lamps in his mine. But instead of describing, take him up to the upper world, and let him gaze abroad, with the summer sun shining and the summer breeze fanning his cheeks, and the melody of woods and winds and waters filling his soul; how different his conceptions now.

This is the way that God has taken to explain to us what life eternal is. He has not, indeed, taken us up to heaven, but He has sent heaven down to us—at least the best part of heaven. He has sent heaven down to earth in the person of Jesus Christ, and now He says, There is life eternal, in its unsullied purity and perfectness; the life that you see there is life eternal, and that life is my gift to sinful men.

Jesus Christ came to kindle this life in a dead world. Not in some man of that generation only, but in men of every generation to the end of time. To understand and experience his life-giving power, we must know Him. And to know Him we must study the record of his words and works, and sufferings and exaltation. In the close of John's Gospel we are told, and the same statement might be made respecting any of the four, "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, and that, believing, ye might have life in his name."

Prayer for Israel.

AT the Day of Prayer for Israel, on Friday last, at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., there were three meetings—one at 11 a.m., at which Colonel Morton presided; another at 3 p.m., at which Mr. R. C. Morgan presided; and a third at 6.30 p.m., when Mr. J. E. Mathieson was the chairman. At the morning meeting the subject was Confession and Thanksgiving—Prayer that God may awaken in the Church of Christ an interest in the Jew warranted by the Word of God. Colonel Morton gave a short address on Jer. xxxi. 31, and showed that while the promises of full and free forgiveness, Divine renewal and relationship with God, apply in a spiritual sense to every individual believer, their literal fulfilment to Israel as a nation is none the less certain. Gentiles know of but one covenant, the covenant of grace: the "New Covenant" can only be with Israel. They have failed in the covenant of works and it is put aside, but Israel is yet to be a consenting party to the everlasting covenant ratified by the blood of Christ.

Prayer for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Jews throughout the world was the subject in the afternoon. Mr. Morgan read Ezekiel xxxvii. The Jew, he said, is the son of Abraham, the son of the man who stands out as God's object-lesson of a man of faith, the man to whom the honour was granted of rehearsing the sacrifice of Christ upon the cross. The Jew is the type of the human race educated, the Gentile of the human race let run wild. When the supreme crisis comes, both Jew and Gentile reject their King. They were unable to recognise their King in Him who said, "I am meek and lowly in heart." The prophet, unable to answer the question, "Can these bones live?" casts it back upon Him who asks it—"O Lord God, Thou knowest." Only He can answer it, who is able to make them live. He can put breath into them. We have every reason to pray that God will hasten his work, that the time may quickly come for the restoration of his people.

Rev. J. Wilkinson said the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was carried on in prayer. In the twenty-two years since the commencement of the Mission, God had sent over £144,000 to carry on its work amongst Israel. A class of 300 Jewesses meets every Tuesday. There are 150 children on the books of the night school, about a hundred attending four nights a week. There is a convalescent home, home for Jewish children, boarding house, a Sunday morning meeting of believers at the hall. The first year the hall was opened there were 43,000 attendances altogether, last year there were over 60,000. There are several agents in Russia, and they had been able in twelve years to put more than a million copies of the New Testament in Hebrew, Judeo-German, Judeo-Spanish, French, German, Russian, in circulation. Mr. Wilkinson added that he was asking God for another half million copies of New Testaments in Yiddish or Jargon, for which a sum of £20,000 or £30,000 would be needed. A short time was devoted to the quotation of Scripture passages relating to Israel, and Dr. Bullinger gave an address on the need of dependence on God for wisdom, means, and strength.

At the last meeting prayer was offered for all missions to Jews, that men and women engaged in this work may be filled with the Holy Spirit and that the modes of work may be such as are approved by the Word and Spirit of God. Mr. Mathieson indicated Abraham's prayer for Sodom in Genesis xviii. as a model for intercessory prayer, which should be characterised by humility, true compassion for the perishing, and real faith. Short addresses were given by Mr. Solomon Davidson, who is on the eve of starting on a tour of Testament distribution in Bulgaria, and by Mr. Clancy and Mr. Elijah Samuel, who are going on special missions to northern cities. The meetings were well attended, especially the afternoon one, and meetings with the same object were held at St. Leonards, East Grinstead, Sheerness, Aberdeen, Bedford, Tunbridge Wells, and other places, while numerous friends wrote expressing their intention of joining in spirit in the meetings. A gracious spirit of prayer was present in all of the three meetings. Most Jewish missions and many Jewish mission workers were mentioned before the Lord by name. Prayer was also made for the leaders of Jewish thought and of the Zionist movement.

The Ethics of Hearing.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

"Take heed how ye hear" (Luke viii. 18).

THERE are three conditions to successful preaching. First, there is the message, which, when adequately preached, we are told, is the "power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. i. 16). Secondly, there is the preacher, on whom devolves the sacred task first of appropriating, and then of transmitting, the truth to others; and, thirdly, there is the hearer.

We hear much about the responsibility of the preacher both to the message and to the audience. It would indeed be difficult to say too much about it—to preachers. But is enough said about the responsibility of the hearer? The man who preaches without due preparation of head and heart—we know what to think of him; what of the man who listens without preparation? The speaker who dares to utter great truths with flippant lip is unworthy of his great opportunity; what of the man who listens with frivolous ear? The man who preaches one thing and practises another—we get rid of him out of the pulpit as soon as we can; what of the man who is a hearer of the Word only, and no doer thereof? We have but to pause a moment and consider in order to realise that without a good hearer a good sermon is as barren as a handful of corn cast on the pavement or into the weltering sea. The good seed can only come to its own in good soil.

Thus we understand why it was that our Lord at the outset of his ministry dwelt with such repeated and impressive emphasis on the vast importance of the fact that the success of his Gospel depends on how it is received. Thus the "parables of hearing" ring out their warning, stimulating cry on the very threshold of his work, and they need to be constantly borne in mind by us to-day.

How essential it is to hear well, as it is to preach well, may be seen from the experience of the greatest of all preachers, Jesus Himself.

Here was a message fresh and warm out of the heart of God, clothed in familiar yet striking illustrations, told in words simple enough for all to understand. Here was a speaker who was one with his message; expressing his heart's love with such eloquence and persuasiveness that those who heard Him said, "Never man spake like this man"; "adorning his doctrine" by the ministry of a matchless life; whose words were words of "truth and grace," and whose earthly career was one long benediction. And yet, how was He listened to?

There never was a more tragic experience than that through which Jesus went in this matter. "The common people" we are told "heard Him gladly"—but to what little purpose! The religious people almost to a man rejected Him. It was all in vain—priest, Levite, Pharisee, Scribe, rulers joined in an unholy compact to have nothing to do with Him. Apparently all that Jesus received for his wonderful ministry was a crown of thorns and a cross of shame. What more striking object-lesson could we wish of the fact that preaching is only half the sermon, and that without the other half the Son of God Himself could not convert, nor even convict?

Ah, but there was a remnant who listened otherwise. In those motley crowds there were a few who had hearts as well as ears; blind men, who, receiving sight, received also the light of Divine truth; halt, and maimed, and crippled, who were strengthened, not only in body but in the inner man of the soul; sinners tired of their shame, who came sorrowing over wrong-doing, and departed in the full acceptance of Divine pardon; publicans and harlots, who, in spite of their old ways, still had an "honest and good heart," and left Him new men and women; and a chosen band of earnest seekers after God, who were rewarded with the knowledge that here was the Word Incarnate come to lead them back to the Father. Only a little company, but enough to prove beyond all doubt that as men listen, so they receive; as they measure themselves against the truth of God, so it will be measured unto them; that "whosoever hath to him shall be given, and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even that which he thinketh he hath."

Let us, therefore, notice a few of the main hindrances to the right hearing of religious truth.

1. The first is simple inattention.

It is an extraordinary thing this—that human beings are capable of coming deliberately together for the very purpose of listening to the most important truths they can possibly hear, and yet will no less deliberately allow their minds to wander during divine service after this, that, and the other trivial suggestion, till, an hour later, they can scarcely tell the preacher's text. And yet it is true. No preacher who is accustomed to keep "eye touch" with his audience can ignore the fact that there are some before him whose minds frequently or habitually drift away from his discourse, and wander after their cares, their work, their home affairs, and what not! It is often the custom of such people to blame the preacher for not riveting their attention. Let every man bear his own burden—the preacher if he is dull, the hearer if he is heavy. No man can hope to succeed in business if he is absent-minded at his duties. How can he succeed in apprehending the mighty truths of the Gospel unless he bends his soul to the high task, and supplies in the pew the freshness and zest of mind he is ever clamouring for in the pulpit? "When anyone heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not" [for lack of trying to do so], "then cometh the evil one, and snatcheth away that which has been sown in his heart. This is he that was sown by the wayside" (Matt. xiii. 19).

(To be concluded.)

Compensation.

I mourned the flight of summer; dead and cold
She lay upon the earth in pallid guise;
But as I wept, rich autumn's red and gold
Burst with new life upon my tired eyes.

The pageant of the poppy and the rose
Had passed to silence on the scented air.
"The flowers are gone!" I cried, but ere day's close
I sate among late lilies, tall and fair.

I sighed because the winter was no more—
The fireside and the friend it used to bring;
But whilst I grieved I had of gifts new store—
There came to me the sunshine and the spring!

I had a friend—a loved and trusted heart—
Whose love grew chill, who doubted, and who fled.
But whilst I sate in dark despair apart,
Another came, so dear that joy up-sped.

From these I learn that life's e'er-changing show
Evolves for us each hour some better thing;
To-day we sup on bitter herbs below—
To-morrow we shall banquet with the King.

The Lord's Death.

ON the Sabbath which preceded the recent Conference at Blankenburg, Rev. R. G. Walker referred to the meeting round the Lord's Table on the previous Lord's Day, and said:—It is very significant that the Lord Jesus should have appointed one ordinance, the only one to be repeatedly observed, of which the purpose was to commemorate events, or an event, in his existence.

The person of the Lord Jesus Christ is the centre, the all things, the source of grace, the embodiment of all the possibilities of God. "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." "He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily." "In Him are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

The power of the Holy Spirit is limited to what is in the Lord Jesus. The significance of the resurrection, which is the great doctrine of the Gospel, arises from its connection with his death. Satan is interested in minimising the death of Christ, because through death He destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil (Heb. ii. 14). Satan will, therefore, substitute anything as an object of our attention instead of the death of his conqueror. He will endeavour to make any radiant thing take the place of that blessed death.

I am jealous that the place given even to the Holy Ghost in our thoughts and our testimony should not entrench upon the truth relating to the person and work of the Son of God. I was thankful that Rev. Geo. Wilson, of Edinburgh, sounded this note of warning at the last Mildmay Conference. Some of you may not know the lessons of Church history, nor be aware that the most terrible delusions through the Christian ages have come through false teaching concerning the Holy Spirit.

That radiant form that fills the heart of God is the One to whom the affections of our hearts should constantly go out. The devil is greatly concerned to draw us away from Him. Did not the Lord throw emphasis on his death as on nothing else? Oh go, go, go minutely into the mysteries of that cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" till your whole soul throbs in love to Him. In the soul going out to God and to his Christ in the anguish of his death, the surges of the Spirit are at work. That Spirit of God is refreshed, especially in any who are persecuted for Christ's sake and bear it patiently—if any are suffering from slander and bearing it meekly for Jesus' sake, the Spirit of glory and of God is refreshed upon you.

If we had a conference devoted to the consideration of the last days of that blessed life and death, in the power of the Holy Ghost, whose work it is to take of the things of Christ and show them unto us, there would arise a phalanx of the hosts of God—as when Napoleon gathered his cohorts together and flung them irresistibly upon the weakest part of the opposing army. You would have the Church rising up, column after column, and casting themselves upon the gates of hell.

How then is this better life to have play in me? Matt. xvi.; Mark viii. "If any man will come after Me let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow Me." It is not the idea of the child putting its feet in the footsteps of his father, beautiful as that is; it is more than that. It is to be a personal attendant on Him. There is something the Lord Jesus wants of each of us which no angel could minister. Let us take up the cross and attend upon Him. If you live beneath the cross you will never complain of anything—want of power or success or blessing.

Soon we shall hear the voice and see the face of God. Then there will be those who wish, "Oh, that I had denied, or rather disowned, myself; oh, that I had presented my body a living sacrifice to God, my reasonable service."

I think that our commemoration of that love of God which gave his Son for us would be so overpowering that we could not do it without being broken down in sorrow and tears. He has commanded us again and again, "Do this in remembrance of Me. As often as ye eat of this bread and drink of this cup, ye do proclaim the Lord's death until He come." He who was made to be sin for us, whom God treated as the leper of the whole universe, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. We remember it. God remembers it. With what calmness, what recollectedness, what soberness of mind, what tenderness of heart, should we partake of the supper of the Lord!

The First Trial before Pilate.

John xviii. 38.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

THERE is no doubt that had Pilate been absent from Jerusalem at the time of our Lord's trial before the Sanhedrim, they would have rushed Him to death, as afterwards Stephen, and have risked the anger of the Governor. But they dared not attempt such a thing beneath the eyes of the dreaded Roman eagles. They must needs obtain Pilate's countersign to their death sentence, and, indeed, consign their victim to him for execution. The Lord was to die, not the Jewish death by stoning, but the terrible Roman death of crucifixion.

The day then breaking was that before the Passover. If the order for execution were not obtained that morning, the case could not come on for seven days, and it would have been highly impolitic, from their point of view, to keep Jesus so long in bonds. The national sentiment might have awaked and refused to sanction their treachery. For the same reason it was necessary to carry the sentence into effect with as little delay as possible, or the whole plot might miscarry. Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas to the official residence of Pilate, which had been the palace of the magnificent Herod—and it was early.

In the palace there was a hall where trials were usually conducted; but the Jewish dignitaries who had not scrupled shamelessly to condemn Jesus were too scrupulous to enter the house of a Gentile on the eve of the feast, for fear there might be a single grain of leaven there, and the mere suspicion of such a thing would have disqualified them from participating in the feast. Remember that these men had just broken every principle of justice in their treatment of Jesus, and now they palter over minute

POINTS OF RABBINICAL CASUISTRY.

So Philip of Spain abetted the massacres of Alva, but rigorously performed all the rites of the Church; and the Italian bandit will carefully honour priest, and host, and church. How well our Lord's sharp sword cut to the dividing of soul and spirit, in such cases as these: "Ye pay tithe of mint, and cummin, and anise, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law." It is an evil day when religion and morality are divorced.

Pilate knew too well the character of the men with whom he had to do to attempt to force their scruples, and went out to them; so that for most of the time his intercourse with Jesus was apart from their interference and scrutiny. Without much interchange of formalities, the Governor asked, "What accusation bring ye against this man?"

It was not a little disappointing to their pride to be obliged to adduce and substantiate capital charges against Jesus, so they replied in general terms, and with the air of injured innocence, "If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered Him unto thee." It was as though they said, There is no need for thee to enter into the details of this case; we have thoroughly investigated it, and are satisfied with the conclusive evidence of our prisoner's guilt; you may be sure that men like ourselves would never come to thee, at such an hour, on such an errand, unless there were ample grounds for it.

But Pilate was in no mood to be talked with thus. He saw their eagerness to ward off inquiry, and this was quite enough to arouse his proud spirit to thwart and disappoint them. He knew well enough that they wanted him to pronounce the death sentence; but he pretended not to, and said, in effect, "If your judgment, and yours only, is to settle the case, take ye Him and judge Him according to your law, inflicting such penalty as it directs."

The Jewish notables at once saw that they must adopt a more conciliatory tone, or they would lose their case; they therefore explained that they wanted a severer sentence than they had the right to inflict. "It is not lawful," they said, "for us to put any man to death."

Pilate again asked for a statement of the crime of which Jesus was accused.

Now mark the baseness of their reply. The only crime on which they had condemned Jesus to death was his claim to Deity; but it would never have done to tell Pilate that. He would simply have laughed at them. They must find some charge which would bring Him within the range of the common law, and be of such a nature that Pilate must take cognisance of it, and award death. It was not easy to find ground for such a charge in the life of one who had so studiously threaded his way through the snares they had often laid for Him; who had bade them and protested that He was neither a ruler nor judge. Their only hope was to rest their charge on his claim to be the Messiah, construing it, as the Jews were wont to do, but as Jesus never did, into a claim to an outward and visible royalty. They said, therefore, as Luke informs us, "We found this man perverting the nation and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that He Himself is Christ a King."

RENDER CÆSAR'S THINGS TO CÆSAR;

This was quite enough to compel Pilate to institute further inquiry. There were thousands of Jews who questioned Cæsar's right to tax them, and were willing to revolt under the lead of any man who showed himself capable. It was certainly suspicious that such a charge should be made by men who themselves abhorred the yoke of Rome. However, Pilate saw that he had no alternative but to investigate the case further. He therefore went within the palace to the inner judgment hall, summoned Jesus before him, and said, not without a touch of sarcasm in his tones, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" Thou poor, worn, tear-stained outcast, forsaken by every friend in this thy hour of need, so great a contrast to him who built these halls and aspired to the same title—art thou a king?

He probably expected that Jesus would at once disclaim any such title. But instead of doing so, instead of answering directly, our Lord answered his question by propounding another. "Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee concerning Me?" The purport of this question seems to have been to probe Pilate's conscience, and make him aware of his own growing consciousness that this prisoner was too royal in mien to be an ordinary Jewish visionary. It was as though He said: "Dost thou use the term in the common sense, or as a soul confronted by a greater than thyself? Do you speak by hearsay, or by conviction? Is it because the Jews have so taught thee, or because thou recognisest Me as able to bring into troubled hearts like thine?" Whatever thoughts had instinctively made themselves felt were instantly beaten back by his strong Roman pride. Never before had he been catechised thus. And he answered haughtily, "Am I a Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee unto me: what hast Thou done?"

Our Lord did not answer that question by enumerating deeds which had filled Palestine with wonder; but contented Himself by saying that He had committed no political offence, and had no idea of setting Himself up as king, in the sense in which Pilate and the Jews used the word: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence."

Never in the history of this world did the lips of man speak or his ears listen to a more pregnant or remarkable utterance. But it has been shamefully misunderstood. Men have misread the words, and said, See, the religion of Jesus is quite unworldly, has nothing to do with the institutions and arrangements of human life. It deals with the spiritual, and not with the secular. It treats of our spirits, not our hands or pockets. So long as we recognise Christ's authority in the Church, we may do as we like in the home, the counting-house, the factory, and the shop.

It was in no such sense that Jesus uttered these words, and the mistake has largely arisen through the misunderstanding of the word of as used by our translators. It has not the force of belonging to, or being the property of, but is the translation of a Greek preposition, meaning out of, springing from, originating in. We might freely translate the Master's words thus: "My kingdom does not originate from this world; it has come down from another, to bring the principles, methods, and inspirations of heaven to bear on all the provinces of human thought and activity." The Son of Man claims the whole of man and all that he does as a subject of his realm. He cannot spare one relationship of human life, one art, one industry, one interest, one joy, one hope from the domain of his empire. He has a word about the weight in the pedlar's bag, the dealings of the merchant on 'Change, the justice and injustice of wars that desolate continents.

The one conspicuous proof of the absolutely foreign origin of this heavenly kingdom is its refusal to employ force. Its servants do not fight. In the garden the King had bidding his servant sheath his sword. Whenever you encounter a system that cannot stand without the use of force, that appeals to the law court or bayonet, you are sure that, whatever else it is, it is not the Kingdom of Christ. Christ's kingdom distinctly and for ever refuses to allow its subjects to fight. They who would surround Christianity with prestige, endow it with wealth, and guard it with the sword, expel its Divine Spirit, and leave only its semblance dead upon the field. But if the aid which might be deemed essential is withheld, whether of funds or force, it thrives and spreads until the hills are covered with its goodly shadow, and its produce fills the earth with harvests of benediction. All the Gospel asks for is freedom—freedom to do what Jesus did, in the way He did it; freedom because of belief in the power of truth as greater than all the power of the Adversary. Oh for a second Pentecost! Oh for the holy days of Apostolic trust and simplicity! Oh for one of the days of the Son of Man, who came to our world armed with no authority save that of truth, clothed with no power but that of love.

The Bible League.—The season's engagements commenced with a conference at Dover on September 20th and 21st, and lectures and Bible readings by Rev. John Tuckwell (hon. secretary) at Sandown and Newport, I.W. Addresses on the inspiration of the Scriptures have been given by Rev. J. B. Barraclough and Rev. G. D. Hooper. Mr. Tuckwell's lectures on "Modern Discovery in Babylonia and Assyria," illustrated with beautiful limelight views, have been greatly appreciated.

Christians and Zionism.—Rev. Aaron Sternberg, of the British Jews Society, describes the recent Zionist Congress at Basle in the current issue of The Jewish Herald. He remarks, by the way, that Christian friends of Israel were cordially welcomed, and most respectfully treated, by the members of the Congress. Views on the Messiahship of Jesus were freely interchanged, and the tone of all those with whom we conversed on this great theme was: "We honour and respect you Hebrew-Christians if you have accepted your new faith from pure conviction, and not from any mercenary or unworthy motive." Mrs. Sternberg, who met with a kind reception from the Jewish ladies at the Congress, as a Christian interested in the Jews, will be pleased to receive names of friends who would like to become members of the Zionist movement. This can be effected by contributing the shekel (minimum one shilling), and she would be glad, on the occasion of the next Zionist Congress, to represent the Christian ladies in England. Any lady intending to become a Zionist would please communicate with Mrs. Sternberg, 2, Brownswood Park, London, N.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 9.

"Much incense, that He should add it unto the prayers of all the saints upon the golden altar."—Rev. viii. 3 (R.V.).

EACH series of seven, whether of the candlesticks, the seals, the trumpets, or the vials, is introduced by some appropriate and suggestive appearance of Christ. Here, for instance, the seven trumpets are restrained until this inspiring vision of the Redeemer is delineated as an imperishable fresco on the wall of Scripture.

It is not startling that He assumes here the appearance of an angel. This was his frequent guise in the ages which preceded his incarnation. And as to the priestly functions here ascribed to Him, they are his habitual practice and wont throughout the present dispensation. He appears in the presence of God on our behalf. He has gone within the veil to make intercession for us. Such a Priest becomes us who is a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord has pitched, and not man. And since it is necessary that, as high priest, He should have somewhat to offer, there is given to Him the praises, prayers, and gifts of the saints, that He should mingle them with the much incense of his own merit, and present them at the golden altar which is before the throne. Whenever we approach God in the name of Jesus we are really appealing to Him on the ground of that presentation, of that much incense, and the prevalence of that intercession. All this is comprehended in our prayers in the name of Jesus.

Our prayers appear at times too utterly unworthy to bring to God. But never forget the much incense which is added to each petition; and remember that Christ gave Himself unto God, and is perpetually giving Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice, for an odour of a sweet smell.

MONDAY, October 10.

"Only such men as have not the seal of God on their foreheads."—Rev. ix. 4 (R.V.).

This reference carries us back to chap. vii., with its sublime description of the angel ascending from the sunrise, having the seal of the living God. He had cried with a great voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, "Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of God upon their foreheads." Then followed the sealing of the 144,000.

What a remarkable inference may be derived from the prohibition of the previous chapter, and the immunity accorded to the sealed ones in this! If the hordes of horsemen are withheld from touching the servants of God, whom the Angel sealed, we may infer, when no such caution is uttered about our lives, and no such immunity secured, that God has allowed pain, and sorrow, and death to hurt us for some sufficient reason, one which we shall be able to appreciate when we stand in his light. If He who has power to withhold the power of the adversary does not withhold it, the assaults which make our frail craft tremble from stem to stern must be his appointment and choice for us, and we must dare to look up into his face, and say, It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth to Him good.

What God permits to come, He appoints. And He will appoint nothing beyond our power to sustain. With the trial He will make his grace to abound, so that we shall be able to stand.

TUESDAY, October 11.

"Time no longer."—Rev. x. 6.

Time is but an incident in the procession of eternity: a wreath of cloud on its expanse; a throb of its pendulum; a drop in its multitudinous ocean. There was a moment when it began, there shall be another of its pause and cessation. There is good reason then for Milton's magnificent address to Time, commencing with the summons—

> Fly, envious Time, till thou run out thy race,
> Call on the leaden stepping horns, whose speed
> Is as the plummet's space.

And ending with the assurance of our

> Triumphing o'er death, and chance, and thee, O Time.

But we may look for the expiration of the Time ages without alarm. We have already received the germ of the eternal life, which existed before time began, and will last when it has fulfilled its course. "The witness is this, that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath the life." We are the children of eternity; our eternal life dates from the moment of our regeneration; we know not how it befel, but we awoke in the time sphere to discover that we were objects of an eternal love, and that we are destined to a life which will outlast the universe of matter. From everlasting to everlasting Thou art God, and Thou hast made us partakers of thy Divine Nature, who art, and wast, and art to come!

The margin suggests another rendering, that there should be no longer delay for the finishing of the mystery of God. Then we shall see the end from the beginning; and in God's light, see light.

WEDNESDAY, October 12.

"There was seen in his Temple the Ark of his Covenant."—Rev. xi. 19.

We are constantly encountering evidences that the Bible is one. Its writers are as various in their styles and characteristics as their respective ages; but they keep striking the same notes, and making allusion to the same objects. We have not heard of the Ark for centuries. It was a familiar feature of the Exodus. There are many references to it in the Books of Moses, in the historical books, and in the Psalms; but we have lost sight of it since the sack and burning of the Temple and city, under the orders of Nebuchadnezzar; now we suddenly meet with it in a description of the coronation of the Son of Man. He has taken his great power and reigned. The kingdoms of the world have become his. The portals of the temple of God have been thrown open, and within is seen the Ark of the Covenant.

Beneath the change of the dispensation God is one, and his purpose uniform. The methods of his manifestation may vary, but He is pursuing one plan, which, like the uniting thread of a necklace, penetrates and connects all events. This is why the saints of all dispensations are able to combine in the song of Moses and the Lamb.

God will never forget his covenant.—When once He has pledged Himself to a nation or an individual, to Israel or Abraham, or to Christ and his seed, He will infallibly stand to it.

The covenant, which means blessing to God's children, is fraught with terror to his enemies.—"There followed lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and a great hail." It was so of old, when the ark brought deliverance to Israel, but disaster to Philistia. The savour of life and of death; the pillar of cloud which was light, and midnight darkness; the "Come, ye blessed," and "Depart, ye cursed"—these alternatives are presented to us all.

THURSDAY, October 13.

"They overcame him because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of their testimony."—Rev. xii. 11 (R.V.).

The overcoming and casting out of Satan is the theme of the Bible. First he overcomes, then he is overcome. Overcome first by Christ, and secondly by those who belong to Christ. Cast out from Heaven to the heavenly places or the air, of which as prince he wields the power. Cast out from there into the earth. Cast out thence into the bottomless pit. Cast out thence into the lake of fire. Such are the stages of the overthrow of the usurper.

Satan's accusations are met by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of testimony. There is no force so potent as the witness of the saints for truth, purity, and spirituality. Oh, that there were more of this, by life and life! Oh, that there were more unswerving loyalty to the King, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession!

For when this is so, Satan gives back. The darkness cannot withstand the light. Victory is assured to those who love not their life unto the death, in their steadfast obedience to the truth. And the effect of their success is communicated to all worlds, where the conflict between good and evil is proceeding: "Rejoice, O heavens, and ye that dwell in them."

FRIDAY, October 14.

"That no man should be able to buy or to sell save he that hath the mark, even the name of the beast or the number of his name."—Rev. xiii. 17 (R.V.).

From many hints dropped from time to time by business men it would seem as though the time described in these words is already being inaugurated. Christian men are finding it increasingly difficult to carry on their businesses without adopting a lower standard than that of the sanctuary. Tradespeople are strongly tempted to adopt two prices, adulterate, or sell beneath their samples. Workmen are hardly put to it when association with their fellows threatens to involve them in movements from which in their secret souls they revolt. How much business is done over the glass of wine or in the public house! What a universal custom it is becoming to give a present to the buyer or representative of the firm with which business is being done.

Under these circumstances, Christian men must resolve:—

First, that they will not trifle with their conscience, but will dare in all respects to obey the law of Christ.—For everyone there is an inevitable choice to be made and maintained, whether a clear conscience or a fortune is to hold the first place in their business career.

Second, men must be content to bear poverty as part of the cross of Christ.—We admire and canonise the martyrs, but are strangely unwilling to face the disgrace of poverty, the dens and caves of the earth, which they endured for principle.

Third, Christian people should teach their children the nobility of frugality, simplicity, and contentment.—There would be fewer hearts broken by prodigals if we lived as though Christian life did not consist in the abundance of our possessions, but in God.

SATURDAY, October 15.

"The first fruits unto God, and unto the Lamb."—Rev. xiv. 4 (R.V.).

What a word is here. The Apostle points to the radiant throng, grouped around Christ as his bodyguard of personal attendants. We had just beheld in the previous chapter the mighty legions mustering under the prince of darkness, and which furnish a strange contrast to this galaxy of strength and beauty. And as we wonder and admire, we are told that they are but as the first-fruit sheaf of the mighty harvest to be reaped from the earth.

By examining the first-fruit sheaf, we are able to tell the nature and quality of all the other sheaves that stand in the harvest-field under the golden autumn light. It is by studying the characteristics of these happy and holy spirits that we may learn what we shall be, and what the whole body of the elect shall be one day. It may move us to high hope and anticipation if we consider their number, their character, and their occupation.

Their number. "With Him, a hundred and forty-four thousand." But if this vast multitude is only a sheaf, what will not the entire harvest be but a multitude which none shall be able to compute?

Their character. Stamped indelibly with the name of God and of the Lamb; singing a new song, which only redeemed hearts can learn and redeemed lips utter; virgin souls, clad in stainless purity, with no lie in their mouths, and no blemish in their lives; purchased from among men to follow the Lamb.

Their occupation. Adoration: they sing a new song. Loyal obedience and companionship: they follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Converts in Paris.

DEAR SIR,—Those who have prayed for France will be glad to hear there are many tokens of God's work. I will take as an example the meeting for prayer last Friday. There were six ex-priests present, three of whom had only left the Romish Church the last two months. There was an ex-Anarchist, a happy preacher of the Gospel which he once destroyed.

There was an ex-student for the priesthood, who had become a public singer, and for five years sang at theatres, but when he found Jesus he gave it up. His faith has since been much tried, and though he has been offered 100 francs for a song when he was in great poverty, he now sings only for Jesus.

There was a schoolmistress who had been a nun, then became a sceptic, and then was converted. As a Government teacher she had a very good appointment; from this she has just been dismissed because she would speak to the children about Jesus. She was offered a higher salary if she would stay, but she remained steadfast.

There is also a growing movement among the priests, but as many want to leave the priesthood from worldly motives or from scepticism, great care needs to be taken as to receiving them and training them. Those who wish to help in this work will be quite safe if they send their help to M. Corneloup, 25, Rue Carl Hébert, Courbevoie, the head of a little home for ex-priests, or to M. Reveillaud, Rue des Chantiers, Versailles, who is the vice-president of the little society for ex-priests.

Above all, what is needed is prevailing prayer. The difficulties to a priest leaving Rome are not so much from Rome as from the low state of the great majority of Protestants, and too often from rationalism among those who profess to show the way of Light and Life, which is in a Living Lord alone. I was greatly refreshed by a very bright meeting of Christian Endeavourers at Rue Roquépine. Both there and at the English Y.M.C.A. there are young men who are greatly helped by our Lord. I ought to add that there seems a great readiness to hear, and tracts are gladly welcomed. May all the Lord's people in France be enabled by grace to realise this opportunity, if grace there is to meet it. I ask continued prayer for the grace of God to be manifested here in his people.—Yours, for Christ's sake, RADSTOCK.

The West Indian Hurricane.

DEAR SIR,—The devastation and wreck that have come upon the people of St. Vincent, Barbadoes, and St. Lucia—particularly the first-named island—through the recent terrific hurricane have filled many hearts with grief, and touched our tenderest sympathy. The sugar planters, already sorely tried and reduced, have had all their crops destroyed and their sugar works levelled to the ground or blown into the sea. They are literally ruined. The subjoined letter, received by the mail, will be felt to be most pathetic and touching. It is from the wife of a planter, who turns piteously to one to whom she is related. It is not in my power to do more than a little, but if any of your kind readers would assist me in sending some adequate relief I should be deeply thankful.—Yours gratefully,

S. SUNDERLAND, Wesleyan Minister.

"St. Vincent, W. Indies, Sept. 15, 1898.

"It is with the deepest sorrow and distress that I am writing to you these lines to ask you to use your influence in getting us some relief, as we are homeless, naked, and starving, from a most terrific hurricane which passed over this island, and continued for a day and part of the night. It was only by God's mercy that we were saved in a corner of the cellar. The whole estate's people came up to us. You should have heard the cries of the infants and mothers with their little children—wet, hungry, and naked! The little we had saved for ourselves had to be given to them, but we could give them no clothes, as we had none for ourselves. All our sheep were killed in the pen; after a week or so, what will become of us? Everything is gone. It cannot be worse. We must crave your indulgence, and ask for help in any way. Chapels and churches all gone.

"In Barroullie only one house is left, and in Chateaubellair only three houses are left! Mission Chapel and Church with hundreds of people buried in them! I do hope we may be spared to hear from you before I die, as I fear sickness, without a house or any comforts. I cannot get a suit to put on, and my children are in an awful state. Poor G. [the husband, who is sixty-one, and has been a most industrious man] is bowed down in grief."

The late Pastor Elie Vernier.

AS already reported, Pastor Elie Vernier, agent for the Evangelical Society of Geneva, passed peacefully away at Barcelonne (Drôme), on the 28th of August, after a life entirely devoted to the Lord's service. The son of Jean Frédéric Vernier, who, along with Félix Neff, was the pioneer of the religious awakening throughout the Dauphiny, he had a remarkable career. His life was one of the finest results of the revival which spread through the Drôme district after the meetings promoted by the Evangelical Alliance at Montmeyran in the year 1852.

Among those who took a very active part in the meetings was Chas. Cook, father of the Methodist Church in France, and Bertholet, of the Evangelical Church of Lyons. When Bertholet was addressing a vigorous appeal to young men, and depicting the happiness of all those who enter into the service of Christ, Elie Vernier, who was then about seventeen years of age, and for about a year had been earnestly seeking salvation, resolved to devote himself completely to the service of the Lord. Throughout his whole life he experienced to the full that joy which had been promised by Bertholet, and it was his chief delight to communicate the same to others.

First, pastor in the Reformed Church, then agent of the Home Evangelical Mission, finally agent of the Evangelical Society of Geneva and McAll Mission, into which service his missionary zeal drove him to enter, the guiding principle of his life was the saying of St. Paul—"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel." Thus he passed the greater part of his life going from place to place, preaching in all the Protestant churches, for he recognised no barriers between Christians, and in the McAll mission-halls his greatest happiness was everywhere and at all seasons to proclaim that Gospel of Christ which had rendered him so happy, and which he would fain see accepted by all the world.

Whilst thus engaged in August last in the manufacturing city of Limoges, he experienced the first attack of that malady which was to carry him off after a ten days' illness. He had a great affection for England, where he had many friends and acquaintances. He leaves behind him a sorrowing widow and five sons, three of them pastors in the Reformed Church, one a missionary on the Congo, and the youngest studying for ministerial life. Pastor Vernier gave himself soul and body to the work of evangelisation. He fell like a valiant soldier, and as "one wounded in the Holy War," to use an expression of his own uttered he himself said some hours before his death.

Madagascar.—Christian converts in the island are still suffering serious disabilities and persecutions in consequence of their faith. A missionary, now in England, accuses the authorities of permitting the persecution of Protestants by Jesuits; and charges the Jesuits with instigating the judicial murder of innocent and loyal native Protestants, who were falsely accused of being enemies of France. Several Protestant churches, he says, which had taken years to build, have been seized by Jesuit priests, and are still in their possession.

Zanzibar.—Mr. and Mrs. Knapman, who have been at work in Zanzibar for nearly three years, in connection with the "Strangers' Rest," are still seeking to spread Christ's kingdom among all classes, both afloat and ashore. The Gospel is carried to sailors of various nations by the circulation of the Word of God and bright, helpful literature, whilst services are regularly held for the Britishers in the harbour. Definite cases of blessing are not wanting to cheer the hearts of the workers. Prayer is asked on behalf of the efforts put forth.

The Mission to Lepers.

ON Thursday last Sir GEO. WILLIAMS presided over a special gathering in connection with this very useful work among the lepers in India and the East. The Countess of Seafield and many other friends were on the platform. Mr. Wellesley Bailey (secretary and superintendent) was unfortunately prevented from attending by illness.

A special feature of the occasion was the recognition of Mr. JOHN JACKSON, organising and deputation secretary, on his resigning his business appointment to devote his entire time to the Mission.

A large audience assembled in the Lower Ezeter Hall, and Sir Geo. Williams, in introducing the sorrowful subject of the evening's gathering, remarked that one cheering fact in the midst of this great, but painful, work was that lepers were outside all caste. Mr. Jackson was to be congratulated in his glorious choice of work.

In a happy and vigorous speech Mr. Jackson gave a vivid sketch of the extensive work and the vast need for further progress. The Society is inter-denominational, and is the only one which exists solely for lepers. In India, China, and Japan there are fifty-one stations. The work has been greatly owned of God in the salvation of souls. In one alone of the Society's asylums are gathered over six hundred lepers, of whom four hundred now profess Christianity. Such a number of sufferers must indeed constitute a pathetic and moving spectacle. Many are armless, others without feet, while from the faces of others glare the empty sockets where the eyes have been eaten by the fell leprosy; large numbers of children, even at the early age of three, are gripped by the disease.

In all, there are ten homes or settlements in India and one in China, but the need may be best described by the fact that Government statistics admit the existence of a million lepers in India alone. In order to grapple with the indescribable sufferings of lepers all over the world, a very large increase in the present scanty support is required.

Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, of the London Missionary Society, testified in emphatic terms to the value of the Mission. He had personally witnessed the keen sufferings of these unhappy lepers in various parts of the world. Never should he forget a piteous spectacle he saw when visiting Madagascar. By the wayside sat a long row of lepers in various stages of decay. In the midst of the road they had spread their food vessels, and when travellers passed they raised their voices in a dolorous appeal for help. They could exist only by begging, for in self-defence humanity held them at bay. He had seen the remarkable effects of Christian influence upon the lepers; not only of the results of cleanliness, good food, and proper rules of life, but of the glow of a Christian face, the kindly word, the cheering smile, the interest for the Master's sake. He strongly recommended the mission as highly deserving of greater financial support.

Rev. A. MÜLLER, one of the active workers, who is at the present time taking an evidently needed rest, gave terse descriptions of the leper settlements which the society had organised, and described the intense gratitude with which the work was regarded by Europeans and natives alike. He was, indeed, charged by the lepers he had left at Ellichpur to convey to the British public their hearty thanks for all that had been done.

Sir GEO. WILLIAMS, to the manifest enjoyment of the audience, then put Mr. Müller into a kind of witness box, eliciting from him many interesting particulars of the medical methods adopted in dealing with the scourge. The answers were highly reassuring, and Sir George urged that the mission was in every way worthy of all the money—little enough in view of the million or more hopeless sufferers—for which it was pleading. £2000 are required to meet immediate wants and £10,000 for the forthcoming year's income. Mr. Jackson, in Room 20 at Exeter Hall, will be glad to impart further particulars.

Finland.—God's blessing seems to be resting on the work in Sordavala, Finland. The large new hall, which was built only a few years ago, is now too small for the Sunday evening meetings. It is hoped to send out several Christian men as colporteurs this winter. The Deaconess Institute is full, and a goodly number of new tracts are being printed. The present is a critical time in the history of Finland. We shall be glad of the prayers of your readers. J. D. KILBURN.

St. Petersburg.

Bishop Latimer: Shame on ye Bishops! The bread god and the images are brought back into the Churches, and ye say, "Peace, peace; it is a light thing." Know ye not that an idol is an abomination to the Lord? Yea, rather than have any part with these wicked things, I suffered my body to be burnt; but ye sit at ease, and the smell of their incense is in your garments. If ye hate the Mass and the idol, cry out "Away with it!" But if ye love them, beware, for the English people love them not, and will never forget my warning.

The Duxhurst Farm Colony.

By LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

IT is apparent that the system by which we have hitherto dealt with habitual inebriates is based on foundations that have not the merit of being either scientific or sensible. The repeated imprisonments of those who habitually give way to intemperance have long been the scandal of our police courts, and the constant reappearances of the same offenders have been the proof of the failure of the treatment, and the inadequacy of the study given to the question. It was to demonstrate this that the farm colony at Duxhurst was founded.

The reasons for the failure of the old system are not far to seek. Habitual inebriety becomes a disease; the moral power is absolutely weakened; the brain is not normal; the individual has become the prey of these conditions, and is practically no longer a responsible being. What we need for such is a moral hospital, and this we have endeavoured to supply in the farm colony. To effect a physical cure two things are necessary—time, and wholesome conditions, including obviously the absence of alcohol. To effect a spiritual cure we must have an atmosphere pervaded by

INTENSE SYMPATHY AND BOUNDLESS LOVE.

It has been the constant endeavour of those who have worked in the colony to create these conditions. They discarded at once the plan of having one institution, because experience has taught that to mass human beings together whose minds are strongly impregnated with one idea is not a wholesome or scientific way of dealing with those diseased in body and mind. The colony was, therefore, founded on the cottage system, and to this is to be attributed a large measure, under God's blessing, of the success achieved. Every human being is an individual, every group is a home, and the little circles in each cottage, with their nurse-matron, can have a personal care and supervision which would otherwise be impossible.

In a large main building at one end of the quadrangle, called the "Margaret Bright Lucas" (after the late president of the British Women's Temperance Association), there are two halls, the central kitchen, laundries, store-houses, etc. In Willard Hall, a large, bright, airy room, the patients assemble from all the cottages for their midday meal. In the hall opposite the indoor industries are carried on, such as weaving, machine-knitting, etc., etc. The bulk of the work, however, is out-door, and this again has proved to be a successful line of treatment. The women come as a rule from large towns; they have become diseased by false stimulant, and are wrecks in body and wrecks in mind. The most wholesome and natural occupation is therefore and in nothing do they find better medicine than in the work of gardening, poultry-keeping, lawn-mowing, bee-keeping, etc., etc. Consequently the main occupation of the colony lies in these directions.

The gardening is carried out under the supervision of Miss Smith, the head gardener, who came to Duxhurst from Swanley College, and whose inexhaustible patience and untiring enthusiasm has been invaluable in our difficult task. The long line of forcing houses entirely managed by the women is a proof that not only is gardening a wholesome occupation, but that it is one for which women are well adapted. The trim lawns of the Manor House (where patients are received who are able to pay higher fees), the beautiful flower borders, the large kitchen garden, are proofs of the interest that the women take in the work assigned to them. Poultry-keeping and bee-keeping also are occupations in which they take great interest.

Among the other buildings there is a hospital, and two new cottages have lately been erected, one provided by the sailors of the Royal Navy, and the other by money collected by the B.W.T.A. at Hastings. A small church stands in the centre of the colony, where services are conducted on Sunday by Rev. H. A. Hall, of Reigate, and Gospel temperance meetings are held in Willard Hall every Thursday evening by Mr. Mollison, of the Gospel Temperance Hall, Reigate.

A long, low building faces the village, and here is to be found an entirely different phase of the work; one possibly that may be considered not directly connected with it, but one which we believe to be of untold value—it is the Holiday Home that is called

THE BIRD'S NEST.

This home for children from the slums of London is at the same time an integral part of the scheme.

THE VILLAGE, DUXHURST.

When the Colony was first started it was greatly desired to make it as beautiful and as full of interest as possible, and therefore children were given a place in the little community. What their place is, and how great is their influence, few can rightly estimate, but most women at any rate agree that

> Where children are not, Heaven is not, and Heaven
> If they come not again shall be never;
> For the face and the voice of a child are assurance
> Of Heaven and its promise for ever.

The presence of the children takes from the settlement all penal character. Somebody comes there to be happy, and the children's trust and love for the women is one of the very best lessons that can be brought to these poor weary lives, for it tells them there is a possibility of which they never dreamed; that they too can become as little children and leave their sin-stained past at the feet of Him who often calls them through those baby voices.

The Nest is open from May till the end of September, and the children who visit it are from the poorest parts of London. They are children who from extreme poverty, or from neglect, are not eligible for any other holiday home. They may come to the Nest in their rags and their dirt, and only those whose work it is to clean and disinfect them know what this means. Generally they come in parties of fifteen at a time; often they are all friends from the same street and travel down from London together. On their arrival they are disinfected in a room apart from the cottage, dressed in a pretty uniform, and then made as happy as the day is long, for a fortnight.

Apart from the life and interest they bring to the colony, the children's holiday has two objects. First, to give the children health and pleasure. Health is a rare possession in the slums. Through the hot summer weather the child of the street suffers more than words can tell; the noise, the heat, and the smells of the dirty courts they live in seem to till one wonders sometimes whether the little white-faced creatures one sees sitting on the doorsteps of their houses are really children and not old men and women tired with life. To such children a fortnight's stay in a clean, bright cottage, with play all day long in the fields, is an untold joy. To be able to forget the misery of home, and to be cared for, gives them the childhood that life has so far denied.

But beyond help and happiness, "The Nest" is meant to be an object lesson to the children. It is to give them some idea of God, of the beautiful in life. A child who has always trod on grey pavements, whose world has always been shut in by tall, dark houses, naturally thinks the world is paved with grey, and that the sky is always hidden by dark walls. But a fortnight's play in fields, under a wide stretch of clear blue sky, teaches a child that God clothed his world with soft green grass, and that He built no walls to hide the sky, but made it clear and wide, blue by day to play under and lit at night by thousands of lamps when bedtime comes. When the child's holiday is over and he goes back to the hard misery of his home life, he takes back a picture in his mind of the world as God meant it to be—a world where children are wanted, where daisies are to be had for the picking, where there are cool woods to play in when the day is too hot for games in the sun, and where hedges made of roses and honeysuckle shut out the dust of the roads. And long after their holiday is over, when at night they sleep in the filthy rooms they call home, the coarse laughter and drunken yells of the men and women in the street die away in their ears as they fall asleep, and in their dreams they go back to the long nursery where they slept, each in his little scarlet bed, and they hear again the sleepy cooing of the wood pigeons and the soft whisper of the pines, and know the music of God's lullaby.

As we put before the public this short account of the aims of the Farm Colony we cannot but earnestly plead for help. Last year 3000 applications were refused. Every one of them would have been eligible if there had been means or room to take them. The report of the work shows the measure of success achieved that enables us to speak with a measure of confidence of the future. The medical officer there makes most hopeful statements, and the record warrants the belief that the system adopted has produced a larger proportion of cures than even the most sanguine expectations would have warranted.

The letters published in the report from the patients that have left are a proof of the way in which the women regard the Colony, and the intense love they have for those who have befriended them there. Not long ago a woman came to Duxhurst in a pitiable condition; she had been persuaded to leave home and put herself under restraint there by another woman who had been cured at Duxhurst. Such instances are not rare, for none speak so warmly of the work as the patients themselves, and their praise is more valued than any other. That there are failures is undoubted. Human hearts and human lives are not dealt with in masses; one by one they have to be diagnosed, treated, cared for and loved, and one by one brought to the only Physician who is able to effect a lasting cure. No methods would be availing, no treatment successful, unless the aim of the whole work were constantly kept before the women—that they may be brought to know Him who "seeks until He finds."

The Church Congress.

THE Church Congress, held last week at Bradford, had an air of animation about it; and, as may well be supposed, much was said on the present anxiety resulting from lawlessness in the Church. The proceedings should prove of service as showing the trend of opinion, or at least the attitude of Church leaders towards many questions that loom on the ecclesiastical horizon. On the opening day, Tuesday, some good things were said, also some things which plainly showed a disposition to compromise with Ritualism. The Archbishop of York, in a sermon, apologised for variety of sentiment in the Church, and in this he saw little to deplore. Rather, he dreaded the accentuation of differences by the formation of rival societies, and the creation of antagonism where there ought to be nothing beyond friendly discussion. That these differences should involve fundamental truths, and amount to a substitution of Popish dogmas for Gospel truths, did not seem to trouble the speaker, although he delivered himself strongly against Romanism. In fact, he declared that "the deep-seated antipathy to Romanism, which is happily the characteristic of the great majority of the people of England, lies at the root of the present excitement."

Sermons were also preached by the Bishops of Glasgow and Derry. The former regretted that, through so little work having of late years been entrusted to them, the laity of the Church of England had not sufficiently realised their priestliness and exercised their proper ministry of active service. The latter, in an eloquent passage, said: "Never was the consciousness of wrong, of a world out of joint and a Church born to set it right, more heavy, and founded upon broader surveys than to-day. They felt as a burden—did they?—

to the verge of the 20th century, the wrangling of Christendom over the spoils of a swooning power, concerning which it was only certain that they belonged, equally and impartially, to none of us; and the huge and ruinous armaments which could only be justified by the natural distrust of Christians for their fellow Christians; and the frightful statistics of drunkenness and vice; and the avowed immorality of much that takes rank as literature; and the isolation of classes; and those cruel and desolating wars of capital and labour called strikes; and the visible increase of gambling, which was but one phase of the vulgar greed of all classes to grow rich by all means; and the flaunting of tasteless and joyless ostentation in the face of gaunt and hopeless indigence; and the lapse of tens of thousands of baptised souls from all worship of God, all consciousness of a Father's benediction."

The Bishop of Ripon, in his presidential address, enlarged upon the opportunities, needs, and characteristics of the age. Speaking of dissensions in the Church, he made a powerful appeal to his brethren: Is it wise, I would ask, does it betoken a loyal spirit, may it not justly awaken fear and annoyance, when the descriptive terms used by our Church are deliberately set aside and the terms of other Churches are ostentatiously employed? I need not enter on examples. These are but little things, but they may serve to mark the difference between good sense and recklessness, between intolerance and charity, between

SELF LOVE AND A DUTIFUL SPIRIT.

When the use of such phrases tends to create doubt and discord, is it a great thing to ask that they should be laid aside in the interests of the weightier matters—judgment, mercy, and love of God? When they are recognised as provocative of discord their disuse is but a small price to pay for the restoration of harmony, and with it the working vigour of the Church. All things which tend to hinder that harmony should surely be set aside, for we live at a time in which the Church is growing into clearer consciousness of her own calling, and the world is waiting for her message.

And when we contemplate the vast array of Christian forces which is at work at the present hour in the United Kingdom, we shall realise what might be accomplished were all these forces united in common effort for good, for—and I am indebted for my approximate figures to the kind response of leading men of other communions—there is at work in the United Kingdom to-day a body of ministers of religion greater by some 10,000 than the army which fought at Agincourt, and a multitude of Christian workers equal to the dwellers in Paris. There are no fewer than 40,000 Christian ministers, and little short of 2,000,000 of lay workers of all sorts—i.e., there is one minister for every 1,000 of the population, and one Christian worker for every 20. This is the Christian dynamic of our country. Who does not wish that, fraternal love prevailing, this great army could be more economically distributed to meet the needs of the world, that so the message for which men are crying out might be more clearly heard among the nations of the earth?

The "Mutual Relations of Clergy and Laity" was a somewhat thorny subject. Dr. Jessopp, of Scarning, who read the first paper, outlined the simplicity of things in the apostolic age. It would seem, he said, that there were two orders of officials who had the main duties of regulating public worship and ministering to the laity or unofficial members of the community. They were, first, the deacons, who were the oldest order of Christian ministry, and, second, the elders, who were otherwise styled bishops. Over these were the apostles, who had known Christ after the flesh, and to whom a special commission was, doubtless, granted. When the apostles died off, the deacons and elders were left alone, equals in rank, and each having an equal right to be heard. The laity bore their part in the government and management of the churches, and, in the words of Hilary, in the fourth century, "All taught and baptized on whatever days and seasons occasion required, that the people might grow and multiply." In the beginning, moreover, it was permitted to all to preach the Gospel and to explain the Scriptures; but in course of time, apparently owing to apathy on the part of the laity, discipline grew lax, whereupon Ignatius of Antioch produced his plan of government, in which monarchy succeeded democracy. Even then, however, the laity retained

THE RIGHT OF ELECTING BISHOPS.

As the centuries passed the clergy gained in influence and the laity receded; and as illustrating this Dr. Jessopp referred to church architecture, whereby the Holy Table was protected from the too near approach of the laity by those beautiful chancel screens which are the delight and admiration of all lovers of art.

Chancellor Dibdin discussed the position of the laity at the present time, speaking of the recognition of the right of the people to a real voice in ecclesiastical affairs as a most urgent subject of reform. Mr. Justice Grantham followed. In his view the laity have exactly the same right in the Church as the clergy. Here the principle of mutuality comes in. The clergy owe a duty to their parishioners, and the latter in return owe a duty to their clergyman. The living was too often thought a gift. The term was misleading. It was a reward or payment for services to be continually rendered, and in return for that reward he owed a distinct and constant duty to the whole of his parishioners, and that duty was as much an obligation on him during the week in daily intercourse with his parishioners as it was on the Sunday in his church. The Archbishop of Canterbury was unable to accept Dr. Jessopp's reading of history; but instead of controverting in detail, he applied to episcopal authority the injunction "Obey them that have the rule over you!" Regarding present troubles in the Church, he said the bishops must, in some way or other, put a stop to a great deal of the law-breaking. He added—"Let the evil be remedied as quietly as possible, by the influence of those in charge of the dioceses."

"Sunday Observance" was dealt with by Archdeacon Sinclair and Archdeacon Diggle. The latter, after speaking on social follies in their relation to the Lord's Day, said: "It is worse than useless—it is wicked—to ignore the appalling fact that not more than one-fourth of the population attend the Lord's house for any portion of Sunday. He was sure that one cause, among many, was the character of the Sunday services—their length, monotonousness, the intricacy of music, the slovenliness of reading—in a word, the general professionalism of the whole proceeding. To get free of deadening tradition, to give more simplicity, reverence, and reality, more beauty, brevity, brightness, and warmth to their services was the first step towards improvement."

The Church and Imperial Policy was the subject of papers and debate on Wednesday morning. The Bishop of Hereford insisted on the right and duty of the Church and the clergy to take part in political affairs. He held that Britain's expansion, as if by a natural process, had shown that it was a part of our national or Imperial destiny to be the great carriers of trade and of European influences to every ocean shore, to occupy and civilise the waste places of savage lands, to rule subject races, and to carry the principles of constitutional freedom wherever we go, as the one true basis of all progressive life. Should we then work out this mission as servants of God or as servants of Mammon?

Papers having been read by Bishop Barry and Professor Jebb, M.P., the Bishop-Designate of Calcutta (Dr. Welldon) made a timely deliverance. It might, he said, be safely affirmed that wherever there was a country which was it was Roman Catholic; that wherever there was a people which was progressive and Imperial it was Protestant. It was impossible in such a connection to abstain from reference to the downfall of the Spanish Empire. Spain had ever been the faithful daughter of the Roman Catholic Church, and she was an example of what nations had to expect when they subjected themselves to the tyranny which this country once for all threw off at the Reformation. No decadent or dying nation in the world was Protestant. The future of the world belonged to the non-Roman Catholic nations and pre-eminently to Great Britain.

The British Empire embraced some 400 millions—one-sixth, or perhaps one-fifth, of the whole habitable globe. It was not a dead or dying Empire. It was not easy to set a limit either to the English language or English race. The unique greatness of the British Empire dated from the Reformation. The Reformation may or may not have been a movement of religious truth—it was a movement of Imperial energy; and whoever disparaged the Reformation might be a good theologian—he was not a good patriot. The British Empire had, to a large extent, been sustained by force of arms; but it rested also on law; and the native races in India were becoming more and more acquiescent in our suzerainty by the justice and equity of our legal administration. There was something which had weight above all other things in human affairs, and that was character. That was the province of religion; that was the sphere of the Church.

Other speakers included Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who remarked that the only right and title of the Church to respect and consideration was its Protestant character, and in the open Bible, which was the secret of England's greatness; and Principal Handley Moule, who referred to the opium traffic, contending that in that matter our dealings with China were morally wrong and could not be politically right.

The Dean of Ely read a paper dealing with the health-right of workers in dangerous trades. He was followed by Mr. George Hawkins, a workingmen's representative, who spoke of the moral and religious responsibilities of the employer, the landlord, the director, and the shareholder. Mr. Harwood, M.P., also read a paper on labour conditions. Earl Grey dwelt on co-operation, the prospects of which were discussed by the Dean of Durham.

In the evening the Archbishop of Canterbury and others addressed a meeting "for men only," over four thousand being present. At another gathering was the topic, the speakers being Sir Walter Parratt and Canon Joy, of Maidstone. The latter laid it down that for village, town, and cathedral alike, the ideal service was that, and that only, which was most worshipful. The ideal music should be that, and only that, which the choir was capable of singing well, and that in which the congregation was capable of taking an intelligent part. Just as for the music of the village the ideal would naturally be simplicity, so for the music of the town the idea would naturally be collectivity—"as the sound of many waters"—congregational.

The Unrest of the Age was the subject of papers read on Thursday morning. Professor Gwatkin came first. He found history to be repeating itself in this age of change. It was for ministers of the Gospel to point men steadily from trifles to the decisive question—to show the people that faith was neither reason nor feeling, but included both in a personal relation to Christ which called for all the powers of the whole man. The Bishop of Manchester spoke of the unrest as seen in the world of intellect, dealing with the limitations of materialism and agnosticism. The only satisfying answer to the inquiry for religious truth was found in the declaration of our Lord, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Canon Bonney found a cause of the prevalent unrest in the flood of new ideas which had come in during the past seventy years. Social changes had brought about impulsiveness, and a sense of proportion with sobriety of judgment was rendered almost impossible. As for the clergy, the great increase of gatherings and functions had cut their time to shreds, and promoted restlessness in their ranks. Professor Lewis Campbell held that Christian grace is not bound by ecclesiastical traditions, nor the cause of God served by exclusivism.

In the afternoon papers were read on "Biblical Criticism and the Results of Recent Research," Professor Armitage Robinson and Principal Robertson rendering a good account of the condition of inquiry into literary phenomena presented by the Gospel of Luke and the Book of the Acts. Professor Lock dealt with the Epistles in a similar manner. It having been resolved that the Congress should meet in London next year, there was some discussion on ways in which its methods could be improved and its usefulness advanced.

On Friday, among papers on the message of the Church to the heart of man was one by Rev. Dr. Moule, who dealt with the reading of Scripture for spiritual illumination and practical guidance. Opening his Bible he definitely recollected that whatever else it was it was this—

GOD'S ORACLE FOR MAN.

It was literature indeed; it gave material for endless mental inquiry, linguistic, historical, and other. It was all along human, being given to man through not only human pens but human hearts. But then it was God's oracle in a sense quite unique among written things. Then he recollected that the supernatural message could work fully on him only under supernatural conditions. To grasp the eternal truths, to feel the Divine facts, to see, to know, indeed, he needed the special work of the Holy Spirit of promise. For genuine Bible study it was all-important, as a rule, to be "hunting for something," and he indicated various lines of inquiry which might prove helpful.

Friday afternoon was given up to foreign mission study, the Bishop of Newcastle speaking on the watchword of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union—"The Evangelisation of the World in this Generation." The Dean of Windsor dwelt on the revival of the missionary spirit. Though statistics might be misleading, yet he understood that in at least one-fourth of the parishes of England no missionary association existed. Christian parents might do much for the cause by instilling in their children an interest in missionary efforts. Every parish clergyman should make it part of his ordinary work to instruct the people in the history, progress, and growth of missions.

Two United Christian Conferences were also held during the Congress week. The Dean of Ripon presided over the first, at which addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Glover, W. L. Watkinson, and Dr. Horton, and Dean Farrar. The second was devoted to the discussion of "Paths Leading to Union." Archdeacon Wilson occupied the chair, and among those who spoke were Professor Davison, Mr. George Harwood, M.P., Dr. Duff, and Rev. S. Whitehead. Mr. Harwood remarked that the churches were going to be divided into two great sections — one consisting of those who believed that the soul could have direct access to God, and another who believed that some class of men were required as intermediaries.

Young Men's Camp Work.—Writing from 207, Churchill-road, Handsworth, Birmingham, Mr. S. Chase says: "The work has progressed well this season. Ten 'Saturday to Monday' camps have already been held in Warwickshire and the adjoining counties, and two more are still to be held. The work is found to be stimulative to the young men, and one is already working for the Master in Africa."

Brussels.—The Continental Committee of the Free Church of Scotland have resolved to commence services in Brussels in October, and have appointed Rev. Francis Gordon, of Vienna, to conduct them during the coming winter. It is hoped that a hearty Evangelical congregation may be speedily formed, and that many English-speaking residents will warmly sympathise with this effort for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

The Baptist Union.

THE Autumn Assembly of the Baptist Union was held last week at Nottingham, and was largely attended by ministers and delegates. A hearty welcome to the city was extended by the Mayor, and kind words were spoken by representatives of other denominations at a public meeting prior to the opening of the business sessions.

Tuesday morning was set apart for a meeting on foreign missions, and farewell was said to ten missionaries and their wives proceeding to various parts of the great harvest field. Mr. W. R. Rickett, treasurer of the society, occupied the chair, and referring to the meetings held at Nottingham during the centenary celebration, said that two things were then resolved upon: first, to raise a fund of £100,000, which was more than accomplished, the fund standing at £117,000 when closed; and second, to raise the yearly income of the society to £100,000, and upon that efforts are now being concentrated.

Brief addresses and testimonies were given by the outgoing missionaries, to whom Dr. Richard Glover spoke some stimulating words in a valedictory address. Among other things he said—Fitness is ordination, and He has laid necessity upon you and forced you forward. Grace carries with it apostleship, and apostleship grace. The two always go together. You lack the power of minor miracles, but the power of major miracles is with you, the power of a great light, of a salvation experienced, of the message of the Crucified One, of the indwelling Spirit, of the Cross, always accessible; these things are omnipotent for the work you have to do to-day.

"Preach, saying the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." That is the supreme work. The keenest sorrows are the sorrows of the soul, and the deepest need of man is his need of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. You must put the first need first, and you must put the supreme emphasis upon it. Men cannot be satisfied with stale testimony or with bare formulæ. Souls cannot be fed with manna that fell from heaven yesterday. You have to read truth to-day, and preach to-day's Gospel. You have to preach, not another's word—stale theologies—but the living voice of a loving Christ. It is a great task. It is not easy to say God is near you, Christ is near you, a cross from which there flows mercy and deliverance, "the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."

The speaker praised God for the success achieved during the past century. Who can measure the joy that has come to God by the souls that have been won to Him through the missionary work? When you write the name of Christ on the hearts of men you write with an iron pen in letters of lead on the rock for ever. You know not what you do. There is no failure. Goodness will have its charm, and grace find its victories, and you from your radiant home on high will look down and bless God for a boundless blessing.

Mr. Alfred Thomas, M.P., presided over another missionary gathering, at which Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool, spoke some hearty words. On Wednesday the presidential address was delivered by Rev. Samuel Vincent, whose subject was "The Christian Life." The utterance was timely in tone, and ended with the practical question, "How can our collective Christian life best express itself?" First of all, Mr. Vincent was for asking Christ to lead them forward into the new century. Having urged church members to renewed consecration, he spoke a word of warning against prevalent errors and follies. "New Testament ideals, simplicity of worship and ritual, and the equality of all believers as priests to God, are truths that need reaffirming. 'Tis largely that spirit which makes us foremost amongst the living nations, and the most beneficent to subject peoples. 'Tis this spirit which makes us and our kinsmen the best evangelists to dying nations, that they, too, may live. Probably we Free Churchmen number far more than half the nation. Men sneer at our conscience, but it guides the nation more than it knows.

"We shall save this land both from the priest and the demagogue by the Faith of our Fathers, and saving this land we shall help the whole world. Never since William of Orange fought Philip of Spain was there a more critical time than now for the religious future of the race. If, as Baptists, we are wise, the changing centuries may aid us. It is the time for great enterprise. Birthdays and New Year's days, and the hours when men step from one century to another are not the illusions fools think them. The greater hours especially show time as it is, and the soul is brought suddenly face to face with an infinite mystery which awes and arrests it, and gives hints of the illimitable vastness of her destiny as she gazes into what is freshly discovered to her, but all unexplored. Anyone of us may do much if God please and we believe. And what may we not do all together, if we but occupy

> The seat to faith assigned,
> Where ask is have and seek is find,
> Where knock is open wide?

At the business sessions some important business was transacted. First came a hearty acknowledgment of the distinguished services rendered by Dr. Booth, for many years secretary of the Union. Then, in consequence of Dr. Booth's retirement through bodily weakness, a successor was appointed in the person of Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., of Norwich, a minister held in high esteem throughout the denomination, and specially commended to sympathetic support owing to his warm espousal of the cause of church extension. In accepting the post Mr. Shakespeare said: "I will give myself to the work with all my heart, and with all the enthusiasm of which I am capable." Striking sermons were preached in connection with the assembly by Revs. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton; B. J. Gibbon, of Bloomsbury; and Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A.

North London Convention.

THE parish of St. Peter's, Islington, has had many helpful gatherings and seasons of blessing, but the convention of last week may be said to have exceeded all. It was preceded by a daily prayer meeting for three weeks. Many clergy and ministers, both of the neighbourhood and elsewhere, attended, and one of the most striking incidents was the frank, manly testimony of the Vicar of St. Matthew's, Marylebone, who, whilst a strong High Churchman, was able to testify to the way in which God had swept away all sectarian barriers from his soul.

Conviction of sin was the leading point of all the early speakers—Revs. E. W. Moore, J. A. Bevan, W. Darlow Sarjeant, and G. H. C. Macgregor. Many were broken down, and few who heard the burning words are likely to forget them. Mr. Moore began by showing, from the story of the widow's pot of oil, how the secret of success lay behind a closed door. Mr. Darlow Sarjeant traced from the Book of Joshua the soul's journey to Canaan and the hindrances that meet it in the way, dwelling specially on the sin of Achan. Mr. Macgregor spoke with great power of the necessity of soul health and the fire of God to refine.

The closing days brought joy to many hearts. While the deep conviction continued God sent messages of healing and comfort from the lips of Revs. G. C. Grubb and E. L. Hamilton. Solemn heart-searching messages they were.

We praise God that so many workers have been blessed. A medical man has gone off with a supply of hymn-books so as to start meetings for the deepening of spiritual life in his mission, and in our own church (St. Peter's) a weekly holiness meeting will be arranged for Thursdays at 8 p.m., as one of the direct results of the convention. Testimonies are coming in from many parts as to blessing to individual souls. F. T. S.

A Friend's Advice.

Do not murmur or complain,
God will put things right again!

Do not fret and grumble so,
Christ has trod the way you go!

If your heart is cold and sad,
Think of those past joys you've had!

If you're tempted sharp to speak,
Think of Christ, the low and meek!

Weary feet on dusty way
Soon will tread the streets of day!

Clouds may gather, rain may fall;
God will guide you safe through all!

Safe through all! the other side
Will bring the light of eventide!

Work for Hop-pickers.

HAMPSHIRE.

FOLLOWING the custom of the past thirty-six years the friends of the Hampshire Hop-pickers' Mission, founded by the late Rev. Samuel Chinn, and now carried on by his daughter, have worked hard and heartily for the well-being of thousands of hoppers during September. The staff comprised twenty experienced workers, six of whom are London City Missionaries. The operations were carried on from seven centres within a radius of twenty miles, viz., Alton, Selbourne, Holybourne, Bentley, Binsted, Wooldham, and Wyck, spacious tents being erected in each place excepting the two first-named. There are places of rest, refuge, and refreshment, and the pickers prove their estimation of them by attending in their hundreds night after night. Visitation of people in the gardens and in their encampments; meetings for prayer, preaching of the Gospel, and praise; open-air services, magic-lantern exhibitions, occasional tea meetings, etc., have been conducted with much encouragement. Several determined to lead a purer, nobler life; others signed the total abstinence pledge, while not a few expressed themselves as being benefited through the efforts put forth.

Thousands of Christian booklets, tracts, illustrated texts, Scripture portions were distributed. Every day in each of the tents tea was served gratuitously to all comers, and the pickers were not slow to evince their gratitude. By this means many were kept from spending their pence and time in the village beer stores. Owing to the scarcity of hops, and the full time put in by the pickers, the season has been exceptionally short, and the work rendered more difficult. But splendid service has been rendered notwithstanding.

Homerton, E. JOSEPH N. GOAD, L.C.M.

HEREFORD AND WORCESTER.

"We had a miserable day last Sunday, sir—we had nothing to read. Thank you, sir, it is very kind of you to come to us." "Here you are, then; we were talking about you." "Didn't you come last year?" Such were the greetings that met Mr. John Jones and myself as we passed from hopyard to hopyard during the season just finished,

As we have gone for sixteen years, we are well known to many of the pickers and growers. This year, in a walk of 300 miles, we visited 163 farms, reaching over 14,000 persons. Each morning saw us start with a heavy load of books on our backs, liberally sent by kind helpers, and thankfully received by the strangers and home pickers. Going from crib to crib in the intense heat proved real toil, but the Master preserved us from all harm. We found Christians coming out from Hereford and other towns to preach to the people on Sundays, but did not meet with anyone else distributing the Gospel in the week.

"Don't forget the pole-puller, sir," said one of the bin-men. We had given away all our larger papers, and saw he was disappointed. Remembering we had a Testament in our pocket, we gave it to him. "Now put my name in." We obeyed, and at his request added, "From the hopyards, 1898." Putting it in his pocket, he said, "That will go back with me to the Potteries."

Where we could we sang or spoke a word to the whole company as they stood picking, and in every case had good attention and many a hearty "Thank you" from among the hops. Mr. J. Staniford, of Hawridge, Berkhamsted, was with us during the heaviest part of the work.

WILLIAM LUFF.

WEST FARLEIGH, KENT.

At West Farleigh, near Maidstone, where there are six camps of hop-pickers, Rev. T. W. Embleton Thomas, vicar, has a staff of missionaries from the Church of England Hop-pickers' Association and the Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., whilst of the two ladies sent under Canon Carter's scheme for his parish, he is particularly fortunate in having one who is a trained nurse. She had only been in the parish a few hours when she was called upon to nurse a female hop-picker, who had arrived before picking commenced and had slept in the open, and had developed a serious attack of bronchitis. Then two ladies carry on the "West Farleigh Hop-pickers' Club," open every evening for adults, and on Sundays for children. Each evening an open-air service is held in one of the encampments, and on Sunday there are services morning and evening. Illustrated tracts and magazines are much in request, and lantern services are much liked. There is reason to believe that God's blessing is on these efforts, for which the prayers and praises of sympathisers are asked.

Work in West London.

BEING invited by my friend, Mr. Charles Cook, I addressed his Hyde Park Hall workers on Saturday evening, at a "parlour meeting" for praise, prayer, and preparation for the twenty-fourth winter campaign in the Metropolitan Theatre, Edgware-road. A large body of workers assembled, and a season of true fellowship was enjoyed.

"Opening night" at the Metropolitan was a great occasion. The choir, including the Browning Quartette, crowded the stage, and the congregation crowded the theatre. So far as could be seen every one of the 3000 sittings was filled, and by an audience well-dressed, well-behaved, and very responsive. Mr. Cook conducted the service throughout. The choir sang the Gospel with fervour and force, and very sweetly. The Browning Quartette rendered three pieces, all about Christ and heaven, with much acceptance and quite unaccompanied. Mr. Cook gave the opening address from John i. 29, the subject on the programmes being "Christ! Absolutely necessary, absolutely sufficient, and absolutely accessible." The Word was with power.

Hundreds remained to the after service, coming into the area from all parts of the building. Inquirers were dealt with, and several confessed definite conversion to Christ. After twenty-four years the work is wondrously fresh and forceful, and we pray for Chas. Cook and his devoted band another "year of Jehovah's favour."

Obituary.

REV. E. DEAS, WEST AFRICA.

News has just reached home of the death, on August 21, at Ikorana, West Africa, of Rev. E. Deas, who went out to the West Coast seven years ago in connection with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. A man beloved and respected, his death at the early age of thirty-eight causes a great loss to the Mission.

MR. THOMAS GEE.

The death of Mr. Thomas Gee, who passed away on September 28, removes a familiar figure from Welsh life. He was born in 1815. Educated at Denbigh and at the Grove School, Wrexham, he early attracted attention by his force of character. It was suggested that he should take orders, but Mr. Gee decided to enter his father's office. From early youth, however, he had deep religious convictions, and became a member and was ultimately ordained a minister of the Calvinistic Methodist body, yet notwithstanding this he regarded himself as a layman. He had always taken an active and prominent part in religious work.

During the week prior to his death Mr. Gee took a prominent part in a temperance demonstration held at Denbigh and presided at one of the public meetings, and he had been elected president of the North Wales Temperance Association for the ensuing year.

It was as the editor and proprietor of the Baner that Mr. Gee's name was known and his influence felt throughout the Principality. The sale of his goods a few years ago owing to his refusal to pay tithe, was the repetition of a similar event in his life forty years before.

Inverness.—Mr. Alex. Fraser, divinity student, whose labours were so much owned in Campbeltown during the spring of last year, has been since April last in charge of Queen-street Free Church, Inverness, in the absence of Rev. Dr. McDonald. Nearing the close of his engagement (writes a correspondent), interest in Divine things was manifested by anxious ones calling on him. So much was this the case that Mr. Fraser agreed to conduct a special mission for a week in the church. The results exceeded the highest expectations. The congregations were so large, the interest so deep, and the influence so widespread, that a second week was entered on, and at time of writing we are in midst of a blessed work.

Our Irish Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

DURING the past week the Presbyterian Conference in Belfast attracted widespread attention. In Belfast, with a population of between three and four hundred thousand persons, fully a third are Presbyterians, while in the adjoining counties of Antrim and Down half the people belong to the same Church. The Conference was the second of the kind in Ireland, the first having taken place about two years ago. Seventeen ladies and gentlemen placed their services as speakers at the disposal of the conference, and these hailed in almost equal numbers from England, Ireland, and Scotland. Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., in speaking on "The Duty of the Church in Training Citizens," urged Christian people to take their proper share in public work, and not leave the nation to be governed by the irreligious portion of the population. In dwelling on the Ritualistic movement, Professor Lindsay urged that it should not be met merely by negative criticism.

To mention even the titles of all the subjects discussed at the Conference would unduly lengthen this letter, but I cannot omit referring to the paper by Professor Leebody, D.Sc., of Londonderry, on "Science and Belief in Immortality." Dr. Leebody is well known as one of the most eminent scientists of the day, and his statements are, therefore, worthy of the deepest respect. In discussing this question, on which he said no light could be thrown by weighing, measuring, or chemical reactions, he stated that even supposing Darwin's theory with regard to the origin of man to be correct, it left the subject of man's immortality untouched, and that Darwin himself believed in a future life. The Conference, which was organised by Rev. Jno. Irwin, of Holywood, and which lasted two days, was, in spite of unfavourable weather, largely attended.

It is noteworthy that Ireland has not been in a quieter or more peaceable condition than it is at present for perhaps a century. This may be due to several causes, among others the excellence of the harvest. An important cause, I think, will be found in the reduction of rents and the security of tenure afforded to the farmers by the Land Acts. People who used to be almost revolutionaries have got something to conserve and are becoming peaceable and law-abiding citizens. Moreover the country is opening as it was never opened before to the preaching of the Gospel in the open air, so that there is scarcely a town in the South and West where the evangelist cannot stand up in the fair or market and speak to attentive audiences.

The Methodists are at present taking several new departures. Dr. Booth, of Cork, for whose maintenance the Methodist Christian Endeavourers of Ireland have made themselves responsible, is going out as a medical missionary to Hankow. Hitherto the subscriptions raised for foreign missions by Irish Methodists, amounting to over £4000 a year, were administered through the Methodist Missionary Society in London, and many are pleased that Ireland should be more directly represented in the foreign field. Another important step is to set apart a special missionary to Sunday schools.

A meeting to bid farewell to twenty-eight missionaries going out under the auspices of the C.M.S. was held last week in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, and was largely attended. A similar meeting to bid farewell to five missionaries was held on Friday evening in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Belfast. The interest in foreign mission work is evidently growing in all the churches. This seems to prove that the spiritual life of the Christians of Ireland is deepening.

Zionist Demonstration.—A Jewish meeting, attended by 5000 persons, was held in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Monday evening, on the occasion of offering a welcome to Dr. Theodor Herzl, Dr. M. Gaster, chief of the Sephardic community, presiding. The chairman said that where Jewish hopes existed the name of Dr. Herzl was venerated and loved. Dr. Herzl, who met with a cordial reception, entered into a long defence of the Zionist movement, and said that those who did not understand their object treated it with sarcasm. What the Jews wanted was a land of peace and quietness of their own. There would be no necessity for an Aliens' Bill then. The following resolution was carried: "That this mass meeting of Jews rejoices at the success which has hitherto attended the Zionist movement, and heartily pledges itself to support it."

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Great Assembly Hall.

MR. WALTER NOTMAN, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded another month's work in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The interest has been fully maintained in connection with the services. Mr. Notman is a great favourite, and having the ability of both the pastor and evangelist in one, he is much blessed to believers as well as to those who are outside the fold. On Sunday, September 26, the Harvest Festival was held, when, both morning and evening, enormous congregations gathered. At night the gates had to be closed, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Mr. Notman gave an exceedingly powerful address, and at the close many remained behind to be prayed with. His month's mission terminated on Wednesday week, when a large number gathered to bid the evangelist good-bye and God-speed in his future work for the Master.

The Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse.

MR. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelisation Society, completed nine weeks of earnest Gospel work on Sunday evening last. The Castle district is anything but virgin soil for the evangelist. For a quarter of a century it has been a centre of aggressive work under the direction of Dr. Barnardo. Notwithstanding this, and the excessive heat that has prevailed during the mission, the Gospel, faithfully and tenderly preached by Mr. Collins, has drawn its thousands weekly, and signs of true revival have accompanied the preaching.

All departments of the Castle work seem to have felt the vivifying influence of the man and his message. In the open-air meetings this has been most noticeable. The weekly prayer-meeting hour has been felt to be all too short. Interesting cases of individual restoration and conversion have to be recorded, some of them being from the P.S.A. Mr. Collins's short Gospel talks to the men of that meeting left nothing to be desired. The same may be said of his short addresses to the young folk from Dr. Barnardo's Homes at the Sunday morning services. The preacher was privileged to speak to the children in the Homes themselves on week-nights, with, we believe, blessed and lasting results. To God be the glory. Mr. Dunn is the preacher for October. W. R. N.

The Tent at Tottenham.

A WONDERFUL week of blessing must be recorded to the praise of God. Thursday was a full day. As many as forty prayer-meetings took place simultaneously throughout the district at ten o'clock in the morning, which proved a time of great refreshing to many. At the afternoon meeting the speakers were Mr. R. C. Morgan, Dr. McKilliam, and Mr. McVicar, whose words were with much power and blessing. An ample tea, provided by the friends in the neighbourhood, was partaken of, followed by the evening meeting, addressed by several evangelists. The building was crowded in every part, although the rain fell in torrents, testing the qualities of the large tent to resist the same. Almost every day two meetings have been held, souls confessing Christ each night as their newly-found Saviour.

On Sunday last Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. William Grove spoke at a well-attended meeting for men only at eleven o'clock, very many coming out at the end of the meeting seeking the Saviour. The afternoon meeting was followed by a blessed service in the evening, commencing half-an-hour before the advertised time. The enlarged tent was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many hearts melted to see the numbers coming right out seeking Christ. In one case a young woman and an old lady came to the front. The young woman gave herself to the Saviour, and at the same time saying, "And my mother also. It is almost too much for her." On being asked, the dear old lady of seventy-five said, "Yes, I do as best I can—give myself to Him and trust Him to save me." The daughter led the tottering, but now happy mother, home rejoicing.

There is to be a united Gospel temperance rally to-day (Thursday) at 7.30. Will Christians please pray for guidance in the work? All friends who can assist in the singing will be heartily welcomed. A. G.

Trips to the Villages.

A LARGE and interesting meeting was held on Saturday evening at Fetter-lane Chapel, E.C., to hear reports on evangelisation throughout the summer months by a band of Christian young men, who devote their Saturday afternoons to this good work. Three years ago Mr. Charles Lewis, a young man connected with this chapel, conceived the idea of going himself and inviting his companions who loved the Lord to accompany him on cycle trips to villages within a radius of twenty miles around London. From small beginnings the band grew to some forty, and for the last two years they have divided themselves into two companies, one taking the south and the other the north of the Thames.

Their mode of work has been to assemble at a given point and ride to the place decided upon. Arrived at the village, the workers scatter themselves in all directions, with tracts and booklets, visiting every house, high and low, in many cases coming into contact with people. At length the meeting is held at some well-known point in the village. After spending an hour in this way, the visitors find a place for tea, and enjoy happy social intercourse, engaging afterwards in earnest prayer about their work. They report as many as 500 at some of their meetings, and also the blessed experience of sinners accepting the Saviour on the spot.

In some cases they have been received by the people with open arms, but other experiences were of the bitterest hostility. Several vicars and other ministers have welcomed them, and thrown open their halls for their services. The workers reported that many villages are sunk in ignorance and superstition. A. D.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Kendal.

MR. JOSIAH NIX has concluded a ten days' mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Kendal, with most gratifying results. A large number has passed through the inquiry room, and a hundred temperance pledges have been taken. The attendance was very large at all the services. The people were attracted by the missioner's clear presentation of the Gospel, the fervour of his utterance, his delightful naturalness, and his buoyant hopefulness. God, through him, has given a rich blessing to all the churches. J. D.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. Maccoll, of the Glasgow Open-Air Mission, has been conducting a series of missions with tokens of blessing in various parts of the Highlands of Scotland.

Mr. Thos. Payne, assisted by various speakers, has concluded a week's convention at the Assembly Hall, Junction-road, Holloway, N., for the deepening of spiritual life. It was a time of great blessing and refreshing to many.

Mr. John Weedon, writing from Dunsden, near Reading, says: We have closed eleven weeks' tent work in connection with Reading and District Free Church Federation. God has greatly blessed the effort. The sevices have been well attended.

Mr. J. Westwood, formerly of the Navvy Mission, has concluded six days of Gospel services in the Gay-street Evangelical Mission of Love, Liverpool. At the close of the addresses on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, several people remained behind to seek salvation. Mr. Westwood is a man of faith and prayer, a lover of open-air work, and a good visitor. W.

We have to thank God, says a correspondent, for the visit of his servant, Richard Spragg, to Bexley Heath. A month's services in tent and hall, and daily visitation of the homes in the neighbourhood, have been fruitful of much blessing. Christian parents are rejoicing over the conversion of their children, and many others have been brought to Christ. The evangelist has been specially used of God to the conversion of boys.

EVANGELISTS ENGAGEMENTS.

Serjeant Pullinger, Soldiers' Home, Winchester, Sunday, Oct. 9.

Mr. John Weedon at Twyford, Berks, Oct. 1 to 14; Swinton, Manchester, Oct. 15 to Nov. 1; Midhurst, Sussex, Nov. 5 to 26; Guisboro', Yorks, Nov. 27 to Dec. 12.

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

"Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend."

THE usual gathering at Aldersgate-street on Monday last, led by Mr. R. C. Morgan, was most inspiriting.

The brief space from twelve o'clock till one proved, indeed, all too short for the delightful testimonies of soul saving work in all parts of the world. Rev. Thomas Hancocks, of Ramsgate, gave a short Bible-reading, showing the parallel between the experience of Elisha seeking a double, or "heir's" portion, of Elijah's spirit, and then acting in the belief of receiving it, and that of Paul, who sought not to preach with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and in that power went forth in simple faith to deal with the sins and sorrows of magnificent Corinth.

Mr. Hermann Harris gave a breezy address on some curious experiences in North Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Harris had secured premises which were made a religious literature depôt by day and a mission hall by night. The French soldiery were tackled, especially a battalion of "hard cases," comprised entirely of ex-criminals. By means of a bicycle many villages had been reached. The native Moslems, gathered in the market places, gladly listened to the Bible-reading while a surly schoolmaster opponent was conciliated by a polite request to read a passage from James.

Mr. Dunn gave some interesting particulars of a mission recently held in Dundee, which had greatly stirred the jute city. Large numbers had attended the meetings and professed salvation. Similar manifestations of Divine presence were being looked for at the present mission in the "Edinburgh Castle," in East London.

A blessed work among Irish Romanists was also spoke of, the latest reports of the tent work at Bruce-grove noted with interest, and then Mr. R. C. Morgan closed by commending in prayer the works referred to, all missionaries in any difficulty resulting from the political excitement in China, and a new undertaking by Mrs. Annie Harding on behalf of London young women.

THE BAROTSI MISSION.

At the noon prayer-meeting on Wednesday last Mr. Coillard, director of the Mission, gave a brief sketch of the Lord's work in the valley of the Upper Zambesi. In a sympathetic address he described how remarkable blessing had attended the preaching of the Gospel in Barotsiland—a country as large as France, and whose people are described as living in a state of utter degradation.

Mr. Coillard, referring to his recent touring experiences on behalf of the work, both on the Continent and in Great Britain, aptly remarked that the French are sometimes a little backward in supporting the work on the plea of its being carried on within the British Empire; and the English conclude that it is foreign since the workers are French. A cordial feeling of agreement was manifest when Mr. Coillard said we must live above national prejudice, etc., in the Lord's work.

Many have been the afflictions of the mission—the climate, the cattle plague (in a neighbouring territory 800,000 head of cattle died within a few weeks), and difficulties of transport and finance. Nevertheless, the work has gone vigorously forward. A Bible-class for native young men has resulted in eight becoming evangelists. Opportunities are many and urgent. The Gospel influence is spreading.

The pathetic word picture of Mr. Coillard, in which he depicted the King of Barotsiland, as a direct result of missionary effort, adjourning from the seat of justice to read the Bible to his chief men, touched many hearts, especially as the evangelist had with him on the platform an intelligent young native who is one of the fruits of the mission.

A special sum of £8000 is appealed for, and the urgency of the need is accentuated by the fact that the Evangelical Mission Society of Paris, which contributes to the support of a number of undertakings in the foreign field, is obliged to saddle Mr. Coillard with the responsiblity for raising this amount.

Together with a number of new workers, Mr. Coillard sails for Africa on December 2. Meanwhile he is busily engaged in visiting the Churches and explaining the work.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

October 16.

"The Temple Repaired." — 2 Chron. xxiv. 4-13.

Golden Text: "And the men did the work faithfully."—2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

Result of Jehoshaphat's Mistake.

In last lesson we saw that Jehoshaphat, for purposes of state, had—

(1) Married his son Jehoram to Ahab's daughter Athaliah.

(2) Formed an alliance in war with Ahab.

Athaliah, like her mother Jezebel—clever, resolute, and devilish—she gained the mastery over Jehoram, and while the temple of God was left to decay, the magnificence of the temple of Baal continually increased. Jehoram died, his life had been a failure — "he departed without being desired."

Illustration.—Macbeth :—

If 'twere done when it is done,
It were well it were done quickly.

But it never is done with when it is done. The effect of wrong action follows us, and even God's forgiveness will not prevent "the sins of the fathers being visited on the children unto the third and fourth generation."

The Child in the Temple.

Following the death of Jehoram, Ahaziah reigned for one year. He was put to death by Jehu, and Athaliah, anxious to occupy the throne herself, slew (as she thought) all the royal children. But Jehoshabeath, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, saved one baby about a year old and hid him in one of the disused rooms of the temple. There he was trained for six years, with the intention that when the time was ripe he should be crowned as king of Judah.

Illustration.—Moses hidden from the wrath of Pharaoh, Christ from the cruelty of Herod. Every child should be hidden in the Temple of God, and so shielded against the devil.

The teacher should point out the value of a Christian home, and of church membership.

Joash is Crowned.

When Joash was seven years old the High Priest went throughout the country to gather the soldiers, the captains of the army and the Levites. He disclosed to them cautiously the fact that young Joash was alive. And when they were all in the temple the boy was brought forth and put to stand by one of the pillars, and there he was crowned.

Athaliah, who never frequented the temple of God, hearing the shout of the people, came in to see what was the matter. The soldiers took her down to the brook Kedron, and there put her to death: and the boy Joash is king.

Lesson.—Every boy should be a king over himself. If he cannot rule himself he can never govern others if God should ever call him to do so.

A little kingdom I possess,
Where thoughts and feelings dwell;
And very hard I find the task
Of governing it well.

Good Company.

While Joash was under the influence of the High Priest he governed well. Effect of company on us. We take our colour from our surroundings. We become good by being in the society of the good. Make a friend of Jesus. Go to no place where Jesus could not go with you. Say no word you would not wish Jesus to hear. Think no thought you would blush for Jesus to know of.

Repairing the Temple (4—13).

Temple neglected. Levites sent from a great public meeting to collect a certain sum of money for the purpose of repairing. This was to be done each year, so that it would not be burdensome. This was a tax which Moses had instituted (Ex. xxx. 11—16). But the Levites did not do their duty; they did not levy the tax. Why we do not know. Lethargy and indifference had grown upon them by the ascendancy of Baal. So Joash ordered a box to be placed at the temple gate, and soon the people had put enough money in that to clear the building of any debt and to make gold and silver vessels for the temple service.

Lesson.—Teachers of senior scholars should point out that giving money for God's work is a means of grace. Children should give what they can, and so form the habit of making sacrifice.

The Y.M.C.A.

WINTER WORK IN LONDON.

The London Central Association has been devising liberal things for its winter programme. Besides the usual departments of educational classes and Gospel work now inaugurated for the winter season, special efforts will be made to reach specific classes of men. Meetings are to be held in Exeter Hall during the coming months for members of the Civil Service, for bankers' clerks, for insurance clerks, for volunteers, and for market porters. A general mission for men at Exeter Hall, to be conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll, will commence on October 10. Following that a similar effort for the benefit of the West-end will be made at Portman Rooms, Baker-street, with Dr. Harry Guinness as the evangelist. At the Aldersgate-street Association a mission, specially designed to reach City boys, is arranged for January, and the chief worker will be Mr. Stentiford. At the same centre there will afterwards be a general men's mission by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, of Hatcham. A special band of men is being organised to distribute suitable and attractive literature among the male frequenters of the theatres and music-halls.

Several interesting conferences have been arranged for. As a sequel to the foreign missionary convention held last year, a Home Missions Conference will be held at Exeter Hall, on Nov. 16 to 18. Most of the home missions at work in London, or having their headquarters here, will be represented among the speakers. A detailed programme will be published later. On Dec. 7 a Christian soldiers' conference will be held, and a week later a united Protestant demonstration.

BRIEF NOTES.

The new association at Preston has acquired very suitable rooms in the Lancaster-road.

This month, Men, the organ of the Associations in North America, is changed from a weekly to a monthly.

In connection with the effort being made to clear the debt on the Eastbourne Association building, an exhibition and sale of work is to be held in the Town Hall on Oct. 11 and 12.

The Glasgow Y.M.C.A. (southern branch) has celebrated its twenty-first anniversary. The present membership is 120. During its existence nearly a thousand young men have passed through the Association.

The Nottingham Y.M.C.A. has inaugurated its winter session's work by holding a soirée at the Mechanics' Institution. The Sheriff of Nottingham occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Mr. Robert Barber (president), Canon J. D. Lewis, and others.

A successful mission has been conducted in connection with the Mountpottinger Association, Belfast, by Mr. S. G. Montgomery. During the past week Rev. T. B. Robertson, of Limerick, has been holding a mission in the rooms of the Dublin Y.M.C.A. in Upper Sackville-street.

A most interesting reunion took place on Thursday evening of the members of the various holiday parties organised by the Hackney Association to Scotland, Ireland, Norway, English Lakes, Norfolk Broads, and Seaside Camp. Mission services were held in connection with these various parties.

A week of Gospel effort among German-speaking men and women will be held from October 6 to 13. The meetings, which will be conducted by Pastor J. Paul, from Ravenstein, Germany, will take place in different parts of London. Particulars can be had from Secretary German Y.M.C.A., 28, Finsbury-square, E.C.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee Association it was stated that the Bible-class numbers fully a thousand members. The members carry on an energetic work in visiting the ships in the harbour and distributing Gospel literature on Sunday mornings. Over 800 vessels were visited during the past year. Evangelistic tent work is also carried on among the militia at Barry Camp during the training season.

For the past fortnight a Gospel mission (in connection with the Shoreditch Association) has been conducted by Dr. Harry Guinness, and a band of Harley House students, in the Town Hall, Shoreditch, and in Pastor Cuff's Tabernacle. The average attendance has been upwards of 1000 each night. Two lectures to young men drew audiences of 1500 and 2500 respectively. Large numbers of inquirers were dealt with in the after-meetings.

The Islington Y.M.C.A. has made a most encouraging commencement of the winter session. At a members' reception, given by Mr. J. J. Drysdale, thirty new members were welcomed, of whom ten gave bright testimonies as to the help the association had been to them in their Christian life. A paper impressing upon members their responsibility towards the finances of the association was read, and promises amounting to over £20 were received from the young men themselves.

The inaugural social meeting of the winter season was recently held at Aldersgate-street, when a large number of promising young men engaged in City houses accepted the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Thompson (Copestake and Co.). After refreshments, a meeting was held in the lecture hall, when the host of the evening bore testimony to the benefits derived from association with the Y.M.C.A. An able and suggestive address was given to the young men by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, of Belgrave Chapel, on the words, "When thou art old."

On Saturday week nearly a hundred delegates, representing the Associations of the North-East Metropolitan District, assembled for their autumn Conference at the residence of Mr. Robert Barclay, at Hoddesdon. The attendance was the largest on record, and the proceedings, which occupied the greater part of the day, were of considerable interest. The foreign work undertaken by the National Council was spoken upon by Mr. W. H. Mills. In regard to the district itself, it is expected that a distinct forward movement will result from the conference. Sir George Williams kindly promised £100 towards the first £1000 to be raised, and Messrs Rotherham and Co. and Mr. W. McCall are each contributing fifty guineas in aid of the scheme.

World's Y.W.C.A.

WORKERS FOR INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—May I lay before your readers the urgent need of workers to help in the Y.W.C.A. Home in Bombay? Miss Hill, the Indian National Secretary, who has been making Bombay her headquarters, must now resume her travelling work. Miss Jones, a most valued helper and friend, is returning in October to take her place, and needs some one to assist her in the general work. Miss Hill writes that her helper in the Colaba branch in Bombay must return home immediately for four months, so still another is urgently needed.

We have one in view who may be suitable, but we dare not go forward (as we have already £200 to transmit to India in December, not including the national secretary's expenses) unless God shows it is his way by providing funds for her outfit, passage, and a year's maintenance.

Will any whom God is calling to work for Him abroad, and who have had a good education, with some experience and training in work, write to me? I will also receive any contributions for this purpose.—Yours faithfully,

(Mrs.) Lucy J. Tritton,
President World's Y.W.C.A.

26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have heard of the generous promise of one friend to guarantee the passage and a year's maintenance for a worker. This encourages us to ask for others to do likewise.

Winchester.—"The Love of God" is announced as the chief subject for consideration at the forthcoming conference at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, on October 11 to 14. The official invitation to the gathering is signed by General Alexander, Colonel Seton Churchill, and other friends, and amongst the list of speakers are Revs. C. E. Dickinson, J. Tuckwell, David Baron, and Fuller Gooch. Luncheon and tea will be provided each day of the conference.

Glasgow.—The customary autumn conference at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, was held on September 24 and 25. On the former day to a large gathering, under the presidency of Pastor D. J. Findlay, helpful addresses were given by Rev. H. Montgomery (Belfast), Mr. John Colville, M.P., Rev. John Urquhart, Mr. J. S. Holden, and several missionaries. Mr. W. D. Dunn excited much interest by his report of the recent revival in Dundee. The meetings on Sabbath were all well attended and full of real interest. Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Holden were the chief speakers, and their messages were channels of blessing to many. The conference closed, as the good custom is, with a gathering round the Lord's Table.

Child-Life in Heathen Lands—8.

NOW that the holidays are well over I suppose you are all pursuing your school work again with might and main. Having put your heart into the enjoyment of the season of rest, now, of course, with a like earnestness, "heart" has to be put into all class-studies. Nothing less than "thorough," will, I believe, satisfy the girls and boys who read the Young People's Page in The Christian.

A month or two ago I gave you an account of a girls' school in India. It seems to me that it would be scarcely fair if I did not also sketch a boys' school.

Well, imagine some hundreds of lads and young men, Hindus and Mussulmans, all learning the English language. It would amuse you very much if you heard those of six or seven years old attempting to pronounce our alphabet. In the next class you might hear others reading, "Wurruk while you wurruk, and palay while you palay." Their own language is Kanarese, Tamil, Telugu, or Hindustani. This explains the strange pronunciation.

As they rise through the school, class by class, they read harder books, and, also, do their arithmetic, algebra, Euclid, history, geography, chemistry, and physics—all in English, from just the same books as you are accustomed to use. It is not the same sort of thing as you learning French, for you don't do all your school lessons in French as these boys do all their lessons in English.

See them coming to school in the morning before seven o'clock with naked feet, or with their native shoes, like thick flapping slippers with the toes curled up. There are little fellows hardly higher than the table—boys of all ages and sizes, up to young men of eighteen and twenty, many of them with a moustache, some of the bigger ones already married.

Many of the younger boys are very pretty, with sweet oval faces of soft brown, and large, dark lustrous eyes, with long, black lashes. They are by no means rowdy, like many English boys, but very attentive, tractable and docile. They learn with great eagerness, and have marvellous memories, often learning their entire books by heart.

At Bangalore High School the morning's lessons begin with the Gospel, but sometimes there is an English lesson first. Every boy brings an English Bible or New Testament, or perhaps only the Gospel the class may be reading, which he can buy for a penny. A portion of the class reads a few verses in turn, and then the master talks to them about what they have been reading—but all in English. They often ask questions, and sometimes find fault with Christ's teaching.

In the school I am telling you about there are 750 boys and young men, divided into eighteen classes, and taught by twenty-three masters—several of them having taken University degrees. Five of them are Pandits, that is, men who teach the lads their native language.

When the morning hours of study are over, these boys troop away home, laughing, skipping, shouting, to their midday meal, as happy as boys can be who have done their level best. On arriving at home each boy has to bathe, by having pots of warm water poured over him, and he changes his clothes. This he must do before he eats. He also has to paint the sacred marks upon his forehead. Then he sits down upon the floor, has a large piece of plantation leaf placed before him for a plate; upon this is heaped rice with curried vegetables. He takes it up with the tips of his fingers, opens his mouth, and throws it in—a large pinch at a time—without touching his lips. He has also a small brass pot of water at the side, and when he drinks he throws back his head and pours in the water without letting the vessel touch his lips.

After dinner he generally studies his lessons for the next day, or for afternoon school, if he has extra lessons to attend. At five o'clock he goes off to play. Hindu boys have games of their own, which, of course, I am not able to describe. But they have been taught some of our English games—cricket, football, tennis, and to practise gymnastics.

Besides the ordinary school examinations three times a year, the higher classes go in for public examinations, such as "middle class exams," and "matriculation exams."

This, I think, will give you a fair idea of school-life amongst Hindu boys. But the grandest thing about it is, all that they learn is filled with the truths of Christianity. The missionaries are ever on the alert to show their pupils the superiority of the religion of Jesus over any other religion in the world. The way is thus being prepared for a "nation to be born in a day."

A Little Brown Penny.

A little brown penny, worn and old,
Dropped in the box by a dimpled hand;
A little brown penny, a childish prayer,
Sent far away to a heathen land.

A little brown penny, a generous thought,
A little less candy, just for one day,
A young heart awaked for life, mayhap,
To the needs of the heathen far away.

The penny flew off with the prayer's swift wings,
It carried the message by Jesus sent;
And the gloom was pierced by a radiant light
Wherever the prayer and the message went.

And who can tell of the joy it brought
To the souls of the heathen far away,
When darkness fled, like wavering mists,
From the beautiful dawn of Gospel day?

And who can tell of the blessings that came
To the little child when Christ looked down?
Or how the penny, worn and old,
In heaven will change to a golden crown?

Temperance Notes.

At Buluwayo a magistrate fined two Europeans £400 each for selling intoxicants to natives.

The Beer and Wine Trade Society of Birmingham has sent out a circular to its members, urging them to refuse to serve very young children.

Rev. Charles Garrett, addressing a Band of Hope demonstration in Newcastle-on-Tyne, said it was computed that there were 800,000 drunkards in England, which was equal to two drunkards for every Wesleyan class-member.

The British Medical Journal calls attention to the fact that ardent spirits have been put before the American public in a new form. Whisky can now be eaten as well as drunk. Enticing-looking jelly cakes and biscuits are sold, which have been found to contain a certain amount of whisky.

Children's Country Holiday Fund.—Mr. E. J. Urwick, secretary of the fund, writing from 10, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C., says :—"I am glad to be able to report that the work during the past summer has been very successful; and, thanks to the ever-increasing care of our workers, has been entirely free from any serious cases of accident or illness among the 30,000 odd children who have spent a fortnight in the country."

The Gopalgunge Mission, East Bengal, India.—This rural mission was begun over twenty-four years ago by Mr. Mothoora Nath Bose, B.A., B.L., one of Dr. Duff's converts. Its work is carried on among the large populations of the East Bengal swamps. The agents of the mission have been entirely drawn from within its own borders. Lord Overtoun, Professor J. Robertson, of Aberdeen, Rev. J. Murray Mitchell, and other friends speak in high terms of the work. It is urgently felt that there is a great necessity for extension. There are no good schools for native Christian children; indeed, even in Calcutta there are only two schools for the training of Christian boys; and thus, while the native Christian agents are labouring successfully for the conversion of the heathen to Christianity, the children of the Christian community are in danger of being heathenised from the necessity of sending them to schools where they are taught by heathen teachers and associate with heathen children. It is therefore proposed to entirely separate Christian children from these heathen influences, and to train them up with the view of their becoming native Christian workers, to evangelise these unhealthy districts without sacrificing European lives. In order to erect suitable buildings and meet the necessary expenses a sum of at least £1000 will be required. The treasurer of the mission is Mr. David Paulin, 6, Forres-street, Edinburgh.

STORY BOOKS.

The autumn season is bringing many new arrivals in this department of modern literature. E. Livingston Prescott has already won her spurs as a skilful and pathetic delineator of soldier life in its varied phases. Her latest tale, The Measure of a Man (6s. Nisbet & Co.), has also a soldier for its hero; and a singularly clever story it is in its character drawing. We must not reveal the plot, but only remark that the interest is fully maintained to the closing page, and the power of Christian principle to mould a life lived in difficult surroundings is, on the whole, well exemplified. But we cannot endorse the author's tacit approval of suicide as a manly way of escape from an overwhelming trouble.

When Hyacinths Bloom. By Ida Jackson. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) A thoroughly healthy and pleasing tale of dire misfortune bravely and designedly met, and of ultimate reward. Every reader will be satisfied with the happy ending. The Scotch servant Jean is splendidly depicted.

Other People's Stairs. By Isabella Fyvie Mayo. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) A really charming story of domestic servant life in Scotland. Highland Morag, the heroine of the tale, is scarcely a typical specimen of the modern domestic—we wish she were. But the book is one that ought to be carefully read by mistresses and servants alike.

By Strange Paths. By F. E. Newberry. (3s. 6d. Andrew Melrose.) The title of this story well describes it. And yet we seem to feel that the author's imagination has outrun probability, though we know the proverbial saying that fact is stranger than fiction. The same story is also published by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, under the title of Strange Conditions (2s. 6d.), with illustrations by Mrs. Osman Thomas.

Two delightful stories, equally suited for boys and girls, are The Captain's Bunk, by M. B. Manwell (2s. 6d.) and A Puzzling Pair, by Amy Le Feuvre (2s.). The former has plenty of adventure such as young people like to read about. The latter, by the popular author of "Probable Sons," relates the opinions and experiences of a youthful brother and sister into whose home a second mother came. It is in truth a pretty story, and finely illustrated in the margins of almost every page by Evelyn Lance. (R. T. S.)

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have issued an attractive edition of C. M. Sheldon's sermon story, with the title, Our Exemplar, or "What would Jesus do?" It should be in large demand this side the Atlantic. (2s.)

A choice little volume is Dream Wreaths and Scattered Leaves, by Chloris. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) For the most part reprinted from a Dublin journal, the verses enshrine noble thought and tender sentiment.

Musings for Quiet Hours. By Rev. G. S. Barrett, D.D. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) There is a real expository value in these short and unpretentious meditations. The Scriptural passages or phrases chosen for comment are mostly familiar ones, but the interpretations are freshly worded and full of stimulus.

Rev. William Adamson, vicar of Old Ford, has issued a small volume of choice sermons, the first of which, Have I Been? affords a convenient title for the whole. There is an Evangelical richness in the pages, which deal with great subjects in a very helpful manner. (Office of "The Rock," 12, St. Bride-street, E.C.)

Suffering and weary and aged Christians are not addressed so frequently as are the young and vigorous. Their case has, however, been the special care of "E. A. D." in The Gift of Rest (Henry Frowde). The author has gleaned in varied fields, and the pages will doubtless minister comfort to many cheerless hearts.

In The Case against Atheism, Mr. Reader Harris, Q.C., addresses the various classes commonly designated infidel. The questions discussed are familiar, but it is not often that one meets with them treated, as here, "from the standpoint of Christian perfection, and by one who himself was an honest agnostic for years." (Horace Marshall & Co.)

Messrs. Pickering and Inglis begin the "Helpful Half-Hour" series of shilling books with From Glory to Glory: Select Addresses on the Calling, Hope, and Manifestation of the Elect of God, by Dr. Thomas Neatby. Eight in number, these pages deserve many readers. They are deeply edifying addresses to the hearts and minds of believers.

Mr. Edward Simpson is instructive as well as entertaining in Insect Lives. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The little creatures are permitted to tell their own tale; and young folks are likely to be more struck by the facts so presented than they would be by reading the histories in the common encyclopædic form. The marvellous letterpress is accompanied by many useful illustrations.

Rev. Charles Bullock's monthlies are welcomed in many a home. They make volumes which deserve a place in all village libraries, and should prove of great service to district visitors. First comes Home Words, and then The Day of Days. For nearly thirty years they have been instructing and entertaining the people, and we trust they will long continue to do so. (2s. each. "Home Words" Office.)

Rev. Robert Middleton, rector of St. Michael's, Norwich, has written a striking little book on prophecy, entitled How is Jesus coming? and for whom? (1s. Marshall Bros.) It is conceived on "Futurist" lines, and sets forth "the Secret Rapture" and other views that are controverted by many students of prophecy. From its own point of view the book is lucid, and should be of service to inquirers.

Rev. George Everard is uniformly helpful, whether he addresses young or old. In Merry and Wise, he speaks in words of tenderness and truth to schoolgirls. There is not a dull page in the little book, but parental sympathy and pastoral solicitude appear in happy combination. As we pray for our daughters (and the daughters of others also) we should place this book in their hands with great expectation of blessing following. (1s. Nisbet and Co.)

Messrs. Cassell have issued the first part of a monthly, The Wars of the Nineties. With abundance of illustration, it will tell a stirring story of the last ten years of the nineteenth century, beginning with the reconquest of the Soudan. (Twelve sixpenny parts.) The well-known serial, The Peoples of the World, is being re-issued in a cheap form. (Twenty-two sixpenny parts.) The October part of Chums, the boys' paper, begins a new volume which promises to be as interesting as its excellent predecessors.

A distinct want has been met by A Letter for You, and Other Readings for Mothers' Meetings, by J. M. K. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) Dr. Handley Moule, in a prefatory note, tersely says of the readings that "they come from the Word, from the heart, and from a knowledge of the realities of 'mothers'' life." The author aims especially to help such as conduct mothers' meetings, and to such the score of readings should prove of great service. The addresses may either be read in a meeting or regarded as suggestive material in the preparation of mothers' talks.

The Church Hymnary, authorised for use in public worship by the Established, Free, and U.P. Churches of Scotland as well as the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, is an excellent compilation. The hymns number 625, and there are doxologies, canticles, and full indices. The music has been edited by Sir John Stainer, Professor of Music in the University of Oxford; and not only is the book of great value as a compilation of hymns and tunes (some of them composed expressly for its pages), but it serves to bind together Churches which, in other interests, happily only of a minor character, are divided and distinct. Several editions are published, with and without music. (Henry Frowde.)

When originally published, we called attention to Miss Anna Boobbyer's book, Broken Purposes, but Answered Prayers: A Record of the Lord's Lovingkindness, and of Sweet Surprises in his Service. (Marshall Bros.) We welcome a new edition (twentieth thousand), with a sequel extending over nearly a hundred pages. The book outlines remarkable experiences, and deserves many readers. Writing to us on September 19, from Dulwich House, North Malvern, Miss Boobbyer says:—"Being 2s. 6d. net, the book cannot be obtained under that price through booksellers, but I am offering copies post free at 1s. 6d. each. The book has been greatly used by God in showing, as a correspondent says, 'The possibilities of life.' I desire (on the forty-fifth anniversary of the mountain climb which laid me low for life) to devote 1000 copies at this greatly reduced price, as a thankoffering to Him who has turned my mourning into joy, and made me rejoice from my sorrow. As your paper was the means of leading me into much Christian work in the sixties, I naturally turn to it in the nineties, when longing to enlarge my borders before the home-call."

At length we have a Reference Edition of the Revised Version of the Bible in clear minion type. For some years the work of preparation has been in progress, and the stores of reference material gathered by the late Drs. Scrivener and Moulton have been at the disposal of the compilers. Quite a company of scholars has been engaged in the work, and the result is a book of remarkable usefulness. To begin with, the system is much better than that found in reference editions of the A.V., as it distinguishes quotations and verbal parallels from passages merely similar and illustrative in character; and beyond that, it assists the student by indicating which of several references will yield him most in the line of additional reference matter. In various other ways the work excels that which has so long been familiar to Bible readers. The various renderings and readings which have hitherto occupied the margin of the R.V. are here placed at the foot of the page. The chapter beginnings are marked with welcome distinctness, the use of bold Arabic figures for this purpose greatly assisting ready reference. (5s. and upwards, according to binding. Henry Frowde.)

Much interest will be taken in the portrait of the Emperor of China, which was published in The Graphic last week from a sketch made by an Englishman who was present at one of the few receptions which have been held during the present reign. Hitherto no authentic portrait of the Emperor has been known.

A munificent gift of 600,000 dollars has been made to Ithaca University, U.S.A., for the advancement of medical education. A building is to be erected in New York. It will have an endowment fund of 400,000 dollars. The donor of this princely sum is Colonel Oliver A. Payne.

Bishop Tucker has addressed a letter to the Church Missionary Society, in which he gives his impressions of Uganda on visiting it for the fourth time, after an interval of two years. When peace may be looked for it would be difficult to predict. This uncertainty is a great hindrance to the progress of work. Every station abandoned at the time of the mutiny has now been, or is in course of being, reoccupied or rebuilt. In a very little while the Bishop hopes that the work will be going forward as though no break had occurred.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Breaking of Bread.

Dear Sir,—The correspondence in The Christian during August on the breaking of bread elicited much interest. May it now be considered whether Christian friends, with whom it has become a custom to hold united prayer meetings at the beginning of a new year, would see well to meet on one day more to take the Lord's Supper together?

Indeed, does it not seem incongruous if, after true catholic union has been shown during a week of prayer, and after petitions to God have been warmly expressed to bring about more oneness, that the central act of the faith—the remembrance of the Lord of all, the showing forth of his death in the way which He enjoined, should (with a few exceptions) not have a place in, or be auxiliary to, such assemblies?

The time could be, if there is a general agreement, during the week of prayer. Yet, as some persons attending the meetings then held might not see their way to attend such communion (and such conscientious difficulties, although they should not predominate, yet should be respected), no alteration is pressed. Rather, it is suggested that a week-day in the subsequent week, or the ensuing Sunday, would be the best for holding free united communions at the Lord's Table. There need be no rule as to mode; each locality, free from bondage, arranging its own details. A very moderate amount of ministry of the Word would suffice. Indeed, a few Scriptures, with a loving word or two, is to my mind the most suitable, in addition to worship appropriate to the object.

The basis should not be a creed humanly composed, but some passage of the Word of God; as, for instance, that we who were once far off are in Christ Jesus made nigh in all the efficacy of his blood; that He is our peace, and that through Him all believers have free access in one Spirit unto the Father. Mr. Cheyne Brady's Tracts.

Dear Sir,—In the appreciative notice of the late Mr. Cheyne Brady appearing in your columns last week, the reference made to his "Gospel Leaves" almost implies that we have ceased to publish them. This, however, is not the case. It may interest your readers to know that of the Gospel Leaves we have 144 in English, 96 in French, 96 in German, 96 in Italian, 80 in Spanish, 16 in Portuguese, 96 in Dutch, 80 in Danish and Norwegian, 96 in Swedish, and 16 in Slovenian.—Yours very truly, Women Drunkards.

DRUNKENNESS is a cruel tyrant wherever it exerts its awful spell. But when it prevails amongst women and dominates them it has reached its acme of evil-doing. In the recent report of the London City Mission several missionaries give most startling evidence of the increase of drunkenness amongst women. We cull the testimony of three. One says: "At any of the public-houses in my district, go where you will, you will find more women than men, and those in many cases not over twenty years of age." The second reports: "At 11 a.m. met drunken women in three houses consecutively, all being mothers of large families." The third states: "Had seen father, mother, and children all dead drunk." The question is one of vital and national importance, but most difficult of solution.

The Gospel for Khartoum.—To those who desire to see the Kingdom of God advancing in the van of the inflowing English power, the question of the opening of a Mission-station in Khartoum is especially interesting. Two months ago (says Mercy and Truth), in speaking of the scheme, we used the words "as soon as the way may be clear," and now we seem very nearly to have reached the climax. Two ladies have promised £300 per annum towards the support of a Medical Mission; and there are other funds contributed many years ago in memory of the heroic Gordon. The Committee of the C.M.S. have decided that the pioneers will probably be Dr. Harpur of Cairo, accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Sterling of Gaza, a native medical assistant, and Mr. Douglas Thornton, the well-known member of the S.V.M.U., and perhaps a native catechist. As soon as the sanction of Government is obtained, the start will be made.

WHITEFIELD Memorial Church

AND

TOPLADY HALL, LONDON, W.

APPEAL.

WHITEFIELD MEMORIAL CHURCH AND TOPLADY HALL.

When in 1889, Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, London, was condemned and taken down, much sympathy was evinced, and a hope was universally expressed that it would soon reappear in a new form. After much delay, it is now being rebuilt at a cost of £12,000. Of this sum £5,000 is in hand or promised, and £7,000 is still required. The Congregation have given as the Lord's Stewards should, liberally, and in many cases self-denyingly. We now appeal for help from the great Christian public whose interest in the Church we believe is deep.

A PLACE WITH A HISTORY.

In 1756 George Whitefield, his heart being set on saving West London, selected a site on the Tottenham Court Road on which to erect a Chapel. Aided by generous helpers, Royalty included, the Chapel was erected, and multitudes were gathered into it to hear the Gospel. Someone styled it "Whitefield's Soul-trap," and such it proved to be. Its pulpit, still existing, was his throne, and from it, inspired by the Holy Ghost, he spake as one having authority. Peers and Plebeians came to hear him daily, and Truth won notable triumphs. From that pulpit he went to America to die, and from it on November 18, 1770, John Wesley preached his funeral sermon. There also Matthew Wilks, preached mightily for over 50 years, he and his co-worker, John Hyatt, gathering large harvests for the Great Husbandman. Among its honoured ministers have been Dr. John Campbell, who did so much to overthrow the Bible monopoly, so that, reduced in price, the people's Book could be bought by the poorest in the land; J. W. Richardson, Llewellyn D. Bevan, Thos. Nicholson and J. Jackson Wray, all of whom were men mighty in the Scriptures.

ONE OF THE FOUNDERS OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY,

THE BURIAL-PLACE OF REV. A. M. TOPLADY.

Within the precincts still rest the mortal remains of the Rev. A. M. Toplady, B.A., the writer of the peerless hymn, "Rock of Ages," whose memory we propose to perpetuate in Toplady Hall, where our Sunday School children will be taught not only to sing his wonderful hymn, but to love his more wonderful Lord.

THE SITE.

The site is that selected by Whitefield for the former Tabernacle. It is freehold, and consecrated in the truest sense by the gracious visitations of God during more than 140 years of spiritual service.

THE BUILDINGS.

The new Church and Hall will form a commanding structure, witnessing for Christ in one of London's greatest thoroughfares, and specially designed for the great work of evangelising the throngs of redeemed souls among whom it is to be reared. The church will seat 1150 persons, while Toplady Hall will accommodate 800.

OUR PRESENT WORK.

In spite of enormous difficulties occasioned by the demolition of the old Tabernacle our work remains a many-sided and extensive one, including numerous agencies to educate and secure the young for Christ, manifold works among the sick and needy, efforts in many directions to reclaim the lost and spare the tempted, and a pulpit in which Christ is earnestly set forth as the only name under heaven by which we can be saved.

A MAN'S BEST MEMORIAL IS TO HAVE HIS WORK CONTINUED.

We wish to continue Whitefield's work. For this purpose alone do we "arise and build," God being our witness. West Central London needs us sorely. The work has been laid on our hearts by God: we must do it. A debt on the building will tie our hands against future usefulness. We therefore appeal to all who have our Lord's money to aid us at once. It is the King's business. Will you not share the joy of it? Send us help, and may God bless you!

In behalf of the Church, believe us,
Yours very sincerely,

HOLIDAY HOME FOR POOR AND SICK CHILDREN.

This home, situated in a most charming part of Epping Forest, which has for several years past been of incalculable benefit to many hundreds of poor little waifs and strays, many of them half famished and pent up in the narrow and stifling courts and alleys the whole year. To continue this much-needed work during this season, an earnest appeal is hereby made for help to the Christian public. Last year over 500 were taken for one or two weeks, and over 3,000 for a day. Donations in any form will be gratefully received, and can be sent to the treasurer, at the Bank, 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to the Office of The Christian, or to the Secretary, 25, Brighton Road, Stoke Newington, N.

Scottish Notes.

The seventh session of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, has opened, with seventy-one resident students enrolled. They represent various nationalities, and the larger number contemplate service in the foreign mission field.

United effort has again been put forth by the different congregations in Stornoway for aggressive work among the crowds of men and women who go to the town for the fishing season just closed. United meetings were held for different classes, with good results.

Miss Synge and Miss Pope, from London, of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, have been visiting the larger towns in Scotland conducting meetings for telegraph messengers. There has been a ready response, and much to encourage. Regular work among this class has been organised.

The trustees of the Drummond Tract Society have appointed Rev. William Agnew, Galatown Free Church, Kirkcaldy, editor of the British Messenger and other publications, in succession to the late Dr. Andrew. At a special home mission conference held in Glasgow last week it was stated that there are 50,000 families in that city whose incomes are under 20s. per week. Reference was made to the growing spirit of gambling among the youth and the unsettling influence of much of the modern literature. Sunday labour and the curse of strong drink are among the problems calling for attention.

The Bible booth of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland during the past season has visited Glasgow, Kilmarnock, Paisley Races, Dumbarton, Ayr Races, and Lanark Races. There were sold at these places 549 Bibles, 1640 New Testaments, 415 "Pilgrim's Progress," and a large number of Spurgeon's shilling books; and 28,800 tracts were distributed. Through this work, which has now been carried on for some years, it has been found that Bibles have found their way into homes where previously there was not a copy of the Word of God.

Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, S.W.—The neighbourhood of the mission work carried on at the Tabernacle affords an excellent field for constant Gospel effort in one of the most densely populated districts of London. Pastor D. M. Cameron, writing from 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W., tells of deeply interesting work among the children, for whom special meetings have recently been held. God is being praised for manifest blessing on the exertions put forth. Evangelistic meetings, Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, Band of Hope, Bible classes, etc., are in full operation.

Medical Work in China.—Dr. Parrott writes from Lao-ho-Kow, North-west China, with reference to the medical mission in which he is engaged:—"The villages are crying out for us—I mean, we have friends and a few inquirers in scores of the villages, and these people ought to be visited. They have heard the Gospel here, and are willing to practice it, but are very ignorant and cannot read. Some of them walk in on Sundays, and carry away something of what they hear. I am tempted to neglect the sick in order to follow up some of the cases, but it is hard to refuse to help the sick and dying when one is able to do so."

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

At the annual conference of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, held at Bath, Rev. J. Foster advocated the training in a department of the college at Cheshunt of deaconesses who could minister to the poor people of the villages, and who would assist in counteracting the baneful influence of Ritualism among the young of the rural districts.

His support will not be any additional burden to the Society, as Mr. E. P. Collier, J.P., of Reading, has undertaken to be responsible for his maintenance.

At the fifth annual meeting of the South Brazilian Baptist Union it was resolved: "That this Union send cordial fraternal greetings to the Churches in Great Britain and Ireland of the same faith and order"; and, "As, from the Church of Jerusalem down to the present our churches ever had the blessed onus laid on them, in weal and woe, to inculcate Bible doctrines, ordinances, and church organisation, so we deem it our special heritage to evangelise in Roman Catholic countries."

The oldest living Methodist preacher in the world is said to be "Father" Lorenzo Waugh, of Santa Barbara, California. He is ninety, and still preaching. In 1852 he made a journey of three thousand miles across the continent in an ox-cart, and, as he says, he has "grown up with the great West."

Rev. J. Proudfoot, missionary in the Mendi country, Sierra Leone, visited the Oxford Methodist Free Church on Sunday week in connection with their annual missionary meeting. In Samaria, a very small African village, he said he had sometimes addressed nearly 2000 people. There is a growing work among the Mendi, where Mr. Proudfoot has laboured for thirteen years.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference has stated, on behalf of the West London Mission, that £1000 is required at once. With the additional duties of an important office he could not this year spend time to sit down and write for help to friends, but he trusted that the public would not permit the financial pressure which at present menaces the work to continue.

Primitive Methodist and Bible Christian union in South Australia having been agreed to, the Federal Council has met and completed its arrangements for the amalgamation of the various book-rooms. The "Bible Christian Monthly" and the "Primitive Methodist Quarterly," both of which have been issued at a profit, are to be discontinued, and a joint quarterly review issued under the management of the Ministerial Conference.

In accordance with the directions of the Wesleyan Conference, the desirability of raising a special connexional fund for the maintenance and extension of Methodism at home and abroad has been submitted first to the September district synods and since to the September circuit quarterly meetings. Principal Rainy has issued to members of the Free Church an "explanatory statement" in regard to the proposed union between the United Presbyterian Church and the Free Church, in which he shows that the two Churches are of kindred origin, that they acknowledge practically the same standards, work in the same field, are continually exchanging members with each other, and that various congregations belonging to the two bodies have already been united.

Notes and Comments.

WE are continually hearing from readers who have been helped by the Daily Portions given in our pages for years past in different forms. Whether as "Notes on Daily Readings" or as "Our Daily Homily," this department of The Christian has proved a blessing to many. The letters of high appreciation and deep thankfulness which we have received from time to time have been gratifying alike to ourselves and the gifted writer of the "Homilies," Rev. F. B. Meyer. At length the entire Bible has once more been gone through, and our readers have had a homily for each day based on words from every chapter. Those who wish still to associate a homily with their daily reading will be glad to possess these very helpful words, as now being published in volume form. (Vols. 1 and 2 ready. 1s. 6d. and 2s. each. Morgan & Scott.)

Meantime, our arrangements for the future take a somewhat different form of emphasising spiritual truth. We propose next week to begin a series of meditations, entitled "Day by Day"; and as the times and the needs of our souls require that we should continually "consider HIM," each meditation will turn on the Person and Work of our Lord. As in the old days, so now, we need to listen while, by his Spirit, the Lord "expounds unto us in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." We trust this new series of daily thoughts and studies will be blessed to our readers in abundant measure.

As our circle of readers widens it becomes more than ever necessary for articles to be brief, and the records of work concise. We shall be compelled more rigidly to omit what is local or temporary, although our kind correspondents may consider that we have thereby eliminated something of the vigour, variety, and value of their contributions. On the other hand, we remind them that our circulation is world-wide and general, so that matters of strictly local import are less suitable for our columns than for a local journal. Articles of a graphic character are most likely to secure insertion. To write under conditions which compel the expression of thought in as few words as possible, consistently with clear transmission of meaning, is in itself a much-needed and valuable education in these days of speed and brevity. Intelligence of forward evangelistic work in any of the churches is always valued. Mr. Trevor Francis, in "Whence, Whither," has this useful quatrain :—

If words, like river torrents, overflow,
'Tis hard to find the grain of thought below.
If thou would'st have the heart and spirit stirred,
Let thought be jewelled on each chosen word.

A correspondent, referring to some recent remarks in our columns about the probable gain in our church prayer meetings if women were encouraged to take part, enters on a detailed defence of women's public ministry in prayer and exhortation. It is rather too late in the day now to discuss that question seriously. The Salvation Army, not to speak of other great movements, has so much accustomed us to woman's power as a speaker that few intelligent people venture to question its fitness or its scripturalness. On the general subject of prayer meetings, our correspondent says :—

The state of many of our church meetings for prayer is a disgrace to all concerned. Instead of being the burning fire which ought to light up ministers and people with a holy zeal for the salvation of souls, they are too often wet blankets damping out all vitality. Honourable exceptions there are, and where this is the case you have real live churches. By all means encourage godly women, who have the gifts to use them both in prayer and testimony for Jesus, and I will venture to say that we should soon see a reviving, living church.

Some hypercritics have said that the last clause of Gen. xii. 5 is unnecessary, superfluous, and therefore uninspired. What are the facts? God had told Abram to get out of his country, and from his kindred, and from his father's house, unto a land that He would show him. Instead of obeying implicitly, Abram appears to have told Terah, his father, who took all his family out of Ur of the Chaldees to go into the land of Canaan; but they only got as far as Haran, and dwelt there. There the old man died, and Abram departed to fulfil God's first command, "and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came." What more natural than that, having started once and stopped half-way, when he started a second time to go whither God had sent him, it should now be added, "And into the land of Canaan they came"?

What a lesson we get from this story! How often, like Abram, we only half obey, or obey in the flesh and not in the spirit. For Terah is the type of the old man, the will of the flesh. It yields at best a disobedient obedience. Such was David's seeking of God, not after the due order; such was the way of Cain, who worshipped God as if he were a righteous man; not as a sinner, needing an atoning substitute. So Balaam, running greedily after reward, yielded a feigned and unwilling obedience. So Korah and his company obtruded themselves upon the priesthood of their dispensation, just as the sacerdotalists of to-day obtrude themselves upon the Higher and Eternal Priesthood of this.

We must not suppose that this modern form of the gainsaying of Korah is confined to the Romish or Greek or Anglican priesthood. It is a deep instinct of the human heart. It develops itself abundantly in the Free Churches; there is no mission room or Gospel hall, no Friends' meeting or Brethren's upper room, where the spirit of priestism is impossible. Nor is it confined to the official caste in the Church. The old lady who got up and left the building because the person presiding at the Lord's Table was not an "ordained minister" was permeated with the same spirit of sacerdotal supremacy. Indeed, if the people did not love to have it so, prophets would not prophesy falsely, nor priests bear rule by their means.

Some object to sing "Oh to be nothing, nothing," and prefer "Oh to be something, something." They desire to make their lives sublime,

And, departing, leave behind them
Footprints on the sands of time :—

Footprints which perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

But it is only as we are nothing that we can be anything. The heroes of shipwrecks and railway disasters are men who think nothing of themselves, but who think others better than themselves. Nebuchadnezzar is not to be reckoned among the somethings because he built great Babylon, but because he humbled himself before the youths whom he had cast into the fiery furnace, and because he accepted the punishment of his iniquity when he had been seven years among the beasts.

On the other hand, some object to "Oh to be nothing, nothing," on the ground that we are nothing, and do not need to pray to be what we are. But surely "praying in the Holy Ghost" includes prayer for grace to appropriate the blessings which are our own in Christ—by whom we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand. Surely it includes prayer for grace to translate our standing into experience? "I am nothing; oh to be nothing." I am a saint by position; oh to be a saint by practice.

Temperance men have for many a year been of the opinion expressed by Sir John Hibbert, as President of the North-Western Poor Law Conference, that a country which can spend £130,000,000 a year upon alcoholic liquors ought to be able to live without any necessity for guardians or relief. The fact of our waste only needs stating. But the other side, the punishment of sober people by the imposition of rates to keep the drunkards who have wasted their substance, needs a good deal of stating and enforcing. Take the following picture of a summer Sunday in the Highlands of Scotland :—

The Dean said he was never so horrified in his life as at the condition of the beautiful Highlands all along from Struan to Rannoch on a fine day that summer. Many men were lying on the roadside rendered completely helpless with drink. It was not once in a way. Their regular practice was to spend the whole of their wages on whisky. There were not tens but hundreds. He spoke to some of them, and offered to give them a service on a Sunday afternoon rather than they should lie about drunk. Only two men turned up.

In all probability every one of these men will, at some time or other, be in the workhouse; but something effectual should be done before they come there.

The vast importance of doing something to improve the tone and morals of our music-halls is strongly emphasised in a letter to The Times of Saturday last by Mr. John Hollingshead, who pleads for a stricter censorship of their programmes. He says:—

> The music-halls now are no longer "cellars" opening about midnight, and supplying strong drinks and stronger songs to a small body of male revellers. They are crowded with a mixed audience of men, women, and children, whose entertainment consists far too often of songs in which "booze" is glorified, the social life of old St. John's Wood and the coarse flirtations of "lodgers" with married landladies are served up as comedy, "spill and pelt" scenes from old Surrey pantomimes are supplied as farce, and brutal assaults in which the foot is used far more often than the fist are committed by padded men who are called "knockabout artists."

This is strong language from one who writes not as a moral reformer, but an expert in dramatic criticism. The public temper is such that there is more likelihood of an appeal being attended to coming from such a quarter than from those whose only motive is to purify our public amusements; but they show that the protest made a year or two ago was a thoroughly timely one.

The Westminster Gazette, commenting on this matter, affirms, by the way, that the West End recent crusade, "dealing not only with the character of the entertainment provided, but with the character of those present at it," has already resulted in a "decided levelling-up of the entertainments themselves, and that these are less coarse and more moral." The deluge of abuse levelled at those who took part in this crusade was so unscrupulous, and the immediate issue so discouraging, that this is welcome testimony. There is little doubt, however, that in the East End and Southern music-halls the depraved instinct that has recently taken shape as "Hooliganism," and which has spread a reign of terror through whole districts of Southern London, has been fostered by the brutalising tendencies of the entertainments that are most popular, and it is time the authorities showed more courage in tapping the evil at its fount. It would greatly help the better class of managers, who, we are told, are "generally helpless in the hands of the artists," and have a decided effect on public opinion, without which no real reformation is possible.

We are glad to find that the religious question in Board schools, notwithstanding the Episcopal Rescript, is not to be reopened. Highly satisfactory both to parents of Board School children themselves and all true educationalists is the deliverance on this mixed topic by Lord Reay, the chairman of the London School Board. He says:—

> As far as I am aware, there are no complaints made by the parents with regard to the religious instruction given in our schools. Neither are there from our inspectors; and as regards the syllabus of Bible instruction, it has created no division among the members of our Board. It is my personal conviction that the religious education given in the day schools fully carries out what was intended by the Education Act and what the parents desire for their children. In their industrial schools the Board have given every guarantee that the strictest attention should be paid to the children receiving such religious education as is in accordance with the tenets of the denomination to which they belong. We have gone out of our way to give more guarantees than the Industrial Schools Act requires.

Nothing could be more convincing than this amicable working of the Education Act. We trust that for some time to come the subject may rest undisturbed.

In these days of sharp practice in the race for success, on the score that transparent honesty will not pay in a world mainly inhabited by rogues, it is gratifying to meet the testimony of the late Mr. J. J. Colman. He attributed the enormous success of his great business at Norwich mainly to the fact that the firm always saw that every article sold was exactly what it was represented to be. The exaggerated advertisements too often found in our newspapers have done much to kill all confidence in the representations of those who press their goods on public acceptance. It is well to know that there are still manufacturers whose self-commendation is a bond of honour between them and their customers. After all, business between man and man depends on those who are willing to swear to their own hurt, and not to change, and who know how to keep their word.

A great Welsh personality passed away in Wales in the person of Mr. Thomas Gee, of Denbigh. He was a journalist, a preacher, and a political speaker of the first rank. His long life was given to the cause of religious freedom, education, and true progress. He was one of the ablest writers Wales has ever produced, and was filled with a simple faith and a spiritual fervour that animated and gave force to all his utterances. The stamp of his lofty personality lies on the whole of the Principality, and especially in North Wales, where his influence was as widespread and deep as it was noble and pure. He laboured for many years under discouragement, but lived to see many of his most cherished aims fully realised, and died in the affection and honour of his fellow-countrymen.

In his able analysis of the character and methods of Laud, the Bishop of London uttered some truths that are of universal and enduring importance. Of Laud's appeal to force for the purpose of attaining a spiritual end, he said:—

> He forgot that the spiritual life of a man must make its way by conviction through the heart; so that his mistake was that in endeavouring to serve his Master he forgot to follow Him. There were still men who would fall back upon Laud's methods, which would be quite right in their eyes if only they were used by their own side. So it was that generations passed, and yet the lessons which God would teach us were unlearned. The great lesson of all was that God's work must be done in God's way, which meant that we must be patient, trusting to persuasion and not to compulsion.

How easily we all fall into Laud's mistake of endeavouring to serve our Master while forgetting to follow Him. His work can only be done in his way; if we do it in ours, then it is our work, not his. He cannot be superseded in the least thing; He never can be safely overlooked or neglected. Without Him we can do nothing.

The words of Colonel Saunderson, spoken at a meeting in Dublin, ought to have peculiar force at this juncture of affairs in the Established Church. He said:—

> The Irish Church had received as they thought a very sad blow twenty-eight years ago, when it was disestablished and disendowed and separated from the Church of England. Although he voted against that measure at the time, yet if he could he would now undo that vote, for he believed the Irish Church at the present moment was stronger and more spiritual than it ever was before, and the very fact that they were not connected with the Church of England beyond similarity of faith and worship enabled them to take a stand as a pure Protestant Church and to make an appeal to those from whom they had been cut adrift.

This is the only way in which safety lies. The Bishop of Derry said to the Derry Synod that things lawful in England were not lawful in Ireland, and that if men broke the Church law in Ireland they were told, "You must cease to draw our money." Rev. Arnold Thomas, chairman elect of the Congregational Union, is of opinion that the great weakness of the Church of England is that she had never known her own mind since the Reformation; she does not know whether she recognises the priest or not. In Ireland they evidently do know, and are ready to act upon their knowledge. All who love our Lord Jesus Christ would rejoice to see a similar state of things on this side the water.

The battle of Omdurman, the significance of which is slowly working its way into the perception of the world, was remarkable not only for its fateful issues, but for the curious fact that it was the first battle for a great period of time where the larger portion of the combatants on both sides were Mohammedans. The rest, as it has been put, were chiefly Scotch Presbyterians, Irish Roman Catholics, and English and Welsh Nonconformists. The wheels of progress move along strange paths, and use means seemingly very incongruous. But whatever path is followed, and whatever means are employed, God's will works itself out slowly and surely. This is the severest blow that Mohammedanism has received for centuries. The victory of the Sirdar throws a vast area of land and many millions of people open to the free preaching of the Gospel. It is for Christian people now to go in and possess the opportunity.

That the Russian Czar is sincere in his peace policy is proved by the fact that The Government Messenger, the official organ, has entered the lists as an advocate. The figures there given of the present waste of treasure and human energy and time entailed by the gigantic armaments of the world are truly appalling. There are 5,250,000 soldiers in Europe just now on a peace footing; and these in a few weeks could be increased to the enormous total of 44,250,000 in the event of a universal war! The chief offender, it is confessed, is Russia herself, with 1,000,000 actual soldiers, and reserves amounting to 9,000,000 more, and the smallest offender, so far as her army is concerned, is this country, with only 220,000 and reserves of half a million men. The treasure expended annually throughout the Continent amounts to £250,000,000, which is the price, according to those who say that war can only be warded off by being fully prepared for war, of maintaining peace!

The Government Messenger goes further than to expose the evils of the present system; it proposes a remedy. Instead of the terrible arbitrament of the bayonet and cannon, it suggests the establishment of a Court of Arbitration, before which the questions dividing the nations may be settled. If only the mutual suspicions of diplomatists and would-be patriots could be allayed, how thankfully the heavily burdened peoples would hail this eminently sane and practical suggestion, and what widespread blessing would follow! As it is, the rapid onward march of the Peace movement and the progress of Christian ideas is most gratifying to those who have laboured long and faithfully to preach the good cause during the last half-century. A few years ago he would be a bold man who would prophesy that the despised principle of arbitration would to-day have been made a distinct item in the international programme of the greatest potentate on earth. And yet it has come true.

The Ethics of Hearing.—2.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

"Take heed how ye hear" (Luke viii. 18).
(Concluded.)

INDIFFERENCE of heart is the second line of opposition which the Gospel has to meet in the hearer.

The mind is the outpost of character, the heart is the citadel itself. It is possible to give attention to what is said, even to take a keen intellectual interest in it, and yet to be unaffected by it. The mood makes the mind. This is the tragedy of the religious life—that we can spend time periodically in company with great ideas, great truths, and yet live meanly. This is what is meant by being "sermon-hardened," so that the most quickening appeals pass by the soul with no more effect than the idle wind.

Most of us know the exaltation of mind that comes of spending a holiday in the midst of beautiful scenery. Under the shadow of glorious mountain peaks and glaciers, and the spell of forest and waterfall, it seems as though it would be impossible to fall again under the tyranny of evil tempers, and trivial purposes, and minor irritations. Nature's grand scope and peacefulness shames our petty lives. But a little acquaintance with those who spend their lives amid such surroundings will prove that many of them are dulled to it all; the spotless snows, the towering heights, the sunny slopes and vineyards, the wondrous sunsets are no more to them than they are to the cows and goats, to whom the landscape is nothing but a field of grass in which to nibble.

Well, the New Testament is like an Alpine landscape for beauty and grandeur, from which the breath of God's Spirit has swept the mists. Here are spotless heights of truth and purity to climb, gloomy depths of evil to shun, still waters and green pastures of meditation in which to roam, sweet flowers of promise to cull, the sound of many waters to soothe the ear, and a sight of the land that is very far off to cheer the eye. If we came to this wonderful book for the first time, and read it in all its freshness and power, we should, like many intelligent heathen, be caught up into the seventh heaven of ecstasy. And yet many of us live daily in the very midst of these moving conceptions of life, and sin, and God, and redemption, and are utterly cold and indifferent to it all! Such is the debasing effect of familiarity, working on a heart of indifference to the things of God. "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed." (Matt. xiii. 15).

3. But the most stubborn hindrance to the right hearing of the Gospel is yet to be mentioned—that is the disobedient will.

There are many who are keenly interested intellectually in religious problems, who are emotionally sensitive to eloquence and appeal, who are occasionally even awakened to a sense of sin—and yet there it ends. They are hearers of the word, and not doers thereof. It is an oft-forgotten truth that the work of the Gospel is not ended with making people feel its truth and power. That is the beginning of the process. It does not end till it has commanded obedience of will. Every truth has a duty which grows out of it somewhere, and the task of the hearer is not complete till he has realised the duty that is implied in every discourse to which he listens—and goes and does it. This is "the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." Thus we see that the Ethics of Hearing imply self-surrender and obedience, as the ultimate aim of it all; without which the finest preaching will be as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

For it is a law as rigid as the law of gravitation that in spiritual matters it shall be measured to you according to your response. As the soil responds to the seed, so shall be the harvest. As the surface reflects the light, so shall be its colour and lustre. As the river opens itself to the sea, so shall be the rising of its tide. As the soul reflects the light of God's truth, responds to it, opens itself to its influence, so will be the quality of its quickened life, and the measure of its power to rise into beauty and grace. It is the healthy eye, not the mere open window, that makes vision; it is the good hearer, not the eloquent preacher, that makes the real Christian. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

"The Morning with its Songs."

THOUGHTS ON PSALM CL.

By Rev. JOHN GRITTON, D.D.

THIS Psalm cl. closes the book. It is all joy and praise. All things in heaven and earth, all things sentient and material, live, and breathe, and bless, and praise. What an ending! The book throbs with sighs and moans. It is filled with cries of pain and shame. It records defeat and confusion. It is often like the moan of a wounded heart, or the panting of a thirsty deer. But all that is past. The hosanna of prayer is silent. Only the hallelujah of praise has now any place. Hallelujah! Praise God in his sanctuary! No longer is the saint in the depths: no longer are his feet in the horrible pit, or in the miry clay. He has come up thence. His feet are on a rock, and in his mouth a new song: "Praise Him in the firmament of his power!"

"This poor man cried, and the Lord delivered him," and lifted him on high by the might of his power. Let him, then, praise the Lord. The minor music of the conflict will no longer thrill the despondent heart, for the end has come, the morning with its songs.

Will not this become the experience of us all who cry to God, our Redeemer? Shall we not find at the end that nothing is left us but praise?

Behold it in David. In a sore crisis of his life (1 Sam. xxii.) the hunted fugitive wrote Ps. lvii. It is filled with fears and complaints in the earlier verses, but ere it closes faith reasserts itself, and the tone becomes one of confidence and victory. Twenty years later, in another terrible day of danger (2 Sam. viii.) David wrote Ps. lx., which, like the former Psalm, commenced with fears and complainings, but grew into praise and assurance. There stand the two psalms, records of faith sorely tried, and of tried faith gloriously triumphant. There is another psalm — the cviii.—which is full of triumph. How is it composed? Someone—I believe it was David himself in his later years—takes Psalms lvii. and lx., cuts each in half, drops out the verses of fear and doubt and complaints, takes the remaining psalms which tell of faith and victory, and puts them together, thus making Psa. cviii.

Many of us have to do the same. I look over old records, telling of fears, doubts, anxieties, forebodings suffered twenty or forty years ago. Records of storm and rebellion, of uprisings of the people, of friends changed, or lost, or dead; records of pressing need, of vanished supplies, of natural fears. I leave them there, with their mingled moan and song, their struggling complaints, and the records which mingle with them of deliverance and supplies and gladness. I leave them there, for they are full of warning and full of consolation; but in my heart is found a new song, and its theme is this: "My fears were needless; my faith was warranted. Hallelujah!"

There is a bigger book than this book of Psalms, with histories of passions and sorrows and fears and conflicts reaching through many generations before a psalm was written, and on to many generations after David had fallen on sleep. It palpitates with the awful records of a fallen race; it tells of death lingering from Adam to Moses, and from Moses to Christ. It is eloquent with the cry of the slave, the exile, the captive. It tells of sin and its exceeding sinfulness, of shame and its exceeding bitterness. Its voice reaches us from Eden and Babylon, from Palestine and Greece, from Europe and Asia. Its cry of pain comes to us from the plague, the famine, the battlefield, the heated furnace, and the lion's den. It bears to us the cry of mothers who in giving life lost their own, of fathers in their bitter cry over rebellious sons whom they had nourished and brought up. It comes to us laden with the burden of fallen dynasties and crumbled empires.

But it has something better than this, for from Abel to John it breathes to us the faith, hope, and assured anticipation of those who sinned and suffered, who fell and died. There is in it many a story of faith which subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, made weakness strength, defeat victory, death life, and shame glory. Chiefest of all it tells us of Jesus and his love—his cry in Psa. xxii. and his song in Psa. xvi., and many another. We hear his voice in Gethsemane, in the hall of judgment, from the cross, at the empty tomb, from Olivet. The whole record from creation to the Great White Throne is but Psa. lvii. and lx. written large, or the whole Book of Psalms dramatised.

Now, may we look for our Psa. cviii. or our Psa. cl.? If we look shall we find them? Yes, it is in the triumphal pæan with which the King of Glory goes forth to the last great battle of the closing despotism. Let us listen. "Alleluia! Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God. Alleluia! Amen, Alleluia! Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth! The kingdoms of the world are become the kingdom of the Lord and of his Christ." Yes. We shall review it all, and sing our hallelujahs, when Jesus Christ shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied; when He shall rest in his love, and shall rejoice over his ransomed with joy and singing. We shall tell it out in the day when "the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God." We shall review it all in the day when God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, and there shall be no more pain: for the former things are passed away! Wondrous grace and wisdom which work to this end! Glory be to God! The night is past, the shadows depart. We have been made more than conquerors through Him who loved us. We have come to the morning with its songs.

The River of Pleasures.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.*

"Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures."
—Psalm xxxvi. 8.

SO, then, God is the God of our pleasures. It is well for us thus to think of Him. And more than well; it is necessary. No man really knows God, no man thinks of Him rightly, until he thinks of God as the God of our pleasures. Pleasure is not meant to be the luxury of the rich; it is a necessity, a duty, a religion. Pleasure is needful to all healthy and true life. Therefore is it that God's love cannot rest in anything short of our pleasure. Heaven is at once the fulness and completion of God's love, and the fulness and completion of our service. The great mistake we make is in supposing that heaven is a place instead of a condition. It is now and here if we will have it, not only up there and in the future.

Let us get away to the river, and sit down by it under the shade of the trees. One of the best purposes of the holidays, and one of our chief aims, should be to store the chambers of the imagery with fair scenes. He is poor, indeed, and greatly to be pitied, who has no picture gallery that he carries with him, scenes fairer than any artist can paint—bits of God's own beauty hung up for ever in the mind. Sit here, then, in the shade, with the great blue stretch of heaven over us, the green grass for resting-place, and the flowers at our feet. Do you see that the river is heaven made available for earth—heaven come down to earth, put within its reach, and ministering to it? There are the great white clouds that go sailing above the world; the thirsty meadows cannot reach up to them, but, lo, they touch the mountains and pour out all their wealth, and the mountains store in their depths the beating rain, and send it down in a thousand rivulets and laughing waterfalls to join the brimming river.

Follow it as it goes on its course of blessing, its banks overhung with ferns and bright with flowers. Think how it hurries on to turn the dripping mill-wheel and to feed the hungry people. Do you remember how of old to the sleeping prophet there came an angel who baked him a cake and set at his head a cruse of water? So is it that in the rivers of water to bless men—to meet the thousand needs of the people, enough and to spare, as it goes on its way to the city that itself makes great. We should have had no London if it had not been for the Thames, and no Liverpool if it had not been for the Mersey. The river yields a highway to the ships that go with their cargoes to the ends of the earth.

Come back again to our resting-place. The river is heaven made available for earth. Look how it gives itself to the tree that overhangs it—the tree planted by the rivers of water, whose leaf shall not wither. See how a thousand creatures quench their thirst from it, and above it the happy birds sing as if it had brought them their joy.

And what is the river of the pleasures of God, but just this—God made available for us, God putting Himself most graciously within our reach? That is the meaning of everything that God has done in the world's history and is doing for us. There is in every developed religious life a threefold stage. First, God is. Then God is with us in the person of his Son. Then God is nearer yet and closer still—He is in us. By a spiritual communion, by an inwrought sense of love, He becomes our very possession. The love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost given unto us; and the river is ever the emblem of the Holy Ghost. "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God," and in the river we drink of Himself as the pleasure and satisfaction of our life. This is what He is seeking to make us know by all the revelation of his Word and by all the way of our life—that He is within reach, is available for us. This is the great teaching of the Lord Jesus.

God is not far off, as we thought, in his high heaven, amidst his holy angels; but nigh at hand, wrapping us about with his goodness, clothing us as He clothes the flowers, ministering to us as He ministers to the birds, but with a tenderness infinitely deeper and more gracious than they can ever know. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the children of God." What does that mean but that the great God in heaven comes down to give Himself to me, and puts Himself within my reach? I am to take his hand, to know Him as my own; I am to find his almighty power available for my weakness, to find his infinite wisdom guiding my steps. He Himself is to be my Friend, with whom I am to walk and talk. My life is to find in Him its refuge, its strength, its peace, its joy. As the river gives itself for the satisfying and gladdening of the earth, so my life is to be cheered and brightened, and gladdened and

BLEST BY HIS PRESENCE.

There it is—a thing available, not only to think about, not only to sigh for, but to drink of and live. The great love of God is really to minister to us, and refresh us, and satisfy us. This is what Jesus comes to bestow. "If thou knewest who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water."

And mark this word "satisfied," which applies to the river of God as well as to the provisions of his house. Only the river of God's pleasures can satisfy the whole nature. We are too great for any but our Creator Himself. There are deeper wants than any other can minister to, higher and greater needs than any other hand can satisfy. I was reading in the paper some time ago of the gold-fields that have been lately discovered in British Columbia. Here is an extract: "A miner from Klondyke, who has returned to Montana, tells of the great hardships experienced in the wild gold regions, and declares that in the course of three years he saw over two hundred graves. A large majority of the deaths had been caused by starvation. He admits, however, that gold abounds in the district." Was ever so grim a picture? There in the tent lies the gaunt skeleton, and tight in his bony grip the yellow gold, the hard and shining gold of which he had dreamed and for which he had toiled, and having which he said he would have all and be in need of nothing. And lo! he held the treasure in his grasp, and sank and DIED FOR WANT OF A CRUST OF BREAD.

There is a terrible price paid for the possession of many a thing that a man counts good—a higher price than even the miner paid for his gold. Truth, goodness, love, purity, honour, these are dead, dead whilst the man grasps the treasure that he coveted. How good to turn from such a scene to these words, "Thou wilt make them to drink of the river of thy pleasures," the river of the water of life which ministers to all within us, and brings a perfect satisfaction.

They told of old of a water by which the bitter memories were lost. But he who drinks of this river holds the joy of a past forgiven, blotted out, remembered against him no more for ever, cast into the depths of the sea, as if the waters of the river bare it on and on, away, away, until it sinks buried beneath the great billows of the ocean. Of old they sang of a river in which youth was renewed. But they who drink of this river have a life that is everlasting, ever new, ever young, ever fresh, ever glad, a river that bears us on and home to the fair city of God. Pleasure is ever a smaller thing than satisfaction, until we find our home in God. Then it is satisfaction brimming over into pleasure.

Is it not worth while for us to be still for a moment or two in the fever and fret of the world, and to ask ourselves, "What, after all, do I need? What is that which, if I lack, I yet lack all?" Well, I want a peace, assured, authoritative, spoken into my innermost heart, that only God can give. I want a new life, full, true, good—something that can touch the deepest springs of my nature, and sweeten all that is bitter, and purify all that is evil, and keep me ever at my highest and best. I want the grasp of a hand that will never let my own go. I want a home and refuge that can never fail me in the uncertainties of life, and in the certainties of death and eternity. How can they be mine? Here is the answer: "Thou shalt make them to drink of the river of thy pleasures." Not to think about it only, not to hear about it only, not to long for it only, but to drink. I must avail myself of that which is made so available; I must take that which is so freely given. "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

"O Lord, revive thy work, in the midst of the years."

ON Monday last Rev. G. Turner gave, at a largely attended gathering, a useful and cheering Bible-reading in defence of simplicity of character. In the course of his remarks Mr. Turner pointed out that to describe the Bible as "occasionally reliable" meant the destruction of confidence in it. He once attempted to gather water-lilies, but found it impossible to pull one without destroying all, for they were intertwined at the roots; so it was with the people who suggested that this or that portion should be dragged from the Scriptures.

Mr. Turner also alluded to the subtle growth of chicancry and double meaning, as illustrated by the conduct of the Dreyfus case, as an alarming sign of the times, and deprecated the appearance of similar duplicity amongst persons professedly of Christian life.

Several bright young workers gave interesting testimonies of soul-saving work in the suburbs of London; and Mr. Grove, referring to the tent at Tottenham, announced that it was proposed to continue the canvas tabernacle at its present site for another fortnight. Some pathetic instances of the salvation of children and parents, husbands and wives, evoked keen sympathy.

Other testimonies were given, notably one of aggressive work in Stepney, where a band of Christians awoke local interest by the simple process of kneeling in the roadway, amidst a gathering crowd of scoffers.

The Sunset.

Is it the time, when sunset comes, to weep?
Should we in tears be bathed, our thoughts of loss?
Blind to all other things, in sorrow deep
Lament that we must bear a heavy cross?

Not for such ends doth golden sunset's hour
Arrive, but to provoke to joyful praise
For work accomplished, for the painted flower,
The ripened fruit, the brightened earthly ways.

Also to stir men up to work and pray
Ere night prevent their holy exercise,
And God's "Well done!" be missed through their delay,
And they, heaven-called, be classed with the unwise.

The sunset comes to show us that our life
Must be completed in the great unseen,
With rest and peace in place of toil and strife,
The soul and God together, nought between.

The Mission to Lepers.—Mr. John Jackson, organising secretary, writes with reference to our report of the recent meeting in Exeter Hall that reliable estimates place the number of lepers in India, China, and Japan at one million. About half a million would probably be a correct estimate for India only, although the official number is less, owing to the many who from being hidden, or homeless, or from other causes, escape enumeration.

Miss Weston's "Silver Wedding."

IN the October issue of Ashore and Afloat Miss Agnes Weston tells the deeply interesting story of her twenty-five years' work among the bluejackets of Her Majesty's Navy. She says:—

A silver wedding marks an epoch in a life of leal and loyal love, service, and companionship—a radiant fulfilment of promises made in the morning of life. This year 1898 marks such an epoch in my own experience. In the year 1873 I heard a call—I believe from God—urging me to go forth from my happy home, and to give my life for the good of the men of the sea. Twenty-five years ago I stood for the first time upon the quarter-deck of a man-of-war. Some 800 or 1000 boys and young seamen were gathered before me. The captain and officers stood by my side, and I was allowed to speak to them any words of advice and friendship that I might wish. There are men, now pensioners, scattered about the country who remember that afternoon on board H.M.S. Impregnable, and who have since told me that it was the turning-point in their lives.

Twenty-five years ago a small gunboat, H.M.S. Dryad, returned from a foreign station to pay off at Devonport, and a deputation of bluejackets waited on me. They had heard that I cared for sailors, and was anxious to help them in every way. "Won't you open a coffee-shop for us," they said, "just outside the dockyard gates? It will be safe moorings for us, and will keep us from drink and all its temptations." I told them they had asked for something that it was out of my power to give them. I had not the money, or the friends, or the influence to get such a place, and, more than that, I foresaw that it would entail and a giving up of home and ease. A refusal trembled on my lips, when one of the men, a petty officer, broke in, "Don't say 'No,' Miss Weston; you'll break our hearts! We do want to have a Home, and you in it, that we can come to. Shipmates," addressing his companions, "let us pray about it." They all knelt down, those great, brave fellows, and their prayers would have melted a stone. They touched my heart, and enabled me then and there to say, "Here am I, send me." The Royal Sailors' Rest at Devonport is the outcome of a bluejacket's wish and a bluejacket's prayer.

Twenty-five years ago I met one who has been the help, solace, and inspiration of my life. Bright, sunny, and in the heyday of youth and health, she too counted the cost of this work, and gave herself to it, and together we have met the storm, and have rejoiced in the success. To Miss Wintz at least one-half of the credit should be given. For twenty-five years we have been sailing in the same ship, of one heart and one soul, our only desire to do God's work and God's will amongst our gallant bluejackets as long as health and strength are given to us.

Twenty-five years ago work commenced among the sailor boys. That work is going on now, and is one of our sheet-anchors.

Why do men call me "Mother"? Why do they write, as a man has just written to me from a ship of war on a foreign station?—

"I have known you ever since 1881. Shortly after joining H.M. Navy you addressed us boys on board H.M.S. Lion, and when I saw you I said to another boy, 'Is that the lady they call "Mother"?'

"'Yes,' was the reply.

"'Well, no wonder!' I said, 'she's got a mother's face.'

"I do feel certain that each Sunday, as you see the boys flocking round you, as they come ashore from the training-ships, you will be happy as you feel, 'I will be their "mother"; I will try to instil good thoughts into their minds. This shall be their home while they are ashore, and I will make things bright and cheerful for them.'

"You did all this for me once.

"Can you wonder that you are called 'Mother'?"

If I wonder, I thank God that He has enabled me in twenty-five years to strike this sweet, pure note, which brings its answering chord of sympathy from the hearts of the British blues.

The bright link of the silver wedding which unites me to the great sea service of the country seems like a mountain top, from which I can look back and see the path over which I have travelled, and the wondrous success that I owe to God alone. The words of friendliness spoken on board H.M.S. Impregnable were but the prelude to my addressing thousands of men on board British and American warships since: and by means of pen and printing-press I have been able, during the past year alone, to speak to over one million men of the sea—Royal Navy, United States Navy, merchant seamen, deep-sea fishermen, Coastguardsmen, lifeboatmen. The small Sailors' Rest outside the gates of the Royal Dockyard, started in response to the earnest petition of the men of H.M.S. Dryad, twenty-five years ago by Miss Wintz and myself, has become a mighty pile of buildings, which has cost over one hundred thousand pounds. The sister has cost much the same. In these two buildings, and our branch house at Keyham, Devonport, we housed last year 178,527 men, an increase on the year before of 31,631. Our receipts over the counters during the past year were £15,905 7s. 1d., an increase of £1021 over past years. The popularity of these Sailors' Rests is increasing by leaps and bounds, and our Navy is increasing also at a rapid rate. Twenty-five years ago the number of seamen and marines serving in the fleet was about 60,000, now it is over 100,000, so that the silver wedding epoch finds me surrounded by nearly double the men and boys that were with me when I began work.

An incident occurred the other day that was worth untold gold to me. A comely looking woman asked to speak to me after one of my meetings. She said: "I have come some distance to see you, and to thank you for your kindness to my boys. I have seven sons; every one of them is in Her Majesty's Service. The Sailors' Rests have been homes to them, and have led them into all's that good; and now you've got my youngest boy. He is in the training ship. I say, from the bottom of a mother's heart, God bless you and the Sailors' Rests." These are some of the cheering testimonies that come to me after twenty-five years.

Twenty-five years ago I had little or no acquaintance with the wives and families of the bluejackets; now we are surrounded by sailors' wives. The old sea song says, "A sailor's wife a sailor's star should be," and what a blessing such a star is in the horizon of a storm-tossed mariner! "My wife is my sheet-anchor," a man enthusiastically said the other day; "I feel her pulling at me the other end of the world if I'm getting on a lee shore."

MANY TRIALS AND DIFFICULTIES

are in the path of the sailor's wife. Her husband is away for three or four years at a time, and she has to do the best she can with sometimes a large family and small pay. Our guilds and meetings for sailors' and marines' wives are very large, both at Portsmouth and Devonport, and our friendships with them are very warm and strong. Miss Brown and my lady workers do an immense deal of good in visiting them at their homes, and our nurses watch over them when sick.

To commemorate my silver wedding year, I am desirous of raising a sum of £5000 to complete our buildings at Portsmouth and Devonport. The Navy has grown so fast that the Sailors' Rests are not large enough. A large sum—over a quarter of a million—has been entrusted to me in the twenty-five years. I can account for every penny, and I can show that every portion of the money has been laid out to the best advantage. I want this Silver Wedding Fund to reach £5000, £200 for every year of service."

The Imperial Protestant Federation has been formed for the purpose of uniting the Colonies and British Dependencies with the United Kingdom in a federation of all classes and religious denominations, determined to maintain Protestant supremacy, as opposed to Romish and sacerdotal, or infidel ascendency, in every branch of the constitution and life of the Empire. Colonel Sandys, M.P., has been elected chairman of the Provisional Committee, and the following societies have already joined the Federation, viz.: The Church Association, Protestant Alliance, Protestant Reformation Society, Women's Protestant Union, Scottish Reformation Society, Scottish Protestant Alliance, and the Trinitarian Bible Society. The Federation consists of members of all political parties, determined to place Protestantism before mere party politics. "ISAIAH CALLED TO SERVICE."—Isaiah vi. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send; and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me."

AFTER the death of Joash, Amaziah reigned over Judea, and then Uzziah. The revival of religion, which took place during the reign of Joash, resulted in great strength and material prosperity during the two following reigns. This again was followed by a decline. Isaiah prophesied during the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.

THE VISION (1-4).

This is an account of Isaiah's call to his work. Teacher should describe the vision with explanations of terms.

Train.—His royal robes.

Seraphim.—"The burning ones." Six wings to indicate their preparedness for service. Covering their faces and feet to express awe.

Their praise was such that the "foundations of the thresholds trembled," and incense of praise filled the building.

CONVICTION OF SIN (5).

Prophet overcome not by the glory of the multitude but by the holiness of the Most High. The contrast between himself and God was so great.

Compare Peter's cry, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord."

Illustration.—Put a sheet of writing paper which has been lying upon the writing desk for days on the bare desk and it seems moderately clean. But put it beside a perfectly fresh piece just drawn from the packet and every spot and stain shows up. So it is with men when they compare themselves with others—they appear fairly good. But put them beside the spotless Christ and at once they are convinced of sin.

FORGIVENESS (6, 7).

The seraphim burned with devoted zeal for the Most High. God's love is ever ready to cleanse from sin, but it is only when that love kindles a corresponding flame in us that we realise God's power and willingness to forgive.

Note.—(1) A man must realise his need of forgiveness before the blessing of sins forgiven can come to him.

(2) The sinner must regard God as Love—not sceptically, or critically—before he can possibly believe that God is willing to forgive.

(3) He must realise God's almightiness before he can conceive that God is able to forgive.

CALL TO SERVICE (8).

God calls all men into his service. Just as possible to learn your lessons at the call of God as for the minister to preach his sermon in obedience to that voice. "To every man his work." Teacher should emphasise the fact that God's men are needed in every walk of life. Where sin is darkest there most need of the light.

God's service demands:—

(1) Free offer of all our powers. No man is pressed into the work. One volunteer is worth ten pressed men. In how many ways is God still saying, "Whom shall we send, and who will go for us"?

(2) Consecration of all our powers. The surrender of everything we have and are. "Send me."

HARD WORK (9-12).

He was to declare God's denunciation against ease and sin. The result would be that the people would hear, but not understand; they would see the right way, but would not walk in it. "Lord, how long?" This is the cry of every patient worker for God. He sees the result as above, and says, "Is it to be thus for ever?" No. There shall be

ULTIMATE SUCCESS (13).

When the people have been brought into captivity and punished for their wickedness, then they will turn. Only a small portion shall come back home. But the choice ones are always small in number. But this small number shall be like a "teil tree"—one that shoots up from the stump however often it is cut down. The world is to be won for Christ. This hopes inspires. Much failure and delay, but "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, October 16.

"Righteous and true are thy ways, Thou King of the ages."—Rev. xv. 3 (R.V.).

THIS is the scene of the deliverance from Pharaoh on the shores of the Red Sea, translated into the imagery and language of eternity. The hosts of God shall emerge ere long from their long oppressions, by suffering they shall conquer, they shall come off victorious from the beast, and from his image, and from the number of his name. Behind them shall be spread out the sea of time, so calm and still, so hushed from all its tumult and storm, that it shall seem to be like sheets of glass; and as the morning of eternity breaks, it shall be drenched with fire. Fire here is probably an emblem of the holiness and the judgments of God.

Israel broke into rapturous thanksgiving as the people saw their enemies dead upon the shore. "Sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider He hath cast into the sea." But those triumphant notes, though chanted by an entire nation, shall be as a whisper compared with that song which shall break in thunder from the saints of all the ages. Those who were brought up under the dispensation of Moses, and the followers of the Lamb in the present dispensation, together with all holy souls who have overcome, shall constitute one vast choir.

But search the song of Moses as you will, you will fail to find one note that equals this in sublimity. Here are the saints of God, trained in distinguishing the niceties of righteous and holy government and behaviour, enabled from their vantage-ground in eternity to survey the entire history of the Divine dealings, adoring Him as King of the Ages, and acknowledging that all his ways had been righteous and true. What a confession! What an acknowledgment!

MONDAY, October 17.

"Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth."—Rev. xvi. 15.

The Second Advent will come on men generally suddenly and unexpectedly. When they say, Peace and Safety, then sudden destruction shall overtake them, as travail a woman with child, and they shall not escape. With the rapidity of the lightning flash, with the suddenness of a flood or avalanche, with the surprise of the midnight robber, Christ will come. When men are asleep, when every bolt and fastening refuses admittance, when the streets are still and hushed, behold the Judge will stand before the door.

The allusion may be to a Jewish custom in the service of the Temple. Twenty-four wards or companies were appointed right by night to guard the various entrances to the sacred courts. One individual was appointed as captain or marshal over the others, called the "Man of the Mountain of the House of God." His duty was to go round the various gates during the night to see that his subordinates were faithful to their charge. Preceded as he was by men bearing torches, it was expected that each wakeful sentinel should hail his appearance with the password, "Thou Man of the Mountain of the House, peace be unto thee!" If through unwatchfulness and slumber this were neglected, the offender was beaten with the staff of office, his garments were burnt, and he was branded with shame for failure in his duty.

It was in contrast with these slumbering Levites that Jesus pronounces a blessing on his own people who watch and keep their garments, and are saved from the reproach of spiritual nakedness. Let us, therefore, wait for the promise of his coming, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God.

TUESDAY, October 18.

"Drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."—Rev. xvii. 6.

Pagan and papal Rome have had to contend with an unbroken line of the witnesses of Jesus. In the words of an exiled Huguenot, "Since the birth of anti-Christianity, there have not been wanting those who have cried against its errors and idolatries." They have been called by various names, Paulicians, Waldenses, Albigenses, Wicliffites, Lollards, Lutherans, Zwinglians, Pietists, and Schismatics, but God never left Himself without witness. They might all have adopted the symbol and motto of one of them, "A lighted candle in a candlestick," with the words, "The light shineth in darkness."

But how terribly has the vision of the text been verified. Think of the persecutions under the Emperors, when the entire empire was filled with fire and sword. Take the single instance of the Empress Theodora, who slaughtered and drowned one hundred thousand of these Paulician Christians. During the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries Romanism, then in the plenitude of its power, gathered itself for a great, determined, and persistent effort to crush out all that opposed its supremacy, and to clear Christendom of heresy. The Inquisition established its horrid tribunal for making inquest after unseen, secret heresy, and wherever any revival of true religion took place, or any confessors of Christ could be found, they were hunted, if possible, to death.

We have not yet resisted unto blood, in the strife against the sin and evil of our time. It is not that the world or the professing church loves us better, but, probably, we are deficient in the spirit that lived in the martyr's breast. O Spirit of the Living God, kindle that flame of love again which shall make us willing to suffer the loss of all, even of life, for the sake of the Lord Jesus!

WEDNESDAY, October 19.

"Come forth, my people, out of her."—Rev. xviii. 4 (R.V.).

We cannot be surprised to find that God has people in the midst of Babylon. Probably in the most corrupt days there has always been a remnant of 7000 who have not bowed the knee or kissed the hand to Baal. It is the presence of true, though benighted, piety which has perpetuated the existence of organisations which are an offence and a stumbling-block. But their presence in such company cannot be tolerated. Abraham must come out of Ur, and Lot out of Sodom.

The place from which we can exert the strongest influence for good is not from within, but from without. Lot lost all influence of his life in Sodom; but Abraham, from the heights of Mamre, was able to exert a mighty influence on its history. Obadiah might hide the prophets of God by fifties in a cave; but Elijah, from the Mount of Carmel, was able to exterminate the priests of Baal, and call back again the people's hearts to God. Luther outside the Church did what Erasmus, with all his learning, never did. In answer to a spirit given to change and hungering for novelty, it is surely better to abide where you were when called of God; but when conscience and consistency, our influence upon others, and our protest against sin are concerned, let us come out and be separate, and not touch the unclean thing.

THURSDAY, October 20.

"Blessed are they which are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb."—Rev. xix. 9 (R.V.)

At the epoch described in the text we behold the Church of Christ unveiled and visible to heaven and earth. She has laid aside her weeds of sorrow, her ashen garments, her evidences of persecution and rejection, and stands forth a monument of grace, the masterpiece of Christ, the joy of the Bridegroom's heart. There will be no churches then, but one Church, which will contain within her borders the believing ones of all the churches.

The marriage supper, it has been truly said, is the arrival of that epoch which the redeemed of every age have anticipated. It has been the longed-for day of patriarchs, the glowing prediction of prophets, the burden of songs, the hope of the Church, the era for which creation groans and the sons of God pray.

But there must be a present character to fit us for this future felicity. Who are they that are thus called to the marriage supper? They are of every kindred, nation, people, and tongue, who have accepted the promises and invitations of the everlasting Gospel, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Let us now pass on that invitation; let him that heareth say Come. Let us go forth into the highways and hedges and compel men to come in, that God's feast may be furnished with guests.

FRIDAY, October 21.

"A great white throne."—Rev. xx. 11.

But that judgment will not affect those who have fled to the refuge of his wounds. These cannot come into judgment. "He that believeth on Him is not judged" (John iii. 18 R.V.). "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath eternal life, and cometh not into judgment" (v. 24 R.V.). Let us always distinguish between the judgment of the world-spirit when Jesus died, the judgment of sin on the cross, the judgment which awaits each believer as to the use he has made of his talents and the work he has done in the world; and, finally, the last great judgment, which has to do with those who have refused the love and light of God, and have voluntarily cast in their lot with Satan. "If any was not found written in the Book of Life, he was cast into the lake of fire."

SATURDAY, October 22.

"The sea is no more."—Rev. xxi. 1.

All through this book we hear the clash of the waves. Throughout there is the voice of many waters. But when there dawns on the eye of the seer the bright and blessed time, which is yet to come, when the new heavens and earth appear, this is among the chief attractions of that glorious world—that there is no more sea. The sea is a characteristic emblem of this age, but not of the next.

There shall be no more painful mystery.—"Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known." To the Jew there was a double mystery in the sea—that which lay in its sunless caves, and that which lay beyond the rim of the horizon; and because there was mystery there was dread and alarm. We, too, live on the shores of mystery, and float above it, with only a plank between it and us. But there we shall know as we are known, our questions answered, our problems solved.

There shall be no more rebellious power.—"The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice." The sea is the emblem of untamed power. Lashed into yeasty foam, it drives the great ships before it and eats into the land. Men cry, Let us break his bands asunder, and cast away his cords. But God laughs at them. Remember the motto that England struck on its medal to celebrate the destruction of the Armada: "The Lord blew upon them, and they were scattered." And so shall it be one day when all proud opposition to his will is vanquished.

There shall be no more disquiet and unrest.—Life is like a voyage over the sea—now miles of calm, then days of storm; now monotonous and slow progress, then the awful stress of peril and threatening death. Outside of Christ life is like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, but casts up mire and dirt. But yonder there will be unbroken peace and rest.

SUNDAY, October 23.

"His servants shall do Him service, and they shall see his face, and his name shall be on their foreheads."—Rev. xxii. 4. (R.V.)

Service.—In the disciples' prayer the Lord taught us that the will of God is done in heaven. Not that there is any breach in its perfect rest. Activity there will be as easy and natural as the play of the bees among the limes, or of minnows in the pool. There will be no strain, no effort, no exhaustion. To stay those ministries which the blessed render to Him would be intolerable pain. They would be weary with forbearing, and could not stay.

Vision.—"They shall see his face." Here, through a glass darkly; there, face to face. Here, as when the two walked to Emmaus, and knew not their companion, though their burning hearts might have told them the secret; there, as when their eyes were opened, and they knew Him (though He will not vanish from our sight). What a glad surprise!

Transfiguration.—"His name shall be on their foreheads." The name of God is the totality of the Divine perfection and beauty, and the bearing of his name on their foreheads indicates that they are becoming like Him, whilst they see Him as He is.

They passed
Beyond the flaming bounds of time and space!
The living throne, the sapphire blaze,
Where angels tremble as they gaze,
They saw—

and they were satisfied, as they awoke in his likeness.

On page 9 particulars are given of the new series of meditations to begin next week—"Day by Day." The occasion offers an opportunity for earnest Christians to commend systematic Bible study to the attention of their friends; and we shall take it as a great kindness if readers will at the same time call the attention of their acquaintances to "Day by Day." Cards containing the Daily Chapter and Notes on it may be obtained from Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's, Stepney, with whose Daily Bible Readings ours synchronise.

Just Published.—Our Daily Homily, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. Vol. I., Genesis—Ruth; Vol. II., 1 Samuel—Job. (1/6, or Presentation Edition, 2/-: Morgan & Scott.) Will be followed at short intervals by Vol. III., Psalms—Song of Solomon; Vol. IV., Isaiah—Malachi; Vol. V., Matthew—Revelation.

Missionary Good-byes.

THERE was a crowded meeting on Tuesday evening last week, in Exeter Hall, London, of the members and friends of the who had gathered together for the purpose of bidding a public farewell to missionaries leaving for Africa, Western India, South India, Travancore, Ceylon, China, and Japan. The chair was taken by Sir John Kennaway, M.P., who said that shortly their friends to whom they said good-bye that night would be scattered far and wide in the different fields which had been allotted to them. There were ninety-nine missionaries returning to the field, and sixty-six going out for the first time, making a total of 165. It was a small band, but great things had been done by small forces; and with the power of God upon them, he believed they would do great things for the glory of his name. They were all engaged in the same object, whether at home or abroad. They were fellow-workers with Christ, building up that Church which He loved, and for which He gave his precious life. Those present were going to fields of varied interest—Africa, India, China, and Japan.

Africa,

the first object of the Society's efforts, and occupying the first place in the title of the Society, demanded their attention and labour. They rejoiced to think that those who were going out were going to do something towards repaying England's great debt to Africa. England had wronged her deeply in the past. But England had not feared to send forth the best of her sons and daughters to redeem that wrong, and to help her as much as possible in the time to come. The precious lives that had been laid down on the shores of West and East Africa had not been laid down in vain. Churches had been built, and were now self-supporting and self-extending. The East and West of Africa were connected by a chain of missions. Those present were going to help to build up a kingdom which should endure. Those who were going to would find her recovering from plague, famine, and war, but it was a time of very peculiar interest. A new Viceroy of great ability, culture, and travelled experience entered upon the government of that greatest of England's dependencies. They most earnestly asked for him wisdom and power to guide the forces of that great and wondrous nation committed to our charge. At the present moment the chief Sees of India were practically vacant, and Dr. Welldon was going forth from Harrow into a splendid field for the exercise of his great talents. He had before him a unique opportunity. They rejoiced to know of his great sympathy with the work to which those present had set their hands, and they knew that he would give to the missionary cause all the help that lay in his power.

There was much wisdom required at the present time. Rome, ever aggressive, was strongly entrenched there, and fully equipped. Some of their friends were going to Japan and China—Japan, active, educated, and restless. China, he thought there could be no doubt, was falling to pieces. Politicians hesitated as to their course of action. But those present who were going to China would enter the country as the heralds of the King of kings, proclaiming his right to all the nations of the earth, and so they would have the sure certainty that they had a mission, and that there would be behind them the power of carrying it out. Their friends always had the assurance of strength behind them and power which would enable them to have company and companionship which would not fail them; and so, though outwardly weak and over-matched, yet behind them there was that power which must ultimately win.

Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. secretary to the Society, having introduced the departing missionaries to the meeting, brief addresses were delivered by eight of their number. Canon Trotter, of Barnet, said the evening would be long remembered by many of those present. Let their friends go forth on their missions with the thought that everyone there was pledged to plead to God for them and all who worked in his name. In the recent victory in the Soudan they had a picture of what the Church of Christ might do. They saw there perseverance, pluck, courage, science, and power, all brought to bear to carry out the great purpose of overthrowing the Mahdi's power, and they had seen the victory given to our arms. They saw that great country now open before them, a picture of what they believed would be the result of the onward advance of Christ's soldiers, when they were filled with his spirit. Instead of seeing those sad lines of white-robed Dervishes on the plain, they would see a white-robed throng joining with them before the throne of God.

A Second Meeting.

The second farewell meeting took place on Wednesday evening at Exeter Hall. The chair was occupied by Sir Douglas Fox, and the address to the candidates was delivered by Prebendary J. Lunt, Rector of Walcot, Bath. Among the devoted band about to sail, or who have already departed, are several qualified medical practitioners of both sexes. An advance party to Khartoum has already been organised. The chairman said they offered their warmest sympathy to their brethren and sisters who were going forth to their work. There was still terrible need for encouragement and for strengthening the Christian labourers in foreign lands. A great part of the work lay among Mohammedans. At the present moment they specially looked to Egypt, and to following up with the Gospel the victorious arms of our country. Sir H. Kitchener had overcome the Mahdi, and it was for them now to extend the Master's kingdom in that dark land. They felt that before long the Nile and South Africa must be in close touch. The meeting was addressed by four of the experienced missionaries and by a similar number of recruits.

North African Mission.

Farewell meetings were held at Exeter Hall last week under the auspices of this Mission. Mr. John McVicker presided over the afternoon gathering, and stated that the twenty-five missionaries whom they were dismissing included five new workers, three of whom were present. Medical work was now undertaken by several labourers on the field. Revs. Frank H. White and W. Fuller Gooch delivered addresses, and Dr. Terry gave an account of his work among Mohammedans. Dr. Soltau presided at night, when several missionaries spoke.

A valedictory meeting in connection with the Church of England Zenana Mission was also held last week, when a number of outgoing lady workers were earnestly commended to God for service among their heathen sisters.

The Veil Uplifted.

When the veil shall be uplifted,
Hiding from our mortal sight
All that scene of wondrous glory
Where the saints are robed in white,
I shall see what now I see not,
Hear what none on earth may hear;
Walk in everlasting sunshine,
With my Saviour's presence near.

When the Saviour home shall call me,
There to taste eternal joy,
Washed in his all-cleansing fountain,
Praise shall be my glad employ;
Where, 'midst angels gathered round Him,
Streams of heavenly music flow,
I shall join th' angelic chorus,
Such as none on earth may know.

When our pilgrimage is ended,
All its pains and perils o'er,
Sin and sorrow gone for ever,
Never to assail us more,
I shall tune my harp with gladness,
Where, in robes of glory dressed,
Round the throne the angels worship,
Sinless and for ever blest.

"Glory, glory, hallelujah!"—
Such their song, for ever new—
"Unto Thee, our God and Saviour,
Everlasting praise is due!
Thou hast made us glad for ever,
In thy presence to abide;
Thine we are, O blessed Saviour,
And in Thee are satisfied."

Clevedon. Wm. Kitching.

House of Rest.—The autumn session of meetings held in the Pillar Room, 10, Finchley-road, commenced last Friday with a searching and impressive address by Rev. H. B. Macartney, who expounded 1 John ii. 13, 14. Colonel Oldham addressed the meeting in the evening.

IRELAND.

Dublin Christian Convention.

TWENTY-FIVE years have passed since the first of these conventions was held, and at each successive gathering how many well-known faces are missed of those who, in their day, stood nobly for the truth and work of the Gospel in the Irish capital!

Comparing this Dublin Conference with others, one notices in an even special degree the goodly muster of clergy and ministers present, both on the platform and among the audience. There is a reason for this. In a Roman Catholic country, where Protestantism is systematically discounted, it is a great thing for its adherents, and particularly its teachers, to show a united front. The necessity is not only recognised, but loyally and heartily carried out. This, again, has its influence upon the design of the meetings, which is not so much to consider a set subject, or introduce a school of thought, but to present a series of addresses dealing each with some phase of Biblical truth, from ministers representing different sections of the Protestant church. There are, of course, advantages and disadvantages in this. On the one hand, each speaker is unhampered, and free to bring of his best to the feast. On the other hand, there is unavoidably a lack of sequence between one address and another, but even this affords opportunity for a speaker to exercise grace (not to say occasional ingenuity!) in the dovetailing of some of his remarks with those of his brethren; and as comparatively few of the hearers are able to attend all the meetings, they probably find this arrangement as profitable as one that provides for a continuous line of thought throughout.

The topics considered were as practical as varied, and each address was enjoyed in turn. If there was none that stood out pre-eminently among its fellows, neither was there one below par. This might be expected when the speakers included such men as Canon Harley (Cork), Pastor Theodore Monod (Paris), Revs. W. Y. Fullerton (Leicester), Campbell Morgan (London), S. R. Macphail (Liverpool), Geo. Jackson (Edinburgh), W. E. Burroughs (C.M.S.), A. Parker (L.M.S.), Foster Pegg (St. Leonards), Colonel Saunderson, M.P., and others.

The last-named, as chairman of the opening meeting, gave a rousing send-off to the Conference in what was certainly the address of the evening (Monday), on "The Ireland of to-day," a subject in which he was well at home. His strong points were that Christians must convince the Irish people that the Gospel and the Bible are not bound up in party colours, nor clad in political garb; that they ignore racial distinctions and make for unity and peace. He regarded with great concern the present condition of affairs in the Church of England as most dangerous to the Protestant faith, and subversive of that great Church which our forefathers helped to build up with their blood. Here in Ireland is found genuine Romanism at the door, and there must not be allowed any wanderings in that direction. The Church of Ireland to-day holds out to Christendom an example of what the sister Church should be. Whether it be the Church of Ireland, the Presbyterian, Methodist, or Independent Churches, they are all Protestant, bound together by that name of which they are not ashamed; and so long as they stick together and hold up the true colours from which our forefathers never flinched, the Protestantism of Ireland would remain as it is to-day—an example to the Christian world. As an Irishman and a Protestant to the backbone, he did not despair, for he believed that the sun of prosperity is shining on Ireland to-day, and with the help of God, her present position would be but the forecast and the presage of brighter and happier days in the Ireland of to-morrow.

Rev. G. R. Wedgwood followed with a weighty expression of opinion on the present condition of things, first, however, congratulating the trustees of the Christian Union Buildings in which the meetings were held on their courage in attempting the renovation which now added so much to their comfort. He hoped that the benevolent Christian public would not allow a heavy debt to remain long. By the death of Mr. John R. Fowler the United Committee and the Evangelical Alliance had lost their staunchest friend, Dublin had lost one of her most upright and devoted citizens, and the Church had lost one of the most remarkable philanthropists that this century could boast of. Proceeding, he said that Ireland was in a state of flux, and beyond all question the flowing tide of public opinion was with righteousness, truth, and freedom. But in the condition of the country to-day there was a dark side.

In both town and country there was a vast amount of chronic poverty. In the workhouses there was an annual average of over 42,000 inmates, and about half a million people received either indoor or outdoor relief during the year. Besides these there were many thousands whose life was one of grinding poverty. This serious problem was being grappled with in many ways. And it must not be overlooked that there were rural slums as well as city slums. The amount spent on drink was perfectly appalling. If what was spent on this curse last year had been devoted to caring for the poor it would have emptied every workhouse in the kingdom—nay, for every indoor and outdoor pauper it would have provided over £100. Again, there had been a remarkable development of the love of pleasure. Herein is a great danger, for devotion to what are called popular pleasures means a great tax upon energies and time and money that should be consecrated to higher ends. This has especially shown itself in the public desecration of the Lord's Day. Once more, the speculation spirit has taken possession of thousands of men and women. Herein also lies a great national peril. All these are the

DARK SHADOWS OF THE NATIONAL LIFE.

It is folly to shirk them, or to close our eyes to them. How to get rid of them is the question. No tinkering policy would do it. To accomplish this great work there must first be buried all sectarian bigotry and prejudices.

Thank God, there is a bright side to the national character and life! To-day Ireland is comparatively peaceful—free from those terrible forms of social disorder which some time ago filled the land with unrest and fear. To-day she is more prosperous than she has ever been. There is more work, with a better wage. Education has grown by leaps and bounds. A spirit of hearing is upon the people. Christians must rise to the occasion and boldly seize the golden opportunity.

Canon Harley, next morning, reviewing the troublous outlook in many lands, likewise maintained the all-sufficiency of the Gospel of Christ to mitigate the ills of human life. It is our privilege and duty to protest against error, to try and send the Evangelical cry throughout the world, to rally together in the fear of God and the fulness of revelation as given in the Bible alone. Attempts are being made to do away with the Atonement, Revelation, Inspiration, and even with Redemption, leaving only and this is the cause of the indifferentism seen on every hand. Personal contact with the Lord Jesus Christ is the remedy for all the evil, and this, with a spirit of abnegation, and a desire to minister rather than to be ministered to, would make the home, the State, and the Church happy; would do away with the charge of self-seeking and ambition sometimes urged against Christians; and would especially remove the stigma that, though they all had the same Bible, yet they hated each other. Let our rule of life be Christ in the midst, Christ in the heart, Christ in the life, and then the world would be won for Him.

There was an earnestness of purpose about the messages of Pastor Fullerton which touched a responsive chord in the hearts of the audience each time he spoke. One of his addresses we hope to give at greater length next week; of the other two the subjects were "Our Cross and Christ's Yoke," and

"THE UNPRODIGAL SON."

We hear a great deal, he said, about Christian advancement, but this cannot exist without the bearing of the cross and the taking up of Christ's yoke. There can be no Christianity without self-denial, but self-denial is not merely cutting off the excrescences of our nature, curbing ourselves, or keeping ourselves within the ordinary bounds of morality. Common civilisation would teach that. Self-denial consists in not thinking about self at all. The world says, "Follow me, and I will give you nothing in the end," and a good many folk close with the bargain. Christ's "Follow Me" means not only glorious reward on earth but glory everlasting afterwards. We are asked to take the cross, not to make it. A good many people make their own and think themselves most holy when they are only most miserable. Things forced on one became irksome to bear and a veritable cross, but when voluntarily taken up they cease to be burdensome. For instance, one would rebel against being forced to become an abstainer, but if for the sake of his fellow-men a man becomes an abstainer voluntarily, though it might be a deprivation or a cross, it is easy to bear. Then, again, the fact that Christ's yoke is shared by Christ Himself makes it additionally light. It is in working for others and caring for our fellow-men that we find true rest ourselves.

There was to some extent a sequence between this line of thought and that taken in connection with the elder brother in the parable. Those who remain in the home claim consideration as well as those who wander, and the thought may be carried still further in the care of the invalid and those who are unable to pursue the activities of life. Comparing the prodigal with the unprodigal son, there are some people who are not big sinners because they are not bold enough to be so; others who would not give up their righteousness or their religion, yet believe in their secret hearts that they do not have as good a time as worldly people have. There is meekness, and what is better than to be dutiful is to be glad.

Two useful and timely utterances came from Rev. S. R. Macphail upon "Inspired Living" and "Inspired Preaching." He urged that God raised up different people that they might bear special fruit, and He would bless them according as they made their influence felt in the direction of promoting the honour of God among their fellow-men. There was no secret in inspired living, but the great open secret of the spirit that can truly say, "Not my will, but thine; Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He took the Book of Acts as exemplifying what constituted an inspired ministry, in which God the Holy Ghost was the prime mover. Converts were "added to the Lord"; "the hand of the Lord was upon" the Apostles, who "so spake that many believed." He thought that the reason blessing was especially experienced at revival meetings was because both speakers and hearers went

EXPECTING A BLESSING.

God the Holy Ghost "opened a door of faith" to the Gentiles; (Dorcas) "whose heart the Lord opened"—are we not apt to lose sight of the Divine side by being taken up too much with the human side of our work? When the Holy Ghost thus moves the hearts of men to feel their need of Him it will not be necessary to drag men to Christ; they will be only too ready to come. The speaker's words were particularly forceful because he spoke from the ministerial standpoint; he appreciated the desires and difficulties of his brethren, and while cordially recognising the value of education, method, and hard study, he felt the danger of putting a misplaced emphasis on mere machinery to the sometime exclusion of the Holy Spirit.

One of the most practical exhortations of the Conference was Rev. George Jackson's plea for more charitable judgments. "Let us not judge one another any more" was its basis, and he gave some hard hits. "Harsh, reckless, loose, rash, off-hand, irresponsible," were some of his outspoken expressions, and they were well justified by examples given, which unfortunately were only too easily recognisable as "true to life." In another lucid address on "Is the Sermon on the Mount the Christian Gospel?" he thoughtfully contended that it was never meant to be the sum and substance of the Gospel message, but no one can truly and fully accept that wonderful discourse without accepting a great deal more besides. Its morality and theology are inextricably interwoven, and in it are contained the fundamental elements of Christian faith—implicit rather than explicit perhaps—so that it is impossible to stop at the precepts laid down without going on to the doctrines to which they point.

Pastor Theodore Monod, always a welcome speaker, had a little surprise in store for his hearers arising from the subtle wording of the title of one of his subjects. "Our Income" did not, as was anticipated, deal with the disbursement of wealth, but with the fulness of the inheritance which the believer has in Christ. On another occasion he drew instructive comparisons between the thoughts contained in the verses, "There is nothing new under the sun" and "Behold, I make all things new." On the subject of "Atheists," he said atheism meant "without God." There were some men who denied that there was a God at all. They said Christ never gave the slightest demonstration of the existence of God any more than He demonstrated the existence of a soul in man. That was true; but when they went into the mystery of the existence of the Deity, and said there was nothing at the beginning, that was ridiculous. Nothing could come out of nothing. The men who denied God, or who, while believing that He did exist, denied his attributes, were worse than the heathen. Some of those had gods of their own, some of which were outwardly beautiful, and others which were decidedly not. Their characters, too, were less beautiful than their appearance, for if Jupiter were in Dublin, and behaved as he was said to behave, he would be taken by the police, and would have to go before a jury. Some of these gods were everything vile. One was a god of robbers, and he was sorry to say the same god was the god of public speakers! If people in the world were satisfied with a mere notion about Divinity or about God they were practically atheists, hard though the term might be. The and of modern society was God, and the solution of all social questions was to be found in the knowledge and possession of the true God. In fine, the great crying need of the Church of Christ was to know, to love, and to serve God.

"The Hidden Years at Nazareth" afforded material for a richly interesting talk from Rev. Campbell Morgan, whose other address on "Ye are My Witnesses" will be given at length in a succeeding issue. The only pity is that limits of space preclude fuller reference to many other helpful utterances—from Dr. W. J. Clarke on "Our Lord's Prayer for Unity"; Rev. John Stewart on "The Need of Spiritual Power"; Rev. W. E. Burroughs on "The Church's First Miracle" (Acts iii.); and Rev. H. Foster Pegg on "The Best We Have" and "The Master's Commendation."

A hearty missionary meeting was held on Wednesday evening, notes of which will be given next week, as also accounts of work done by the Bible Colportage Society, and the Open-air Mission for Ireland. A word of appreciation must be added of the space devoted to the Convention day by day in The Irish Times and The Daily Express. It is not often that the "secular Press" rises so well—and wisely—to the opportunity of winning the interest and commendation of its numerous religious readers. Others please copy! G.

Medical Missions.

A DEPUTATION from the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, comprising Dr. E. Sargood Fry, superintendent, Mr. G. A. Barclay, organising secretary, and Mr. Wm. Bentall, one of the students of the Society, have held a series of successful missionary meetings in several of the leading centres of Ireland. Among the places visited were Cork, Waterford, Dublin, Portadown, Belfast, Downpatrick, etc. Everywhere marked interest was evinced in the work of the association, which touches the mission field in all parts of the world.

Not only have these meetings done much to enlighten the Irish Christian public as to the great work of the Society, but much, too, in the way of increasing interest in local missionary work in the centres visited. The members of the deputation have also, as opportunity offered, taken part in various evangelistic efforts in these places, and in some cases with marked tokens of blessing. In all parts the meetings have been pronounced as most spiritual and edifying, and, doubtless, will ultimately be of great benefit in increasing interest in the work of medical missions.

THE LATE

Rev. Robert Newton Young, D.D.

THE late Dr. R. Newton Young was the only President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference who was himself the son of a President. His father, Rev. Robert Young, was a devoted missionary and a fervid evangelist. It was in 1829, during his father's missionary labour in Nova Scotia, that the son was born at Halifax, and named Robert Newton, after the distinguished Methodist preacher, who was called by his brethren to fill Wesley's chair on four separate occasions, an honour which he alone shared with his great leader and friend, the famous Dr. Bunting. Thus by heredity and baptismal designation the missionary's child seemed to be marked out for high service to the church of his father.

His father soon after returned to the English work, and went to and fro as a flame of fire, his revivalistic gifts leading to the awakening of many. There are those who still remember his earnest pleadings and powerful appeals. The son was sent at an early age to Woodhouse Grove School, near Leeds, one of the institutions for the education of ministers' children. It was while here that Robert Newton Young gave evidence of religious decision, the sudden death of a schoolfellow inducing in him serious thought.

But it was in his nineteenth year that the preacher's son experienced a crisis that was indeed the turning point of his life. He was then living in London, and was accustomed to worship in Wesley's Chapel, City-road, which was then under the superintendence of Rev. Joseph Fowler, the father of the Right Hon. Sir H. H. Fowler, M.P., and the author of those remarkable Conference Journals which the venerable Dr. Benjamin Gregory has lately published to the world. But it was not under the ministrations of that gifted preacher that the future President entered into the clear light of life and duty. It was in the watches of the night, and under the influence of a startling dream, that the young man received a deep impression that he was called to preach the Gospel. The following Sunday he was afraid to venture within the walls of the Methodist Chapel, lest he should be led to a decision from which he shrank. In one of the City churches he listened to a sermon on the text, "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord" (Romans xii. 11), and this was to him the voice of God. He yielded his powers to the service of the Lord, and consecrated his life to the work of the ministry. Under the kindly guidance of Mr. Fowler, Robert Newton Young offered himself, and was accepted, as a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry. While his father, like an old warrior, was winning glorious triumphs in the midst of a Cornish revival, for he was then stationed at Penzance, the son was putting on the armour in the great metropolis.

It was in 1851 that Rev. Robert N. Young entered upon the work of the ministry, and his first two years were spent as an assistant-tutor in the Richmond Institution for the training of ministers. He made his first acquaintance with the actual work of the Methodist pastorate in Hastings, and thereafter travelled in some of the leading provincial circuits in Methodism, spending the full itinerant term of three years in Nottingham, Bradford, Leeds, Birmingham, and Bolton. Then London Methodism had the benefit of his ripe powers for four years, and in 1877 he was called to tutorial duties in the Headingley Theological Institution. Henceforward, for sixteen years, Dr. Young, first at Headingley and then at Handsworth, served his church in one of the most important of her departments, that of the training of her sons for the work of the ministry.

His great gifts and faithful service were recognised by his brethren in many ways. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Legal Hundred, and in 1881 he succeeded Rev. Marmaduke C. Osborn as the secretary of the Conference, an office which he only relinquished on his election to the higher honour of President of the Conference in 1886. At the Conference of 1883 he was appointed the senior representative of Wesleyan Methodism to the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. A very favourable impression was made by his public utterances in the United States, and one of their universities conferred on him the honorary degree of D.D. For some years he wielded considerable influence on the other side of the water, also, by his letters as the English correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate.

Dr. Newton Young was widely esteemed, even beyond the borders of his own communion, as a preacher of graceful eloquence and ripe scholarship. As a writer, he frequently contributed to the London Quarterly Review, and other Methodist magazines. He wrote one of the volumes in the series of the Fernley lectures, taking as his subject "The Witness of the Spirit," and his "Sermons and Addresses" are a worthy memento of his year of presidential office.

Dr. Newton Young entered deeply into the darkness of suffering during the last year of his life. Failure of memory, and mental depression, and the sorrows of bereavement assailed him, and on August 1 he passed into the light and peace of the better life.

National Free Church Council.—Rev. T. Law, the organising secretary, reports that the movement is making rapid progress in Yorkshire. A conference is to be held at Leeds on November 15, at which it will probably be decided to form federations at Leeds, Bradford, Sheffield, and Hull.

Home Missions.

The Gospel on the Sands.

"How did you enjoy your holiday?" Doubtless this question has been asked within the past few weeks, times without number, in the course of conversation between friends who have gone in different directions to spend their summer vacation. However happily the time at our attractive country or coasting centres may have been whiled away in the generality of cases, we venture to think that no class of holiday-seekers can have spent their fortnight, or three weeks, or month more profitably, or with greater cause for real and lasting satisfaction, than those earnest young men and women who during the summer season, under the auspices of the Children's Special Service Mission, have been working, morning, afternoon, and night, for the spiritual benefit of the young. One had only to listen to the interesting and encouraging accounts given at the anniversary meetings held in St. Martin's Town Hall on Thursday last to appreciate not only the deep, inward joy which must attend participation in such work as this, but the large amount of good which is bound to result to those on whose special behalf it is engaged in.

The mission in its efforts wisely discards any methods or influences that might tend to give the young people an unnatural or weakly sentimental idea of religion. The great object sought is to bring such influences to bear on the youthful mind as shall lead to a bright, practical, active Christian life. It is gratifying to know that this has been the outcome in many an instance, while in not a few others, as was stated by Mr. T. B. Bishop (hon. sec.) in the general report which he gave of the work, men have gone forth to engage in foreign missionary work as the result of impressions which they first received when attending some service held by the mission on the sandy beach, it might be, or in some hall or drawing-room, engaged or kindly lent for the purpose.

At the evening as well as the afternoon meeting the urgent and ever-growing need for this work as a healthy counteractive to various attractions calculated to lead young people astray, was dwelt upon. The different accounts given of hundreds of happy children of all ages, gathered round some ornate cathedral, which willing and active hands had built with sand, and listening attentively to a bright, simple Gospel address, were extremely encouraging. Then again it was stated that the indoor meetings respectively set apart for both sexes, according to age, had been largely blessed. The workers in the mission make it a point each season to distribute thousands of Gospel tracts to passers by and others on the esplanade, or jetty, or in the busy streets of the town where they are staying, and in this way, too, the glad news of salvation is disseminated, and no doubt much good done.

While the spiritual health of the young people is the chief concern of those who gladly give their time and talents to the mission, the capacity of the boys and girls for needed physical recreation and enjoyment is not forgotten. Suitable sports and games are provided and joined in with great delight, and thereby many of the young people who otherwise would probably never think of attending the services are got hold of.

This good work is carried on all around the coast throughout the summer months, the places visited including Scarborough, Whitby, Bridlington, Cromer, Broadstairs, Eastbourne, Tenby, Colwyn Bay, and other favourite seaside resorts. At Thursday's gatherings there was a long list of speakers, amongst whom were: Revs. E. H. Elwin (C.M.S., Sierra Leone), S. N. Warner (Sevenoaks), S. E. Asker (Lambeth), A. G. Dodderidge (Eastbourne), and R. Callender (assistant secretary).

Missions to Seamen.—The need of more lady workers at the various ports is much felt, but it i felt to be impossible to devote any part of the ord i nary mission funds for the increase of this branc h In the Port of London grand work is being done by ladies among sailors, and it is desired that similar results should be obtained at other ports. Commander Dawson, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, will be glad to hear from anyone who may be willing to help in this matter.

Scripture Gift Mission.

As the work of the Scripture Gift Mission has steadily grown during recent years, the smallness of the premises used as offices in St. Paul's Churchyard has entailed considerable inconvenience upon Mr. W. Walters and his helpers. At length the way has been opened for carrying on the work with greater freedom, and with this in view commodious premises have been taken near Charing Cross Railway Station, whence, it is hoped, will issue in the coming days millions of copies of the Scripture portions which have proved such a blessing in many lands during the past few years.

As is known to our readers, the Crystal Palace Bible Stand is now associated with the Mission. This agency has from the first been used, in particular during international exhibitions, and it has been resolved to continue this testimony in 1900 during the Paris Exposition, for which the world of science, art, and commerce is now straining its resources. Already a space has been procured, and arrangements are in progress so that the multitudes who visit the gay city for worldly pleasure may be presented with copies of the Gospel in their own tongue. Of course, this will mean large supplies in many languages; but Christian generosity will be equal to this strain upon the funds of the Mission and Stand.

The Mission has just added the Gospel of Matthew in French and German, with illustrations similar to those accompanying the other Scripture portions. An American friend of the work recently brought the Gospels, with their choice engravings, under the notice of the President of the United States, with the suggestion that they should be circulated in the army and navy of which so much has been said of late in connection with the Spanish war. President McKinley heartily approved the proposal, and gave orders for the books to pass the customs free of duty. The friend who sent the President's highly appreciative message looked upon the incident as implying "international cordiality and good will," which would, he hoped, "lead to matters of great importance to all concerned."

In its new premises the Scripture Gift Mission will be able in some measure to do justice to its unique stores of true pictures of Oriental life as assisting an understanding of the Gospel story. Mr. Walters intends forming a gallery of these products of art, and doubtless this will result in many more friends making acquaintance of the work and rallying to its support. The new address of the Mission is 15, Strand, W.C.

Slum Babies.

THE Walworth Crèche is now well into its fourth year of usefulness. A few weeks back was the height of the season at the Crèche, and from about seven in the morning until past eight at night baby held unlimited sway. On the occasion of our visit (says a correspondent)—a hot, tiring day—we were ushered quite unexpectedly into the midst of a galaxy of living pictures. Everything was tidy and well ordered. We could not help remarking, "There is not so much noise and discomfort as would be found in a private nursery of two or three, yet here were close upon forty, from the wee little one of a fortnight—whose mother has had all too soon to return to the wash-tub—to the sturdy boy of four, who will soon begin to fight his battle of life at the neighbouring Board School.

The hon. superintendent, Mrs. F. Kinghorne, 26, Dagmar-road, Camberwell, is very anxious to replace some of the old furniture, and in many ways to make the little mites more comfortable.

Wesleyan East End Mission.

ANNIVERSARY meetings in connection with the Wesleyan East End Mission were held on Wednesday last week. There was a sermon at noon by the President of the Conference, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, also public gatherings in the afternoon and evening, to say nothing of luncheon and tea—all of them held at Stepney Temple. Many friends of the work made a trip to East London to cheer Rev. Peter Thompson and his devoted colleagues and helpers, and taken, as a whole, the anniversary celebration was very encouraging.

There was a particularly good muster at the evening meeting, over which Mr. J. H. Lile, City Councillor, presided. The financial statement, presented by Mr. J. G. Widdicombe, was satisfactory, although it left £900 to be raised to clear off old liabilities, and £500 to pay for the renovation of the Lycett chapel, in addition to the sum received from the Fire Insurance Company. The expenses of the current year were put down at £2500.

Rev. Peter Thompson delivered an address which could not but be full of interest to persons who work and pray for East London. This is his fourteenth year of service in the Mission, and though many difficulties have been encountered in the past, there is energy left with which to meet like obstacles in the coming days. The converts of the Mission are taking their place on the preaching plan, in the school teaching staff, and in the mission bands; and in every centre there are signs of vigorous development. At the same time, many who have been blessed by the Mission have gone to live in the suburbs, on which account Mr. Thompson appealed for helpers from the suburban churches, specially inviting capable young men engaged in the City to help two or three evenings a week, and to join the workers from Saturday to Sunday. He acknowledged the devotion of his many helpers, including twenty ladies who go in and out among the people, carrying benediction into cheerless homes.

In the course of his address, Mr. Thompson dwelt upon the evangelistic character of the work, and rejoiced to tell of many conversions among young and old. Effort among the young engages special attention; and little ones from the gutters are brought under Gospel influence and fitted to become partners in God's work. Mr. Thompson enlarged upon the teaching work of the Mission, and spoke of its social undertakings. In conclusion, he read a long list of gifts on behalf of the funds, chiefly from men and women connected with the Mission, leaving the impression that poor people who are so willing to help themselves deserve every assistance from the well-to-do who sympathise with Gospel effort.

An eloquent address was delivered by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who dwelt upon the special importance of work in our great cities. He held that the times demand large buildings and bold endeavours—in fact, work on a wholesale scale and exhibiting a Divine audacity. With reference to Mr. Thompson's invitation to young men to give their leisure hours to the work, he asked whether a dozen Old Leysians, of capacity and leisure, could not be got to lay themselves out for Christian service in East London.

Cardiff Sailors' Rest.—Owing to the recent strike in the South Wales coalfield, the work here has suffered greatly. For five months the sorrow and destitution amongst the seamen who were unable to gain employment were very keen, but the workers nobly responded to the many claims of the suffering ones. Now that the strike is over they are receiving letters of gratitude thanking them for their kindness. The workers are looking forward to a season of prosperity as the ships return to the port—when many shall be brought "out of darkness into God's marvellous light."

"The King's Own," edited by Rev. John Urquhart, is a monthly for which we have often said an appreciative word. It has stood for the old paths, and inculcated a reverential attitude toward the faith of our fathers and the source of all true religious knowledge—the Holy Scriptures. We regret to learn from the October number that our contemporary has ceased to appear. Mr. Urquhart put much wit into the pages of his paper, and many will hear with sorrow that he has encountered great discouragement. Mr. Thomas Nicoll, director of the company which took the business in hand a few years ago, asks those who would like to have a part in recouping Mr. Urquhart's losses to communicate with him at 93, Hope-street, Glasgow.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THROUGH the expiration of lease of the Mission House in Finsbury-square, E.C., the Barbican Mission to the Jews has had to find another home and centre; and, while awaiting funds wherewith to provide a new mission house, the committee has secured temporary accommodation in the heart of London Jewry at 262, Commercial-road, E. The new premises were opened on Thursday afternoon last by a dedication meeting, presided over by Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

In the course of an opening statement, the superintendent of the Mission, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, said that over £1200 has been received towards the building fund of the proposed Gordon Calthrop Memorial Mission House, in which it is hoped the work will soon be domiciled. Before a start can be made in the realisation of this scheme, however, at least £3000 will be required. Meantime, he was glad of the temporary home that had been found, and rejoiced to say that the work had entered upon its new conditions of existence with much encouragement. There have been good attendances at the Bible-class, held every evening, and the Saturday afternoon meetings are attracting notice.

The Chairman expressed a heartfelt wish that the blessing of God might continue to rest upon the work. He felt deeply the solemnity of all mission work, and was particularly struck with the obligation of Christians to give the Gospel to the people from whose hands it first came. Rev. Dr. Bullinger followed with a sympathetic address. Having remarked upon the significance of the Zionist movement, he called attention to the changed attitude of Israel in relation to Christ and the Gospel. While France is being rent with the question of revision in the Dreyfus case, in Russia another revision is engaging attention—learned Jews are investigating dispassionately the trial of Jesus Christ, and are becoming convinced that the death of Christ was a judicial murder. On the other hand, Jews are listening to the Gospel as never before, and many are finding Christ to be Saviour as well as the Messiah of ancient promise.

After a brief address by Rev. J. W. Pratt, who spoke of the work as he had known it intimately for years, some hearty words were spoken by Rev. Dr. Rosedale. Having attained his eighty-first year, this venerable friend looked back upon a long experience. He has watched the course of all the societies, and witnessed several agencies come upon the scene. He thanked God for each and all, as in every case new centres of Christian influence have been formed, with results redounding to the glory of God. When a Jewish convert is worthy the name, he is sure to be an evangelist as well; he must tell his brethren of the grace he has experienced. Dr. Rosedale recalled cases of great boldness on the part of Jews who had come to the light, and prayed that the Barbican Mission might continue to enjoy God's favour and blessing.

An East End Effort.

AMONG the various efforts that are quietly and steadily bringing a good influence to bear upon the needy masses of the metropolis is the Out-and-Out Mission, started four years ago in Old Ford, E. It is carried on entirely by working men. The main object of the work is to preach the Gospel, both indoors and out. Meetings and classes were carried on at a mission-room, which by-and-by became too small for the numbers who attended. Further progress in this direction was checked until about six months ago, when a hall, seating 150 people, was obtained, and now the work is going ahead with cheering evidence of blessing.

Open-air meetings are held simultaneously at two centres every Sunday evening all the year round. Work among cripples is carried on in association with the Ragged School Union. There is a flourishing Band of Hope, and an adult temperance society is about to be formed.

The workers are chiefly people of very scanty means, but gladly deny themselves to give towards the support of the mission. Increased blessing, however, naturally encourages increased outlay, and it has been decided to have a sale of work on November 7 and 8 to provide for necessary expenses. Gifts for the sale may be sent to Mr. R. Sambridge, Out-and-Out Mission, 275, Old Ford-road, E.

Mr. S. Trevor Francis's Poems.*

THIS volume of poems has a unique and pathetic interest to me. The author was my companion in the early months of 1897, during a visit to North Africa. We spent some weeks at Algiers, Djemaa Sahridj, and Cherchel, at Constantine, Tunis, and Sousse. At Tunis my comrade's sight began seriously to fail, and from Naples he was obliged to return home to consult the oculists. To this calamity he refers in the last prose paragraph that closes the Author's Preface, and the four prayerful verses which succeed it:—

"The author craves the indulgence of the reader, inasmuch as at almost the beginning of the revision of the contents of this volume he was stricken with partial blindness, which precluded the possibility of continuing it...

Guide me, my Saviour, for hard by there lies
The lonesome river, and the mists arise;
They cling, they hang upon my dark'ning eyes:
Guide me, my Saviour.

Guide me, my Saviour, if I darkly see,
No ill can harm me if I lean on Thee;
Thou wilt be with me till the shadows flee:
Guide me, my Saviour.

Guide me, my Saviour: heretofore this way
I have not passed—Thou canst not say me nay,
For from mine eyes there fades the light of day.
Guide me, my Saviour.

Guide me, my Saviour: rest me in thy will,
And when I touch the river dark and still,
Put thine arms round me, guide me, guide me still.
Guide me, my Saviour.

The poem which gives its title to the book, "Whence and Whither," is more ambitious in conception, and more complex in treatment than the rest, and for this reason may not attract or interest so many readers as the shorter and easier poems. It is, however, notwithstanding a few halting lines, full of evangelic and poetic thought.

Not a few of Mr. Francis's valued hymns are contained in selections used in churches, chapels, and halls; some of them are included in this volume, in which are others which might well be similarly used.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in some Prefatory Words, says:—"Mr. Trevor Francis has seen and heard more than most of us, and has clothed his conceptions in language of considerable elevation and power; but some of the themes he handles are transcendent in their meaning, and mortal thought and tongue stagger beneath the weight of glory."

Mr. Trevor Francis is well known as a Gospel preacher, in connection with the Evangelisation Society and otherwise, and his many friends will be glad to have his poems in a collected form.

Several of the longer pieces are graphic and pathetic tales of joy and sorrow, taken from the lives of the dwellers in the great and terrible city.

R. C. Morgan.

The Jews and Palestine.—Mr. T. H. Engall writes to us from 37, Mansell-road, Acton, W.:—"Allow me to inform your readers that I have a large number of copies of the fourteenth edition of Rev. James Neil's 'Palestine Repeopled,' to be given away (paper covers, 194 pages). The book is of special interest at the present time, as it deals not only with the restoration of the Jews, but also with the Greek Church and Russian peace policy. I shall be pleased to send a copy to any of your readers on their remitting the cost of postage in stamps (2d.). It is requested that all applications be made this month."

A Martyr's Desire.—Dear hearts, be not faint-hearted for these evil days, which are come to try us and purify us, that we may the more be partners of God's holiness. At length we shall meet together in God's kingdom, and there never part asunder. Oh, joyful place! place of all places desired! My brethren, I think myself more happy than you, by how much now I am more near unto it. Elias's chariot I hourly look for, to come and catch me up. The portion of the good Spirit, which my Father hath lent me, I wish, yea, double and treble, unto you all. God, the Father of mercy in the blood of Christ, give to every one of you, my dear hearts, in Him his blessing, and pour plentifully upon you his Holy Spirit, that you may increase in all godly knowledge, to your own comfort and the edification of others.—John Bradford, while awaiting martyrdom (1554).

The Mount Hermon Chapel.

DEAR SIR,—It has been our privilege to take part in the Northfield Conference again this year, and to be present at the interesting ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the chapel now in course of erection at Mount Hermon. It will be remembered that this building is a birthday present to Mr. Moody from Christian friends in this country and in the United States. The original estimate for the erection thereof was £6000, and towards this amount Rev. F. B. Meyer was able to convey to Mr. Moody in the early part of 1897 the sum of £3000 as the amount of the gifts of those on this side of the water.

Since then the development of the work at Mount Hermon has necessitated the enlarging of the size of the building from that which was originally intended, at a cost of about £2000. We feel that there are many who would count it a privilege to assist in providing this additional sum, so that the building, now rapidly approaching completion, may be opened free of debt. If £1000 could be raised on this side we should retain our proportion of half the cost.—Faithfully yours,

Geo. H. C. Macgregor,
Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting-hill,
G. Campbell Morgan,
New Court Congregational Church,
Tollington-park.

P.S.—As Mr. Campbell Morgan goes to the States again in January, it is requested that donations should be sent in without delay, so that he may be able to carry the gifts out with him. Contributions may be sent to Robert Scott, Esq., 12, Paternoster-buildings, London. E.C., or W. G. Wilkinson, Esq., 31, Woodberry-grove, London, N., who have consented to act as treasurers of the fund.

Torquay.—The People's Mission, Cockington is doing a good work among the labouring classes. Miss Fawcett has been giving a series of addresses on Sunday afternoons on the Reformation and the meaning of the word Protestant. Mr. Levi Powell, the missioner, is also in charge of a Home of Rest.

A Quiet Day for the deepening of the spiritual life will be held in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Friday, October 21, at 11, 3.30, and 7. Speakers: Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, Rev. Dr. Jenkins, Rev. Thos. Cook, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. Rev. W. H. Tindall, Mr. Reader Harris, and Rev. H. Price Hughes.

Dorking Convention.—Calling the meeting for October 17 to 21, Rev. H. C. Sturdy, vicar of Dorking, writes:—"For the tenth year I am permitted to arrange for our annual convention. Let the main object be kept clearly before our minds—waiting upon God to know his will concerning us. We trust in the Holy Spirit to guide our speakers to a right word, and have no fixed subjects. Few Christians seem to realise the dangers of the present days, nor the nearness of the Lord's coming, nor the sad and irrevocable loss which will be sustained not only by the ungodly but by the unsanctified believer. How are we trading with the gifts of God's Holy Spirit which we received at our conversion? Are we ankle-deep, knee-deep, up to the loins, or with the total abandonment of our whole being, swimming in the river of God's grace (Ezek. xlvii.)?"

The Tent at Tottenham.—A wave of blessing is passing over Tottenham in connection with the services at the American Tent. The meetings are a chief topic of conversation on the trams, trains, and streets, and the enthusiasm which has cemented the members of the various churches in the effort is truly blessed. On Thursday night a large Gospel temperance meeting was held. Messrs. Fenn, Malcolm Weber (Deaf and Dumb Cartoonist), Arthur Garstin, W. Grove, with the Blind Singers, and Mr. Leonard Weaver took part. The British Women's Temperance Association had materially assisted in getting their local friends interested, and at the close of the meeting some hundreds arose indicating their purpose to abstain from alcoholic drink. On Sunday morning another men's meeting was held. One thousand were present, and "talk" had as a subject, "Robbers (i.e., sins) on Trial." Numbers were moved to conviction and earnest resolve to seek a new life in Christ. Will readers of The Christian pray that the closing days of the work at Tottenham may be abundantly blessed, and that guidance may be given as to the next move. If any friends know of suitable land (150ft. by 80ft.) available they would help the work by sending information to Mr. Weaver, 25, Park-avenue, Willesden Green.

SCOTLAND.

Mr. McNeill in Ross-shire.

WE extract the following from a very interesting account given in The Northern Weekly (published in Dingwall) for Oct. 6:—

This world-renowned preacher is presently in Dingwall, where he is conducting a fortnight's series of special meetings in the Free Church (Rev. M. Macaskill's). Since returning to Scotland Mr. McNeill has been approached by the Highlands and Islands Committee of the Free Church with a view to devoting the coming months to a preaching tour in various centres of the North and West—in fact, in those places where ministers and office-bearers unite to requisition his services. Dingwall Free Church has been the first to ask for his services, and, accordingly, Mr. McNeill came north on Saturday last, and began his work next day in the Free Church, preaching powerful discourses to crowded gatherings at both the afternoon and evening services. He has since preached every evening in the same place, and up till last evening the attendances have been large and decidedly encouraging to the minister, the office-bearers, and, we understand, to Mr. McNeill himself. Yesterday he also preached at the Cross of Dingwall to a considerable crowd of the farmers and others from the surrounding country who attend the weekly (Wednesday) sales and markets in town.

Times and opinions have considerably altered since Mr. McNeill's last visit to Dingwall about five years ago. The strong feeling of prejudice against evangelistic effort which existed throughout the community at that time has now, happily, considerably abated, and, though there are still a few who oppose such work, it has been gratifying to all concerned that the attendances have been so large—for Dingwall. It would seem that Mr. McNeill himself is well aware of, and much pained by, the feeling that exists towards him in certain circles, not only here but elsewhere, and some of the most touching references in his addresses are for those who publicly and privately oppose his work. "If anyone has hard and strange thoughts about me," he says in substance, "I would just invite them to come and see." "It was a pity," he would continue, "if any blessing from God's Spirit was going, that anybody should be bold enough to miss it by staying away or hindering others from coming to the meetings." But notwithstanding all the objectors and objections the meetings every evening this week (not to speak of last Sabbath's services, when the church was packed as at communion seasons) were very largely attended by deeply interested listeners who closely followed the great preacher in his evangelical expositions and powerfully rousing appeals to saved and unsaved alike.

To all who were privileged to hear Mr. McNeill's addresses during the past evenings it has been patent that he preaches a full and free Gospel, from a whole Bible and nothing but the Bible, and in homely language that does not fail to find its mark in the hearts of the hearers. Much has been written and spoken regarding his "illustrations" and "witticisms," but it is a surprise to us that, in a land where the sermons and addresses of the famed Dr. Stewart, of Cromarty, are so widely admired, there should be any objection taken to the always homely and pointed illustrations and sayings of Mr. McNeill. Mr. McNeill's style of address is the nearest approach we know to the homely, quaint, piquant, pungent, and telling addresses of Stewart of Cromarty—as these are related by the older type of the "Men" throughout the Highlands and Islands. Mr. McNeill certainly says sharp things, but, as he himself explains, he does so in love for his hearers and in faithfulness to his Master.

All Mr. McNeill's addresses during the past evenings have been of the characteristic type that have drawn large crowds to hear him in all parts of the world, and that have been followed by marked blessing.

Dr. Whyte in the Highlands.

THE following letter appears in the Free Church Monthly for October, written by Rev. Dr. Alex. Whyte, Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, respecting his recent tour in the Hebrides, to Mr. Lee, secretary of the Highland Committee:—

"Your excellent and comprehensive programme could not have been carried out but for the signal generosity and thoughtfulness of Mr. Peter Mackinnon in putting his fine yacht at our absolute disposal for the whole of our time. It was a happy arrangement that our first debarkation should take place at Stornoway. The Communion Sabbath, with its large congregations, indoor and open-air, gave a fine start to our coming work. The opening of the new secondary school also gave me an opportunity of meeting the most public-minded men of the town. Our visit to Knock was in order that I might distribute the prizes and certificates that had been gained by the young people of that poor and populous parish. It was a wet and boisterous afternoon, and I expected to find twelve or twenty children in the church. What was my delight to find some four hundred young people assembled, with their teachers at their head. Still more, what was my surprise to find that there were more prizes and certificates to be distributed to the young people of Knock than to all my young people at Free St. George's! I handed a prize to a boy who had neither shoes nor stockings on, but who, in his mother's poverty, amid all his disadvantages, out of a maximum of 200 on the Shorter Catechism. I never felt so thankful for the little hand I have had in this welfare work as I did when I stood before that churchful of Lewis children. Let the committee imagine the scene, and take assurance for the future of this great work. For the next eight days we drove and sailed and preached and conferred without ceasing. Altogether, our party visited four presbyteries, nine deacons' courts, fifteen congregations and stations, and preached thirty-six sermons and delivered thirty-four addresses.

HAD GAINED 191 MARKS

"And now at the close of this memorable tour I feel more thankful than I can express that I have been honoured to have a hand in such a work, and to be a minister of a church which has such a noble people under her charge. The tour has made impressions on me that will never be forgotten. This has been my first visit to these far-off islands, but, if God will, it shall not be my last. And whether I am ever able to return to Lewis, Uist, and Skye or no, our Church in those far parts shall have a place in my heart and in my ministry somewhat worthy of its deserts and necessities. And I hope that our annual collection in Free St. George's for the Highlands and Islands will show that these are not so many idle words.

"Our whole Church must waken up more than she has ever done to the claims of our Highland people. And the children and young people especially must have the very best and most generous consideration and attention of the Church in the south. The Oriental now and then took a minister's boat in tow through the sea-lochs and stormy kyles of the Hebrides. Why should not our wealthy city congregations take each a Highland congregation in tow, and see to it that the minister is cheered and strengthened in his lonely and arduous work, his Sabbath-school children clad with the spare and cast-off clothes of the children of our families, and the ministers themselves kept supplied with the best religious books and periodicals? 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

Grace after Meat.—Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, has long been famous by reason of his memorable "graces" before and after meat. He was recently entertained to dinner by one of the best known of Highland county families, and sat down with a distinguished company to a most elaborate repast. When he was requested to return thanks at the conclusion of the meal, he spoke as follows: "In the name of Him who had no place whereon to lay his head, in the name of Him who was rich, but for our sakes became poor, we give Thee thanks."

Scottish Deaconesses.

AMONG the many interesting sights in the old Scottish capital of Edinburgh there are two which, being out of the regular beat of tourists, are not so widely known. One is the Deaconess House of the Established Church of Scotland, in George-square, and the other the Deaconess Hospital and Mission House (St. Ninian's), in the Pleasance.

Some eleven years ago the Established Church resuscitated the ancient Order of Deaconesses, for readers of the New Testament in the Greek will know that St. Paul referred to Phebe as a deaconess (diakonos), or, as the word is translated in the Authorised Version, a "servant" of the church. This Order, or institution, was at first looked upon with suspicion, as being something new and dangerous, but it has lived down indifference, misconstruction, and opposition, and by its Scriptural teaching and its good works has become a power in the Church and in the land.

Its objects may be briefly stated to be the training of women for the office of deaconess, the training of others (who, for the present, do not wish to join the Order) in practical experience in mission and other church work, and to assist ministers and sessions in organising branches of the Women's Guild.

Both the house and hospital have a superintendent at its head, the whole being under the control of the General Assembly's committee on Christian Life and Work. The ordinary course for the lady probationers is two years, one in the house and the other in the hospital, and the training consists of:—

(1) Systematic class instruction, by means of lectures, etc., on Holy Scripture, Church history, home and foreign mission work;

(2) Practical training and experience in home mission work; and

(3) Practical training in sick nursing.

For the last named the second-year probationers are transferred to the hospital, which was erected in memory of the first deaconess of the Church, Lady Grizell Baillie.

This institution, with its house, hospital, and mission premises, has met with generous support from the Church, and over £12,000 has been raised to acquire the sites, buildings, etc., the annual expenditure being defrayed by liberal contributions.

The Deaconess House at 27, George-square, has as its head Miss A. M. Maxwell, D.C.S. From George-square a ten minutes' walk brings one to the Pleasance, and here in spite of its sweet sounding name one finds oneself in the midst of much poverty and misery, a fitting ground for the good works of the deaconesses and the probationers. Like an oasis in the desert are the hospital and mission-house, and here much sickness and suffering (both mental and physical) are alleviated by the care and kindness shown in this shelter for the weary.

The hospital is under the care of a highly qualified medical staff, with Miss Ella Pirrie, D.C.S., in charge; her wide experience in hospital and district nursing and her gentle attractiveness are guarantees that everything works well and smoothly in this establishment. There are two wards, male and female, well equipped, with some twenty-five beds, besides a separate bed for any deaconess or probationer who may have to take advantage of the hospital; one expects cleanliness and quietness in hospitals, and St. Ninian's is no exception, and the calm content seen in the faces of the patients shows how much the Christian kindliness they receive is appreciated by them. The newest and most approved appliances are in use, and though ignorant of surgery one is struck with the completeness of the appliances and fittings throughout the hospital.

The mission-house, with its large accommodation, has also a separate entrance from the hospital, and here each day some good work is going on. Mothers' meetings, classes for girls, looking after the babies while their mothers are at the meetings, singing classes, clothing and savings clubs, assisting at the Sunday services, are some of the many labours of love which are constantly carried on by the deaconesses and probationers.

It may be well to state, in case any ladies may think of giving themselves to this good work, that a probationer need not after trial take the whole two years' training, and at the end of that period she need not become a deaconess; and even when a deaconess she can retire from the Order when she so desires.

Should any interested in the work be in Edinburgh they will not regret visiting the house and hospital, where the Deaconess Superintendents will be glad to see friends; the afternoon is the best time for a visit, and it should be on Monday afternoons for the Deaconess House.

Upper Norwood, S.E. James Alexander.

Brief Notes.

SOME interesting religious anniversaries have been held during the past week. The Young Men's Guild of the Established Church and the Young Men's and Young Women's Guild of the U.P. Church were in session simultaneously in Glasgow and Dundee respectively. A kindly and fraternal spirit showed itself in the exchange of greetings between the two assemblies. The Guilds are very useful in uniting the forces of the young life and active Christian effort in the different Churches. Practical questions were discussed in both gatherings.

Another interesting occasion was the centenary of the Paisley Sabbath School Union. The civic authorities lent to the opening proceedings the encouragement of their presence. The discussions of the conference will doubtless awaken renewed interest in the important work of the Sabbath school.

The Scottish Permissive Bill Association has been at work for forty years, but as yet the goal of their endeavours has not been reached. The proceedings of their anniversary, held at Glasgow last week, were marked by a hopeful spirit, and there are not a few signs that something definitely practical will be done before long in the direction of allowing the people of any community to have a deciding voice in the permission and regulation of a traffic that so seriously affects their highest interests.

The Duchess of Sutherland opened last week a new Diamond Jubilee Cottage Home in connection with that excellent institution at Inverness, the Highland Orphanage. This home will provide accommodation for thirty additional orphan children. A new mission hall has been opened in Glen Urquhart. A Glasgow shipowner has given £500 towards the building of the new Homes for Sailor Orphans at Kilmacolm.

Personalia.

Mr. Merton Smith has been preaching in St. Louis during August and September. He has now entered on his winter's evangelistic work.

Rev. Thomas Champness has accepted Mr. Moody's invitation to spend the first week of November at the Chicago Bible Institute.

Dr. J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia, has resigned his pastoral charge in order to devote his whole time to the American Presbyterian Board of Publication, of which he is editorial superintendent.

Mr. Francis Murphy has been appointed Chaplain of the Fifth Pennsylvania Regiment. The colonel of the regiment and Mr. Murphy have been successful in preventing the establishment of a canteen in the camp.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, of Bombay, writes from Poona, where he has been recruiting his health for some time back, that he had hoped to be in England by this time, but a relapse compelled him to defer his journey till the spring, when he hopes that Mrs. Dyer will accompany him.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, writing on September 29, says:—"I begin my full work next Sunday at the Princeton University. My engagement to make the dedication address at the New Theological Seminary at Richmond, Va., prevents my acceptance of the invitation to speak at the funeral of Dr. John Hall next Tuesday. He is deeply mourned as a plain, solid Bible expounder and a noble pastor."

The late Dr. John Hall.—The following tribute is paid by the New York Independent to the late Dr. Hall:—He was a loving, model pastor and nothing else. He was the ideal of a fatherly, bishop-like teacher of his people. He was not learned; he was not a leader in any public or ecclesiastical matters; was satisfied with being the teacher of simple truths in an admirably simple way to one of the most cultivated, intelligent, and wealthy congregations in the country. He was good, faithful, honest, and able within the limits which he set to himself, and no pastor was ever better loved or more trusted or more useful.

The Y.M.C.A.

A successful mission is in progress at the Derby Y.M.C.A., the meetings being conducted by Mr. Lee, of Cardiff. The attendance of young men on the earlier nights was most encouraging.

The annual general meeting of members of the Newcastle Y.M.C.A. was recently held. The Association will probably enter its handsome new premises in September next. £5000 of the £14,000 first appealed for is still wanted.

The winter session was commenced at the new home of the Y.M.C.A. at Northampton last week. The hall was crowded with an audience consisting mainly of young men, who followed with close attention and considerable enthusiasm addresses by Sir George Williams, Sir Philip Manfield, and Mr. Hind Smith.

The annual meeting of the Clapham Young Men's Christian Association was held on Thursday evening, October 6, under the presidency of Dr. Eugene Cronin. There was a large gathering, and the proceedings were both successful and encouraging. Addresses were given by Dr. T. Morris, Dr. A. T. Pierson, and Mr. Hind Smith.

The winter's work of the Brighton Y.M.C.A. bids fair to be ahead of that which has been done in any previous year in amount and efficiency. As a means for reuniting the membership, after the summer months, and introducing the members to the various agencies which are now commencing operations, a reception was held on October 3, by the kind invitation of Mrs. Gurney Barclay. Some 300 young men attended.

The annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A., in connection with Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, was held on September 29. The secretary's report shows the Association to be in a flourishing condition, spiritually and numerically. Thirty-nine new members and associates have been added during the year, the present membership being 100. One member during the year has given himself for work in China, now being on his way there.

Growing interest is being manifested in Blackburn in the Y.M.C.A., a branch of which was formed in the town in 1896, with a membership of sixty. The Association has now over 230 members, representing most Christian bodies in the town. This number has been the result of gradual and steady effort month by month. The committee feel handicapped at present owing to the lack of accommodation for all the members, and the need of a comfortably furnished parlour and gymnasium.

Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., Edgware-road, presented a scene of much animation on the evening of Thursday, Oct. 6, when, at the invitation of Dr. J. H. Gladstone, some hundreds of young business people, representing practically the whole of the great business establishments in the West of London, assembled at a "Fruit Banquet" given in connection with the commencement of the winter session. The doctor gave a brief but interesting sketch of his personal history, and was listened to with much appreciation. Rev. Mathias Lansdown, of Tolmers-square Congregational Church, N.W., gave a most earnest and helpful address, setting forth the claims of Y.M.C.A.'s in a manner that appealed to all present. The gathering was an unprecedented success, it being necessary to provide for a large overflow meeting.

On September 27 Sir William Houldsworth, M.P., distributed the prizes to successful students at the Manchester Y.M.C.A. Sir William put it before the members present that they should endeavour to cultivate an honourable, worthy ambition, and to show a spirit of perseverance in all they undertook. Never was there such a time when opportunity would be afforded for young men to carve out useful careers for themselves. Africa would open out an immense field of activity and enterprise. In China there was every probability of a large field for the force of the Anglo-Saxon race, for the progress of civilisation and Christianity. In the next twenty or thirty years great would be the opportunities for young men, whose business it was to prepare themselves so that they would be ready to take advantage of them.

By invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams, a large company of ladies and gentlemen assembled at Exeter Hall on October 3 at dinner, to meet Mr. J. D. Cartwright, president of Cape Town Y.M.C.A., Mr. C. H. Goode, vice-president of Adelaide Y.M.C.A., and the Hon. E. Vickery, treasurer of Sydney Y.M.C.A. These gentlemen represent three of the largest colonial associations, which number between them considerably over two thousand members. Mr. Cartwright asked for the help of English friends towards the enlargement next year of the Cape Town Association building; and the Australian representatives urged the necessity of a travelling secretary being sent out from the home country to develop work in the various Australasian colonies. Addresses were delivered by a number of friends.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Perthshire secretaries and workers met their district referees, Lady Moray and Miss Gertrude Kinnaird, in Perth, by the kind invitation of Mr. Bannerman. Reports were read from all the branches, and there was a tone of praise running through them all.

The annual meeting of the Crouch End and Hornsey Branch was recently held in the Corbin Hall, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding. The report, read by the secretary, told of a membership of 200, annual attendance of nearly 8000, and proposed removal in October to larger premises at 28, Broadway-parade. Mrs. Hatt-Noble gave an address on the work of the Association throughout the world, and Rev. H. Laurence said a few words.

Lady Overtoun invited the secretaries in Dumbartonshire to meet her in the beautiful new premises presented to the Dumbarton Y.W.C.A. by Lord Overtoun. Addresses were given on the work at home and abroad by Miss Gertrude Kinnaird and Miss Collins, from Calcutta, whose appeal for help touched many hearts. The question "How can we help?" was answered by Mr. Oates, Miss Brown Douglas, and Miss Galloway.

The Hon. Emily Kinnaird, district referee for Kincardineshire, met her secretaries, by kind invitation of Mr. Middleton, at Hall Green Castle, Bervie, in order to discuss the work amongst the fisher-girls and other girls in the county. Most of the branches have steadily increased in membership during the past year, many girls availing themselves of the home study and junior departments. In one village a hall has been secured during the past year, and the attendance at the meetings has been most encouraging to the workers.

At the kind invitation of Mr. Armitstead, some twenty secretaries and workers connected with the Yorkshire Young Women's Christian Association met recently at Castle Huntley for conference, the special subject being the spread of the home study department and arrangements for the county prizes, etc. There were present representatives of the work in Arbroath, Brechin, Broughty Ferry, Forfar, and Kirriemuir. An effort is being made to extend the benefits of the Association to farm servants and others in the country districts. The Home Study Department publishes questions on Scripture and general subjects, with a key, to enable ministers' wives and others to give instructions to the girls from time to time, in districts where it is impossible to hold Bible-classes, owing to the distance at which members live. In each branch prizes are given locally or by the county fund, and, in addition, the heads of the department give special prizes for a competition amongst the prize-takers of all Scotland.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—The Temperance Association in connection with this Society celebrated its fifty-second anniversary by a tea and public meeting at the headquarters, St. George's-street, London Dock, on Thursday last. The meeting was largely attended by seamen and others. A cheering report was given of the progress of the work, and many interesting incidents were related of the reclamation and conversion of intemperate and godless seamen.

Wakefield.—Many of the Christians in Wakefield and surrounding districts have again had the privilege of a three days' convention on the spiritual life. Among the speakers were Revs. J. J. Luce, R. Middleton, and W. Darlow Sargeant, Dr. White, Mr. G. Manley, Mrs. Osborne Howe, and Mr. Joshua Vale of the C.I.M. The meetings were, as in previous years, well attended. The main thoughts in the teaching were a fuller realisation of the work and office of the Holy Ghost, and a growing expectancy and preparation for the Lord's Coming. The missionary cause was ardently advocated by the three last-named speakers. J. F. T.

World-wide Circle of Prayer.—During the Church Congress at Bradford meetings were held in connection with this organisation in the hope thereby of making the Circle known to the large body of clergy and others. Addresses of an explanatory nature, and appealing to Christian people to join the Circle, were delivered by Revs. F. Paynter (Guildford), B. Senior, W. S. Standen (Bolton), B. Martin, Dr. Simon (principal of the United College), and J. O. West (Rowington, Warwick). The last-named, as secretary, said: "No pledge is needed. Join in the prayers to-day, and there will be fellowship with thousands in many lands, from New Zealand to Japan, from China to Jerusalem, from Africa to North America, waiting for God." In conclusion, Mr. West said he would be pleased to hear from ministers or missionaries who would bring the subject before their congregations on the first day of the closing year of the century. Mr. John Blackham, Hilltop, West Bromwich, will send the card of the Circle post-free for three-halfpence.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

A Stundist Apostle

Banished to Siberia.

IN the October "Quarterly Reporter" of the German Baptist Mission a deeply interesting account is given of Pastor Vasili Pawloff, who has for some years been labouring in the Gospel in various parts of Russia. A native of Tiflis, in Trans-Caucasia, he was converted at the age of sixteen, and trained for the ministry at Hamburg, under the care of the late Pastor Oncken. Returning to Russia, he preached the Gospel in the regions of the Don and the Volga, and over the Caucasian Mountains to the borders of Persia and the Caspian Sea. Hundreds were won for Christ, and many churches established through his labours.

By his arduous service he became widely and well known to the Russian officials, who watched him with jealous eyes; and in 1887 he was suddenly banished to Siberia—simply for the crime of preaching the truth as it is in Jesus! Even in that land of exile he continued to preach during his term of four years. At its conclusion he returned to his home in Tiflis. But a few weeks afterwards he was called before the officials and commanded to sign a document pledging himself to preach no more. He refused, and was arrested without process of law and thrown into prison. For some time his friends and family knew not what had become of him, but at last learned that he was in the prison at Tiflis. Soon, to the sorrow of multitudes, he was

AGAIN SENT TO SIBERIA.

On this second period of exile his family joined him, but sorrow was to be their portion. In less than a year one daughter was taken away from him by drowning, and the mother and three children carried away by cholera, leaving the sorrowing exile alone with but one of his family, his son, remaining. His preaching of the Gospel continued during this second term of exile, and many converts were won. As he was not permitted to leave the precincts of the town, they were necessarily baptized by someone else, in the river outside of the city. At the end of the second term of four years the church numbered one hundred and fifty members, and has since grown to more than three hundred. On his second return from exile Mr. Pawloff found that it was useless for him to attempt again to preach the Gospel in Russia; so he decided in sorrow to leave his native land. He located himself at Tultscha in Roumania, just over the border, where he has been joined by many Baptists who have suffered from exile in Siberia, among the Caucasus Mountains, at Gerussi, and elsewhere.

Mr. Pawloff has this summer been visiting the Russian Mennonite and Baptist Churches in America, and assurances of support have been given which will enable him to carry forward with vigour the great work which he is still able to do in Roumania. He speaks Russian, Roumanian, Bulgarian, Turkish, and German, but converses only with some difficulty in English. Copies of the "Quarterly Reporter," giving further particulars, may be had from Mr. W. S. Oncken, Greetwell-road, Lincoln.

Emancipation in Zanzibar.—The following extract from a private letter shows the present state of affairs regarding the emancipation of slaves in the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba:—"The Commissioner in Pemba is doing everything in his power to make the decree for the emancipation of slaves effectual. He has already freed over 900 slaves, and is proceeding at the rate of seventy a week. I was present at the Court yesterday, and can assure you that, far from any difficulty being put in the way of slaves obtaining freedom, it seemed to me that they obtained it all too easily. The Zanzibar Government has, most unjustly, I think, been called upon to pay the compensation money to the Arabs for the slaves freed. As a consequence of this large and sudden demand on their exchequer, the Zanzibar Government is practically bankrupt. Nearly all the public works in Zanzibar are at a standstill, and withal the Government is not able to keep pace with the freedom granted by the Commissioner. It seems to me that since the emancipation of the slaves has been demanded by the Christian public of Great Britain, they should be the parties to provide the funds, and not the Mohammedan Government of Zanzibar.

Natal Missions.

TAKING Durban as headquarters, a correspondent of The Christian Express (Lovedale, South Africa) has visited some of the chief churches and institutions in the vicinity, relating his experiences in graphic style.

At Durban there is a night school for Zulus, and both the American Board and the South African General Mission have their native churches. The latter also hold meetings in the barracks where the ricksha boys and others sleep.

There is a lodging-house for Zulu girls and women, at present under the charge of an Australian lady. Until this Home was started a few years ago, there was no place in the town where a respectable girl could find suitable accommodation. Many take advantage of it, and have the use of a sitting-room and sleeping-room at threepence a night. There is also, in Durban, a Medical Mission for Indians, and an orphanage.

Among the sugar plantations at Phoenix, five miles distant, the South African General Mission has started a branch work for coolies, as the Indians in Natal are generally designated by the white people, regardless of caste. Here two ladies have their little home and school, with about forty pupils, almost all boys, as the Indians do not care to send girls to a mixed school. The ladies are at work before and after school, dispensing medicines, and in that way get a hold upon the parents, most of whom, having served their time of indenture, have little homesteads of their own. On visiting one of these, a warm reception was afforded. A feast had been prepared on a table elaborately decorated with flowers. The wall behind it was covered with newspapers and tinsel rosettes. After the feast the visitors were taken to the family temple, at a little distance, containing the figures of two gods and the pictures of others, and there the fifth of Matthew was read to the people in Tamil.

The next visit was to Amamzimtoti, the headquarters of the American Board. Most of the workers were gathered for their annual business meeting. They were holding long sessions daily, all attending, the ladies contributing freely. Of the different homesteads and educational buildings the most conspicuous is Jubilee Hall, the boys' boarding-school, where about sixty are housed. Medical work is also carried on successfully, while some distance away is the home where Kraal girls are sheltered.

At Iwanda is another extensive and useful work, where Kraal girls are received and educated free; they are taught to read the Bible in Zulu before any attempt is made to teach them English. There is an extensive fruit garden behind the school, and a windmill which grinds the maize for porridge, the staple diet. The school as it stands is the work of Mrs. Edwards, who is still its moving spirit, after twenty-eight years of labour.

One prominent feature of the American Mission is the fact that so many of the workers are the children of the old missionaries.

A Dispensary for Agra.

IN a recent letter, Dr. C. S. Valentine, of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution, says:—

"During the famine time many were not only starving, but were suffering from various diseases. We improvised a dispensary and hospital for their treatment; hundreds, if not thousands, lived who would otherwise have died. We were under the impression that we would be able to close the dispensary and hospital after the famine had passed away. This we have not been able to do. The effects of the famine remained long after the famine itself had passed away. Besides, the fame of our dispensary had spread to the surrounding villages, and patients came flocking to us from all directions, many of them suffering from diseases of long years' standing. Our daily attendance is about 180. We have no proper place to see them in, and have been compelled to use one of our verandahs for this purpose, while the others sit outside.

"It becomes more and more clear that we must not only continue but extend this department of our work. To enable us to do so we must have a dispensary. It will take from £300 to £400 to put up a plain building. As the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society will not be able to assist us, my wife and myself have taken upon ourselves the responsibility of doing so. We trust many Christian friends will consider it a privilege to assist."

The Upper Congo.

ON February 26, 1890, two young men sailed from New York, being sent out as pioneer missionaries by the Southern Presbyterian Church of America to an unoccupied district on the Upper Congo. One was Rev. S. N. Lapsley (white), the other Rev. W. H. Sheppard (coloured). Both were highly educated and devotedly Christian young men. On arrival in Africa, by the advice of the experienced missionaries already established, they with much labour sought a station on a tributary of the Kassai river (itself an upper branch of the Congo), and settled themselves at Luebo, among peoples entirely ignorant of Gospel truth.

Here, with patient industry and strong faith they set themselves about the Master's business, assiduously acquiring the languages of the neighbouring tribes and seeking diligently to instruc them.

Nearly two years were spent in this pioneer work, during which they found much favour from the natives, as well as from the European officials of the Congo Company, and had just made satisfactory arrangements with regard to their chosen sphere of Christian work when, on March 26, 1892, the Lord was pleased to call his young servant Mr. Lapsley from earthly to heavenly service. But the work continued, and additional labourers were successively sent from America, until now there are eleven missionaries, male and female. Of these six are at Luebo, the first station occupied, and five at three other stations, at which there is already encouraging success in evangelizing the various tribes among which they are situated.

At Luebo the results have been very manifest, gradual of course, involving frequent extension of church and school accommodation. Now, on his return to his loved work at Luebo, Dr. Snyder says: "Our harvest (of native Christians) is greater than we can house." In the same letter he says: "There is a crying need for workers here to instruct the young Christians....Since I left here more than a thousand natives have settled close to us, building houses and villages, making permanent homes. Surely God has sent them here for one reason only." The communicants at present number over 200.

Japanese Jottings.

WE are now holding our fourth summer conference on the sacred mountain of Heizon. The place is full of temples, some old, some new, while many, during the changes of government, had been burned down. A number of missionaries and their families make this place their summer resort. It is high and cool, though very damp on account of the great cryptomerias, which grow thickly, and the rank underbush beneath. We meet here with Americans and English who have been bathing in the great sea of heathenism, now seeking recuperation and preparation for the work awaiting them.

Our visit to Chofu, at the entrance of the Inland Sea, was very interesting. The missionaries and teachers received us very cordially. Our meetings were appreciated, and the spirit of the conference was tender. At Arima we met many C.M.S. men and women. Archdeacon Warren presided. Bishop Audrey was present on one occasion, and spoke briefly.

Next week we begin work in the cities among the Japanese. Recently I preached in a Japanese theatre to a large audience. It was hard to realise that the quiet, intelligent people squatting before me were heathen. One woman professed faith in Christ, and her husband is thoughtful. Every day is engaged till December 1. In best bonds, Bahama Islands.—The president of the Midland Baptist College, Nottingham, Dr. T. Witton Davies, makes a renewed appeal for help to despatch Mr. Albert Cooke to the pastorate of the Inagua district of the Bahama Islands. "I regret to say that only £20 have come in out of the £50 required for outfit and passage money. Mr. Cooke cannot possibly go out until the £50 are obtained." The president will very thankfully receive and acknowledge contributions at the college.

Testimonies from Kaffir Children.

A MINISTER at the Mount Arthur Mission Station, among the Kaffirs in South Africa, writes as follows :—

"When I was staying at Mkapuse a little mite of eight summers came to me and said : 'Minister, I love Jesus, although I have a black skin. He has washed my heart, and He has given me power to overcome Satan, so that when mother tells me to mind the baby, which is very tiresome, I don't murmur and grumble now. Yes; Jesus has taken the grumbling spirit from my lips. I hope He will keep me now—will He, minister?' Another little mite stood up and said, 'My Saviour does love me, but I am afraid my heart cannot be of much use to Him ; and yet, when I see He takes care of my little toes and the wee, wee flowers, I am encouraged. Please pray for me, minister.'

"And yet another said : 'Minister, when coming to church this morning, knowing you would ask how we were getting on inside, I began to think a little of something to say ; but it has all gone, so I will just say, "Jesus is mine."' Another one said : 'Minister, I cannot say the same as the last one, "Jesus is mine," because I think He is so holy and so dear; I don't know where He could stay in my heart, it is so little, but I feel I can say, "I am his." You know, minister, my mother died last week. I am motherless now. But before she died she called me to her side, and whispered, "Gracie, always love Jesus, and come to me, by-and-by." I want to be with mother and Jesus soon, minister, because the house is so lonely. Her seat, too (pointing to a seat in the church), looks lonely.' And the poor little girl wept. So you see, far away up in these regions, Jesus is claiming the little children for Himself. Oh, it is a blessed work to point these heathens to the Good Shepherd.

The Cross, the Anchor, and the Heart.

AT one of the popular seaside resorts, on the sands left bare by the retreating tide, a boy had drawn with a stick some outline pictures of ships and three suggestive symbols of a cross, an anchor, and a heart, to represent Faith, Hope, and Charity.

The Cross stood for Faith. The cross has been used as a symbol of the Christian faith from the time of Constantine the Great. Tradition says that on his march to Rome, in a dream or vision, Constantine saw a bright cross shining in the sky with this motto, "In hoc vinces" ("By this conquer"). A voice also was heard bidding him inscribe it on the shields of his soldiers. He obeyed the voice of the dream and prevailed. The cross then became the ensign of his arms. And afterwards it was adopted as a sign of the Christian religion. The Cross of Christ, with all that it means of love, sacrifice, and salvation, is a fit emblem to represent faith when we see its spiritual, and not its superstitious, significance. The Cross of Jesus, when we understand its full secret, is the sign of the Christian's trust. But it is only as the hand of faith lays hold of and grasps the real meaning of what Christ is and does that the cross has any significance. Then as we hold it are we upheld by it, and faith in Christ is the victory that overcomes the world.

The Anchor has long been a symbol of Hope because it is that by which ships are held—they ride safely when their anchors are cast in the harbour. Vessels generally carry more than one. "The sheet anchor" is the largest anchor of the ship, it is so called from a corruption of the word "shote," or thrown out, meaning the anchor that is cast forth in roughest weather, and in stress of wind and storm it is the sailor's best hope and chief dependence. The Greeks and Romans called it "my sacred anchor," and it was always dedicated to some god. The author of Hebrews speaks of hope as the anchor of the soul, "both sure and steadfast, and entering into that which is within the soul."

The Heart is the old sign of Love or Charity. It is the symbol of life, that motive power for all activity. If the heart is still there is no life, only death. The heart is the source of all our thinking and willing, our speaking and doing. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh: If the heart is wrong, there is no sound health. The clean heart is God's best gift. If the heart is right, all is right; it is like the mainspring of a watch. Out of it flow all the issues of affection.

Love is the most essential thing of all, for it is the best and chiefest of all virtues and greatest of all graces. It is more than faith and hope ; it can do more than all else in the world ; it never faileth. Love is greater than faith, because faith will be lost in sight, and greater than hope, for hope will vanish in fruition ; but when both have done their work and passed into fulness of realisation, when faith has become knowledge and hope possession, love will still be young ; it will grow from more to more, and will never end, for "God is love."

Luther said, "I took for the symbol of my theology a seal, on which I had engraved a cross, with a heart in its centre. The cross is black to indicate the sorrows, even unto death, through which the Christian must pass ; but the heart preserves its natural colour, for the cross does not extinguish nature ; it does not kill, but gives life. The heart is placed in the midst of a white rose, which signifies the joy, peace, and consolation which faith gives, but the rose is white, and not red, because it is not the joy and peace of the world, but of spirits." Rob's Victory.

ROB HUNTER was upstairs in his own room by the window, looking out into the street, but not really seeing what was passing before his eyes.

He seemed to himself to be back in the little farmhouse up among the hills where he was born. He had come to Aunt Helen's in the city only a few weeks before to work with his Uncle Albert. It was a fine opening for him, everybody said, but it was all so unfamiliar here that he still felt bewildered at times.

Only a few weeks before he left home he had publicly confessed his faith in Christ. He had hoped to find in the city much that would help him in his Christian life. He had meant to be very true and faithful, but he had not dreamt how hard it would be.

"Be ready to endure hardness like a good soldier," his mother had said in their last talk the night before he left home. "And, Rob, don't let anybody tempt you in any way to be unfaithful to your Saviour."

Over on the table lay an invitation to a card party. His cousin Will, just his own age, was going.

"I have never played cards," Rob said when the invitation came, his face flushing painfully.

"Oh, never mind that," answered Will. "I'll coach you up a little beforehand, and you will soon catch on."

Rob had said nothing more then, but he knew that he must decide now what he would do. He knew perfectly well his mother's views on the subject.

"Card-playing has wrought so much evil in the world that I do not want ever to see a card," she had once said. "I believe that cards are dangerous even when played under the most favourable circumstances. More than that, it has never seemed to me that one who is living very near to Christ will care for them; he will have better things to think of and to do."

Rob recalled every word of that conversation now as he stood looking out of the window. It was growing upon him that his mother was right. These things did lead one away from Christ; but, oh, how hard it would be now to come out bravely and stand by his colours.

"They will make all manner of fun of me," he said to himself. "They are church members, too, and the idea of my telling them what is right or wrong!"

Rob turned away from the window, and picking up a paper sat down to read. The first thing his eyes rested on was this: "It is nothing to die, but you cannot afford to do wrong."

The paper dropped from his hands. Were the words a message from God to him? Could he afford to do wrong? Could he afford to grieve his Saviour merely to escape a little ridicule? No, surely he could not; but it was a fight, after all, for him. Satan tried to tempt him.

"You need only play now and then, just enough not to look odd. You must not be discourteous to your friends. You have a duty to them also."

But finally Rob conquered.

"It is dangerous ground; there is a precipice there, and, God helping me, I won't go one step towards it," he said firmly.

"Come into the library, Rob," said Will after supper, "and I will give a few points on the game."

"Thank you, Will, but I think I won't learn. I'm trying to follow Christ, and somehow I—can't make such things seem like following Him."

Will did not laugh, as he expected; for a minute he did not answer, then he spoke more soberly than Rob had ever heard him.

"You are right, they are not following Christ, and I hope you will stick to your resolution and have nothing to do with them. If you really are following Christ, it seems to me you ought to live so that those who are not can see some difference between you and us."

That was all, but Rob was more than thankful that he had stuck to his colours. Selected.

Personal.

I have given a star to those who gave the two answers to question 2. Many papers are incorrect this week, as John xv. 11 has been given. The answer is in v. 10, where it explains what "these things" (mentioned in v. 11) are.

Alice Truelove.—It is against the rules to re-examine any paper. If your paper reached me it must have been incorrect, as your name is not in the list. As your birthday is not before November, you may answer the questions set for those under thirteen during this quarter.

Cicely Sherbrooke.—Unfortunately your paper is wrong this week. I am glad you have succeeded in interesting two more "nieces" in the Searcher. Next time I hope all your names will be in the Correct List.

Dorothy Alchin.—Please give chapter and verse when writing your answers.

Edith Gray Wallis.—Many thanks for your letter. I shall look out for your cousin's paper from Montreal. For the "first" list papers must reach me by Monday morning, but it is equally creditable to get your name in the second list.

Arthur Cox.—No, I did not think you a "stranger," as I remembered your handwriting.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

The Open-Air Mission.

GRACIOUS evidences of blessing on the extending work of this Mission have continued to multiply during the present year, and the hearts of the workers have been greatly cheered. An increased income has enabled us to arrange a larger number of "great campaigns" at races and fairs than ever before in a single year, and at these centres the hearts of thousands have been reached.

Peterborough and Nottingham Fairs—two of the largest in the whole country—have received successive visitation by a strong body of our evangelists from Oct. 4 to 9. Wednesday and Thursday were days of arduous toil at Peterborough, morning, afternoon, and night great open-air services were held at the Bridge, close to the excitements of the fair, and yet in a spot where comparative quiet reigned. It was deeply interesting to watch the gathering of such audiences of country people and citizens, and to see the rapt attention they gave hour after hour to the preached Word. The solo, "Looking this Way," created deep impressions, and at every service God's power was manifested.

Nottingham Fair witnessed similar glorious evidences of God's saving presence and power. The campaign there was crowned on Sunday night by a magnificent meeting in the crowded Market-place—the scene of the fair—when an immense audience listened for two-and-a-half hours to powerful addresses. God was with us, of a truth, and eternity alone will reveal the full result.

Nearly 20,000 choice booklets and cards—the latter specially prepared for the occasion—were distributed at the two fairs, and these have in large measure been carried all over the Midlands.

United Mission at Widnes.

THE staple labour of Widnes is very heavy, and as a result the population is largely of a rough class. Wages are not now, as a rule, high, and the slightest deviation from the ordinary course of work plunges many of the unemployed into abject poverty. But the public houses are numerous, and they absorb a good proportion of the workmen's earnings. Here, then, is a good field for the evangelist. The churches, of all denominations, do good work, but with Sunday labour prevalent in most of the works, it is difficult to maintain a hold on many working men.

We may, however, undoubtedly expect an improvement, as the result of a ten days' mission, just held in the town by Mr. W. R. Lane, arranged for by the Federation of Free Churches. The mission, which extended from October 1 to 10, was held in the Drill Hall, the largest room in the town, and it has been attended with most gratifying results. The hall was crowded with from 1200 to 1400 people on several evenings. Last Sunday afternoon an audience of a thousand men assembled, and Mr. Lane's powerful denunciation of sin had evidently a deep effect. The visit of the evangelist proved a blessing to the town in many respects, not the least being that the churches have been stimulated to more evangelistic effort in the cause of the Master.

L.

Mr. J. J. Sims at Bellshill.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing with respect to a mission by Mr. Sims in this Scottish town, says: "It was indeed a joyful season, and to both saint and sinner a real time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Many who, though Christians, had an imperfect conception of certain truths, had their doubts and fears dispelled through the expositions of Scripture that accompanied all the addresses. Mr. Sims uses a chart to illustrate his addresses, which is a source of great enlightenment to the audience. An interesting feature of the mission was the solo singing by Mrs. Sims and the duets with her husband. These formed quite an attractive part of each meeting. Never have we heard the Gospel more effectively presented in song, and many were reached who had escaped the appeals of the preacher."

Messrs. Weaver Brothers in Belfast.

ON the invitation of the pastor and session, Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver conducted a thirteen days' Gospel mission in Westbourne Presbyterian Church. Large congregations attended night after night. The addresses delivered by Mr. B. Weaver were most earnest and convincing, whilst the rendering of the sacred solos by Mr. Frank Weaver proved a great attraction, and contributed largely to the success of the effort. The after-meetings were largely attended, and there is reason to believe that this visit of the Brothers Weaver has been much owned of God.

Mission to the Blind.

THE Indigent Blind Visiting Society has arranged for a special mission to the blind of the Metropolis. With their guides they will be gathered at nine centres, and embrace in all about 3500 persons. The mission will begin on October 17, and close on December 14. Several well-known ministers and evangelists will take part in the services, and the earnest hope of the promoters is that believers may be revived, and that many of those who are blind to the beauty of Christ and salvation may have their inner eyes opened.

The mission is organised at the request and expense of a friend of the work. Names and addresses of blind persons in London not already connected with the Society may be sent to Mr. W. Mead, superintendent, 95, Gurney-road, Stratford, E. At the initial meeting on Monday next about 600 blind and guides will assemble in St. James's Hall, Royal-road, Kennington Park.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. GEO. CLARKE is conducting an Evangelistic Mission at Jedburgh. The Boston U.P. Church, in which the meetings are being held, has been crowded, and there are signs of interest and concern on the part of many.

MR. H. STAFFORD SMITH, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted tent missions during the summer in various towns and villages of Wilts and Dorset. He has preached the Gospel with power and acceptance, and with much blessing.

During the past season the Gordon Evangelistic Mission has had five tents in use at various places, from Forfar in the south to Nairn in the north. Generally the meetings were largely attended, and many professed to have passed from death to life.

Mr. DUNCAN MCCOLL, of the Glasgow Open-air Mission, assisted by Messrs. Kerr and Box, of Glasgow, has concluded a series of evangelistic meetings in Alness, N.B. The meetings were well attended, and many were led to decision for Christ.

We thank God, writes Mr. L. B. Edgerton, for the visit of Mr. B. H. ANGEL to our Public Hall, Bedfont. During his five-days' mission, October 2-6, we have received much blessing, and souls have confessed Christ as their Saviour. The gatherings increased night after night, a pair-horse brake load coming from Hounslow on the last evening.

During September the "Bishop Hooper" Protestant Van was in charge of Mr. SAMUEL BRADFIELD, who held some interesting meetings in the parishes of Birssage, France Lynch, Oakridge Lynch, and Bisley, near Stroud, Glos. Night after night the people gathered in large numbers, and listened with deep attention to the message brought to them by the evangelist.

A united Gospel mission, extending over nearly three weeks, has been conducted at Tewkesbury by Mr. ROWLAND EDWARDS, of the Evangelisation Society. The premises of the Y.M.C.A. branch were the headquarters, but on two Sunday nights the Philharmonic Hall was occupied and packed to overflowing. Some of the local pastors and other brethren took a very active part throughout. Afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated, and at the nightly after-meetings seekers were dealt with in all earnestness. A goodly number of hearers have declared that they have found blessing; and lasting results are humbly but confidently anticipated.

Rev. F. B. MEYER has arranged to conduct an evangelistic mission at Park Church, Grosvenor-road, Highbury, commencing on Sunday, October 16, and continuing each afternoon, 3.30 to 4.30 (except Monday), and each evening (except Tuesday) at 8 o'clock. Tuesday evening is devoted to a foreign mission valedictory meeting in Park Church in connection with the Presbyterian Missionary Society, at which meeting Mr. Meyer gives the valedictory address. The church is in the immediate neighbourhood of Canonbury Station, on the North London Railway. The fellowship of Christian friends living in the neighbourhood will be warmly welcomed at the mission meetings.

A very gracious blessing has attended a month's mission services conducted by Mr. VIVIAN (Evangelisation Society) in his Gospel tent, which he pitched near the parish church in Lye. Some 2000 of the inhabitants were in the country "hopping"; still, good congregations gathered night by night and listened attentively to the Word faithfully preached. Not a few have decided for Jesus Christ during the mission. A specially pleasing feature of the mission was the unity among the churches—most of which closed their ordinary week evening services in order to unite in the Gospel mission. Not a few representatives from the churches took part in the meetings. The preaching was earnest, simple, plain, evangelical, and pointed. The influence of the mission will, I am sure, still tell upon the churches. THOS. G. VINSON, Congl. Minister.

MR. W. D. DUNN, evangelist, has changed his address. Communications should be directed to him at Haldane, Buchanan-drive, Cambuslang, N.B.

The engagements of the BROTHERS WEAVER to the end of the year are:—Peterhead, Free South Church, Oct. 16-23; Hull, Prospect-street Presbyterian Church, Oct. 30-Nov. 11; Darlington, Nov. 20-Dec. 2; Belfast, opening of Shankhill-road Presbyterian Hall (Rev. H. Montgomery), Nov. 27-Dec. 9.

Requests for Prayer.

Temperance Notes.

Mr. Joseph Malins, speaking at Leeds, said he found Gothenburg a frightfully drunken place. The system gave an opportunity for municipal corruption and paralysed the police.

Rev. George Hanson, speaking at a conference of temperance workers at Regent-square Church, mentioned that for some years he was chaplain of a criminal lunatic asylum in Ireland, and found that some 70 per cent. of the inmates came to their condition through drink.

The National United Temperance Council has issued a couple of excellent penny pamphlets, entitled respectively, "The Organising of Public Meetings" and "How to make a United Temperance Mission Successful." They contain a great deal of useful information, and may be had of the Ideal Publishing Union, 33, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Vice-Consul Keating, in a report on the agriculture of the State of Maine, U.S.A., issued by the Foreign Office, says:—"The Maine Liquor Law is certainly not enforced in the cities, but I think it may safely be said that throughout the rural districts the law has had a wonderfully good effect, and whenever the mass of the inhabitants desire its enforcement the law is on the statutes to support them."

In connection with the Canadian Plébiscite the New York Voice submitted to the heads of firms in the Dominion this question, "Do you consider that a saloon located in close proximity to your establishment is a detriment to your business. If so, why?" The answer in almost every instance was a decided affirmative, only six or eight of the hundreds of firms sending in replies having a favourable word to say of the saloons.

Mr. Bennett Burleigh, in his "Sirdar and Khalifa," says:—"The men had neither beer nor rum rations issued to them, nor did the few articles offered for sale at stiff prices in their canteens include liquor of any kind...The Sirdar, as well as Major-General Gatacre, set his face like flint against the issuance of beer to the British troops. It has been shown again and again that a beer ration in the Soudan had ruinous effect upon the men's health and morale...Greeks and others who had smuggled wine and spirituous compounds into camp had the liquor seized and poured out upon the insatiable desert sand."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, speaking at a special meeting of the National Temperance League at the Mansion House, said he did not think that there had been at any time in the history of their cause any real reason for discouragement. They had, however, had to meet with a great deal of opposition and ridicule, and he had no doubt that there would be a recrudescence of all this whenever they seemed to be very near to attaining their end. He considered that the way in which the cause had penetrated into the minds of thinking people was most remarkable. They must determine not to slacken—and he certainly did not mean to do so—until they had won.

In an address at Liverpool on Saturday Lord Lister made an outspoken defence of vivisection in connection with scientific research. Welcome Home.—Two interesting meetings were held last week at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town. Both were largely attended. The one on Tuesday was the usual monthly muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew, when addresses were given by Mr. William Luff and others on the text for the month (Zeph. iii. 17): "The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty." The meeting on Wednesday was the annual meeting in connection with the work among the bargemen, and was presided over by Mr. Theodore Howard. Addresses were given by Rev. R. Dawson, Colonel Simpson, and others. Mr. Blanchard, the missionary among bargemen, gave an interesting account of his efforts at the "fo'c'sle." The additional premises, with a larger mission-room, will be opened on Tuesday, November 1. Meetings at 3 and 7 o'clock.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Liverpool returns to his diocese to-day and resumes his episcopal duties. He is reported to be in excellent health.

The Bishop of Brisbane has received a second contribution from an anonymous donor of £2500 for the Brisbane Cathedral Building Fund.

Rev. H. J. Foss, for twenty-two years a missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel at Kobe, has been appointed Bishop of Osaka, Japan.

The jubilee of the opening of Keble's church at Horsley, near Winchester, has just been celebrated. Keble rebuilt the church out of the profits of "The Christian Year."

The new church of St. Saviour in Gladstone-road, Scarborough, was opened last week by the Archbishop of York. The building is designed to accommodate 350 persons.

The Lord Mayor-elect, Alderman Sir John Moore, has appointed Rev. R. Whittington, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, to be his chaplain.

An anonymous donor has just sent a cheque for £300 to Rev. W. Carlile for the purpose of converting a building in Star-road, Kensington, into a Church Army lodging home, in connection with the society's labour home there.

Rev. F. C. Jackson, whose decease was recorded in a recent issue, and who was until last year rector of Great Stanmore, was an artist of such repute that by his paintings he earned enough to restore the beautiful church of Great Stanmore.

The Bishop of Newcastle dedicated at Hexham Abbey last week the "Newcastle No. 2" Church Army van, the initial cost of which has been collected locally by Canon Robinson, of Ulgham. There was a large attendance of clergy and laity present.

Mr. Gerald Balfour, M.P., in opening on Saturday last some buildings in connection with a Leeds mission, said he did not think there was any work more deserving of sympathy than that which sought to bring light and faith and hope to the masses in our large towns.

At a conference of clergy and laity in the archdeaconry of Salop, held at Shrewsbury, it was resolved: "That, in the opinion of this conference, the county of Salop would form a sufficient and convenient area for a new diocese, and that, in view of a provision already made for it, the efforts of Churchmen in Shropshire should at once and continuously be extended in that direction."

Congregational.

The project of a Congregational Hall for Manchester is being discussed, and is likely to take definite shape shortly.

Rev. James Knaggs, after a pastorate of over thirty years, has resigned the charge of Grove Church, Stratford.

The London Missionary Society's week of special prayer, thanksgiving, and self-denial for the London churches will be held from Nov. 20 to Nov. 26.

Special services have been held by Rev. Morlais Jones, commemorative of the hundredth year of the existence of the church at Lewisham and of the thirtieth year of the present pastor's ministry.

During the absence of Rev. F. B. Meyer in India the services at Christ Church, Westminster-road, will be conducted on Sunday mornings by Rev. A. W. Evans, and in the evenings by Dr. H. G. Guinness.

A special mission, which extended over a fortnight, has just been held in the church at Moy, co. Tyrone. The church was crowded every night, and a number profess to have received definite spiritual blessing.

Principal Cave, of Hackney College, speaking at a United Christian Conference in Bradford, asked: Is not the time ripe for an English-speaking Churches Congress? He wondered whether they could not have a British Association for the Advancement of Religion.

The Rev. Charles Garnett, late of Ancoats, Manchester, began his ministry at the Arundel-square Church, Barnsbury, London, on Sunday last, by preaching to large and deeply interested congregations. His new address is 12, Freegrove-road, Holloway, N.

Carr's-lane Church, Birmingham, celebrates its 150th anniversary in November. The Monthly Record of the congregation sketches the programme of the proceedings. Dr. John Brown, Rev. Arnold Thomas, Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Monro Gibson, and Dr. Robertson Nicoll are announced to speak.

During last month 13,078 admissions of homeless men were recorded at Medland Hall. Notwithstanding the increased accommodation recently provided, 869 men were refused admission owing to lack of room. Thirty-nine men have been provided with permanent employment at wages ranging from 18s. to 28s. a week, and a large number are casually employed, with a view to being taken on permanently as vacancies occur. The feeding of Medland Hall men involves about 1800 4lb. loaves a month.

At the autumnal meetings of Warwickshire Union, held at Tamworth, Rev. J. H. Jowett, in his presidential address, said they should lay aside an enfeebling and compromising reserve; let them cease to speak with bated breath of the principles for which their fathers died; let them have a more intense and pronounced denominationalism, and they could then rest assured that their churches would increase in unselfish vigour and would be prepared for a union which should be a fruitful reality and not a luxurious dream.

Baptist.

The eleventh anniversary of Cann Hall Church, Leytonstone (Rev. H. F. Gower), was celebrated last week. Cheering progress was reported in all departments of work.

The Birmingham Auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society has celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary. Sermons have been preached in no fewer than thirty churches in Birmingham and the district.

At East Midlands Association, Rev. G. Goodchild, of Skegness, speaking upon the Free Church mission in the rural districts, suggested the method of house-to-house visitation by trained colporteurs.

Rev. W. J. Price, the late secretary of the Young People's Missionary Association, sailed on Thursday for India, being accompanied by Mrs. Price. They voyage by the P. and O. s.s. India for Bombay; their future station will be Monghyr.

On a recent Sunday morning a large number of persons assembled on the banks of the Rhymney river (Bedwas Bridge) to witness the public baptism by immersion of two believers. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Morgan James, pastor of the church.

Methodist.

Sunday last was observed as Foreign Missions Sunday in the Wesleyan Churches in Scotland, many of the pulpits being occupied by missionaries.

At Tredegar the memorial stones of a new Primitive Methodist chapel were laid last week in the presence of a very large congregation. The new building is proposed to accommodate about 600 or 700 persons.

At Brookwood in the Farnborough Mission encouraging progress is reported. There was no society here when the chapel was opened a year ago. Now there are nineteen church members and fifty children in the Sunday-school.

Distressing accounts have reached the Wesleyan Missionary Committee of the condition of the missionaries labouring in the West Indies, caused through the recent hurricane. In certain circuits every church has been destroyed.

The District Conventions which are to be held in various parts of the country by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes commenced auspiciously at Cardiff. Large numbers of ministers and office-bearers attended; the gatherings were of an inspiriting character.

The Wesleyan Mission Car which is employed in the Sheffield district is at present engaged among the villages of the Brunswick Circuit, in several of which a gracious work has been proceeding. In one small village there have been more than forty inquirers.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference states that he has recently been in communication with Dr. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, and in answer to the Bishop's inquiry as to the number of laymen employed in Methodism in directly spiritual work, has stated it to be 250,000.

The Grand Theatre, Manchester, has again been secured by the Manchester Wesleyan Mission for Sunday evening services, in addition to the Free Trade Hall and the Central Hall at headquarters. It is estimated that last Sunday evening at least 20,000 persons attended the Mission's various services.

Though the Primitive Methodists are not a large body in South Wales, yet they have suffered severely by the late unfortunate strike, and many of their chapels are seriously embarrassed. Mr. W. P. Hartley has initiated a fund to relieve the difficulty thus caused. He has promised to contribute 25 per cent. on whatever sum may be raised for this special purpose, and the committee of the General Chapel Fund has promised a similar amount.

Presbyterian.

Presbyteries are urging Sessions to bring the claims of the Aged and Infirm Ministers' Fund before congregations. Efforts are being made to increase the capital. At present the maximum retiring allowance for ministers is £50 a year.

Dr. J. Rutherford Morris, a member of Warrenden Park Free Church for a number of years, has been ordained by the Free Presbytery as a missionary, and appointed to the mission station at Sheikh-Othman, near Aden, which was started by the Hon. Ion Keith Falconer in 1886.

A very encouraging six days' mission has been conducted in St. George's Church, Stockton, by Rev. W. F. Holt, of Birmingham. It was generally a time of refreshing and quickening. A very satisfactory feature of the mission was the number who attended the afternoon Bible readings.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Rev. Geo. Jackson, B.A., has written, in Judgment: Human and Divine (1s. Isbister & Co.), a helpful little book, calculated to impress upon all readers the beauty of the law of love.

In Dying to Self (1s. Nisbet & Co.) we have another of the intensely incisive booklets containing dialogues by William Law, accompanied by notes specially written by Dr. Andrew Murray.

Dr. J. R. Miller writes for head and heart, and his latest work, The Joy of Service, has all the beauty of literary form, and the strength of spiritual appeal that characterise his many works. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Dr. Monro Gibson gives us, in From Fact to Faith (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), some clear cut disquisitions illustrative of spiritual progress from a narrow survey of things of the earth, earthy, to a realisation of, and rest in, things Divine.

He Knoweth and Love Abounding (6d. E. Kauffmann) are packets of embossed leaflets, containing verses by Charlotte Murray and Mercedes Rivalta. They are tastefully prepared, and are admirably suited for enclosure in letters.

Dr. Alexander Mackennal's very practical book The Seven Churches in Asia has been issued in a cheap edition. (Elliot Stock.) The churches are considered as types of the religious life of to-day, and the messages of Christ to the angels are applied with insight and force.

Wherein (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) comprises a series of thoughtful and informing studies in the book of Malachi, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, originally delivered to the students at Mr. Moody's Bible School, and subsequently to the author's congregation at Tollington Park.

In Methods of Soul-Culture, by Rev. J. A. Clapperton, M.A. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society) thoughts on the Christian virtues and graces are presented in a form that should be helpful to many. The chapters are thirty in number, so the book might be studied day by day, and its unfoldings of Scripture truth applied to the conscience.

In Clouds that Pass (2s. S. W. Partridge & Co.) Mrs. Gertrude Hart gives a weirdly written Anglo-Australian story, in which the chief merits lie in the bright dialogue and the powerful descriptions of hospital life. Some may think the portrayal of the sufferings of little children somewhat too harrowing, not to say Zola-esque, but Mrs. Hart, while touching on the terrible, emphasises the pathos of the sick ward, and the nobility of life and deed that characterises the medical and nursing professions at their best.

Mrs. Mary W. Tileston has compiled a somewhat remarkable book, with the title Great Souls at Prayer (2s. 6d. James Bowden). From liturgies and church manuals, as well as from the writings of famous men and women, she has gathered choice words of prayer, praise, and inspiration. The sources combine Roman Catholic with Protestant, Unitarian with Evangelical, and the contents are arranged in readiness for daily use throughout an entire year. We do not recommend such books for devotional purposes; but this compilation, with extracts covering a literature beginning with Augustine (354-430) and ending with Christina Rossetti (1830-1895), is certain to assist a profitable study of prayer in a devout mind.

Among recent books for young women, issued by the Religious Tract Society, Maidens Three (2s. 6d.) stands out as a forcible story, of crisp dialogue and sound moral. It will be read with profit. Fencote's Fate (1s. 6d.), if scarcely equal to the last-mentioned book in grace of style, may please readers who have a special regard for love stories. The Twins that Did not Pair (2s.) is well calculated, so far as its obvious aim is concerned, to impress young people for good, and, indeed, to stimulate them to a life of true Christianity. We may, however, express a doubt whether the recurring descriptions, in some recent books, of somewhat showy life are not likely to counteract the effect of the religious moral, and thereby set up, however unintentionally, a life ideal different from that which it was rightly intended to create.

The Women's Total Abstinence Union (4, Ludgate-hill, E.C.) have published a rousing leaflet, entitled "Who is on the Lord's side?" appealing to Christians to range themselves on the side of temperance effort. We hope it may be widely circulated.

The Closing Verses of the First Gospel is a booklet in which Dr. Anderson throws welcome light on an acknowledged difficulty. In a word, he gives reasons for believing that the "500 brethren" of 1 Cor. xv. 6, were with "the eleven disciples" of Matt. xxviii. 16, on the occasion of the Lord's appearance on a mountain in Galilee after his resurrection. The reasons assigned for the actual form of the narrative constitute the chief value of Dr. Anderson's pages. (1d. Marshall Bros.)

More About the "Hooligans."

IT is just seven months since, mainly as the outcome of an article I wrote in The Christian —"Reaching the Hooligans"—our new Southwark Home Mission was commenced.

Then, I was met on all hands with such questions as "Who are the Hooligans?" "What does Hooligan mean?" Now, through the publicity since given by the newspapers to the lawlessness in this part of South-East London which I then drew attention to, everyone understands what "Hooliganism" is, and "Hooligan" has become a recognised word as much as "boycott," and this part of the metropolis is known generally as "Hooliganland."

For about nineteen weeks we continued every-night Gospel services, with continuous blessing manifested at almost every meeting. By dint of dragging the Gospel-net through the highways and slums, constant house-to-house visitation, our Medical Mission, etc., we have been bringing under the preaching of the Gospel a constant supply of fresh hearers, the great majority of whom were previously. God has honoured his Word beyond all expectations. Some of the most notorious characters have been converted to God, and the great improvement in the neighbourhood is a matter of public comment.

We are now beginning our winter's work with a useful band of home-made, voluntary helpers

RECRUITED FROM THE VERY CLASSES

we are seeking to evangelise—men and women enslaved by drink, vice, gambling, betting, pugilism, etc.

One was a cardsharper, another a pugilist, involved in racing swindles; another was a singer in the lowest class of music-halls; another was the chairman at the weekly harmonic meeting held in a neighbouring public-house; several of the women, too, were the

BEST-KNOWN DRUNKARDS IN THE DISTRICT,

but are now earnest, consistent Christian mothers. All these, and a number of young factory-workers brought to Christ in our Factory Girls' Institute, are now devoting their leisure hours after work, and nearly all their day of rest, to bring others to the Saviour's feet in the streets and courts where they live, and used a few months ago themselves to be "led captive by the Devil at his will."

As to reaching the inner circles of Hooliganism, our main difficulties have been that as soon as our Home Mission was started we were as busy as we could be night after night

DEALING WITH ANXIOUS SOULS.

We had scarcely any helpers beyond our mission staff, and the light, summer evenings began very soon afterwards. Now we have a nucleus of willing-minded, warm-hearted workers, and through the dark winter months we hope to see many of the most reckless and lawless characters around us brought to decision for Christ.

For obvious reasons I must ask to be excused from going into details in print. I have no fear for my personal safety, although has prevailed of late hereabouts. The poor man Mappin, who was so cruelly murdered, attended our Hall, and we helped him to lead an honest life and endeavoured to find him employment, but his old associates used to point him out at his work as an ex-convict and get him discharged. The real reason for his murder was, I believe, fear that he might give information as to the misdeeds of his former companions in crime. Although closely watched and under special police protection, the principal witness against his alleged murderer—a mere youth of sixteen, whose mother's paramour has been thrice tried for manslaughter in this district, and within the last fortnight escaped conviction for stabbing a man through the non-appearance of the prosecutor—was driven from home by sheer fear of the gang.

Hooligans cannot be reached by demonstrations or free suppers. They must be approached individually by those in whose good faith they can rely. The best workers for this purpose are those who have been their "pals," and whose changed lives none can gainsay. It is a "one-by-one," button-holing work. But, after all, our great aim must be to for it is easier to prevent a score from drifting into Hooliganism than to redeem one confirmed miscreant from it.

I am more convinced than ever that the true cause of this rampant Hooliganism is the absence of loving Christian influence. Mere knowledge often only enlarges the horizon swept by a vicious mind. It is the Gospel preached simply, the Gospel expounded from the Scriptures, the Gospel exemplified in works of mercy, the Gospel illustrated in changed lives around—that can win the heart, change the will, and give the mind its true bearings as between time and eternity.

OUR HOME HALL.

In our Home Hall we mean to have meetings held every night all through the winter—Gospel meetings, recruited by vigorous open-air work and diligent visitations; prayer meetings, where believing hearts may plead and claim the exceeding great and precious promises; edification meetings, where souls may be built up in the faith once delivered to the saints; testimony meetings, missionary meetings, neighbourly meetings—all the meetings which tend to develop all-round Christianity.

We have a Mothers' Meeting, which already numbers over 320 members. If it has grown thus during the seven months, what may it not become in the approaching winter?

One very pleasing feature in connection with the work—especially in the Open Air—is that through the influence of our Boys' Home, Medical Mission, etc., we have the respect and affection of the people, so that we never meet with even a rough word or a black look, much less any interruption or opposition. All friends from a distance who come to help us are much struck with this.

OUR MEDICAL MISSION

In our Medical Mission we have a qualified doctor, sister superintendent, and dispenser, whose whole time is given to the wants of the sick poor around us, not only at the medical mission services on Tuesdays and Fridays, but in their own homes every day of the week. They are assisted by about twelve voluntary lady workers, most of them acquiring a knowledge of nursing, etc., with a view to increased usefulness by-and-by in the foreign mission field. This in itself is becoming a great work. One great need is from which portions of nutritious food cooked appetisingly can be supplied in cases where it is often more necessary even than medicine. In many one-room homes there are no appliances to cook food nicely, and the sight and smell of the cooking discourage an appetite that has faded almost to vanishing point. Then think of the awful fried fish, whelks, roasted chestnuts, etc., that are ignorantly given sometimes to mere babes, or the "invalid requisites" and "meat extracts," made from putrid livers, which are sold under the closely imitated name of some well-known preparation to the poor, who spend their last penny to help loved sick ones to recover. This kitchen will cost us quite £150 through the winter, even on a very inadequate scale to the need around us. Will some friends help us to start it?

OUR GIRLS' INSTITUTE.

Our Girls' Institute for young women and girls employed in factories, etc., is doing a work, both evangelistic and preventive, that is of deep importance. In a neighbourhood so overcrowded as this part of South-east London now is, where exorbitant rents are driving families into one apartment, who a little while ago could afford two or three, there is often no room at home for a girl after she leaves work till it is time to go to bed. She is thus forced to gad about the streets or stand at the corners exposed to

TEMPTATION, CONTAMINATION, AND INSULT.

If a place is provided where these girls can be safely sheltered while they sew, read, chat together, and rest comfortably after their day's toil, what a mercy this is to them! But when you add dress-making, cooking, ambulance, improvement classes, etc., with quiet Gospel talks, sweet hymns, and pleading prayers before they disperse once more to face the risks that beset them at home and at work, who can tell what such care and example mean to budding womanhood? Many of these young women are now bright, earnest Christians, and help us bravely in our open-air work.

The hall, etc., allotted for their use is quite too small. A larger hall, now apportioned as the Youths' Institute, ought at once to be given over for the shielding of these young women in addition. I feel very strongly on this point, more strongly than I can trust myself to express. It will be if through the dark winter evenings these poor girls have to spend their evening leisure hours walking about the streets, instead of being shielded from harm in which they can sit under happy Christian influence.

SIMPLY FOR WANT OF ROOM,

My dear Friends in Council very prudently hesitate to increase our responsibilities without some indication of forthcoming support in proportion to the unexpected growth of this Home Mission work, and it is a serious matter in a neighbourhood where a railway arch (not a large one either) rented direct from the railway company means £100 a year! But, I ask, "Are there not some friends who for the sake of these hundreds of young women will help to bear the

EXTRA RENTAL FOR THE FIRST YEAR?

It is only a matter of rent, for there need be no outlay beyond about £40 for strong chairs and tables. I can only say this lies more heavily on my heart than any Christian duty ever set before me. This is a very serious, urgent matter.

YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.

Here we gather lads who would otherwise be the pests of the neighbourhood. They read and chat together, use the gymnasium, etc., and in this way we get to know them and draw them on to come to the services, Bible-classes, etc. Many of them are steadfast, Christian young fellows, and almost all of them are to be seen every Sunday night under the preaching of the Gospel in our Home Hall instead of roving the streets in noisy gangs as they used to do. I must reserve fuller particulars of this effort for another occasion.

If we are able to move their Institute so as to give the much-needed accommodation to the girls, I hope we shall be able to secure larger premises for these working youths, and not only save them from street contaminations, but recruit them for Christ.

In these days, when Ritualism, Unitarianism, and humanitarianism are spreading so many worldly lures to beguile young people into soul-poisoning error, we should lose not a day in drawing them together under Christian, scriptural, prayerful influence. It will never be easier to do so than now—it may soon be much more difficult.

Do not let us doubt the power of the Gospel, or the ever-abiding presence of the Lord with us according to his promise, when preaching it. The people will gather to hear the Gospel as they will to hear nothing else. It meets the heart's need as nothing else can. It is never more precious to us than when we are seeking to hold it forth to others. When we begin to fail in this we begin to lose the enjoyment of the Gospel in our hearts. We must take it to the people in their own vernacular, into the slums, into the courts, at their doors, under their windows, to their very bedsides. It is nowhere in England needed more to-day than in the rampant lawlessness and seething vice which have made this part of South-east London so notorious of late. Who will by prayerful remembrance, by practical sympatay, come "to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty"—"where Satan's seat is"?

J. W. C. FEGAN.

In his book, "After the Thousand Years," Mr. George F. Trench lifted the telescope of prophecy, and pointed out the relation one to another of some of the outstanding future developments of God's purpose, as set forth in Divine revelation. Among other things he found "the Dispensation of the fulness of times" as a period intervening between the millennial reign of Christ and the eternal state beyond. To this period he applies the expressions, "Kingdom of the Son of God's love" and the "Kingdom that cannot be shaken"—a kingdom which is the heritage of Christ to enjoy as Heir of all things and Head of the new creation. The subject has great interest for all students of prophecy, and the first edition of the book was soon exhausted. A new edition has now been issued, and it is hoped that it will assist many to view the glorious reign of Christ in the light of the grandeur with which it is invested in the sure word of prophecy. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

The various deliverances of the Archbishop of Canterbury last week will not, we fear, allay the heat of feeling and the alarm which are spreading through the country. He repudiates transubstantiation, but declares that it is lawful to teach "the real and actual presence of our Lord under the form of bread and wine upon the altars of our churches." He went into a long and subtle definition of the differences between the Romish view and this ; but we are sure that ordinary minds would not follow him, and that everyone, whether agreeing with him or differing from him, would say that this means the consecrating priest, and that the Church is built upon the priesthood. If so, the laity is in the hands of the priest, and we have spiritual intolerance and pride and corruption on one side, and superstition and indifference on the other.

The Rock wishes to concentrate the attention of Protestant Churchmen on "this momentous fact, that the Archbishop of Canterbury, apparently with the sanction of the other bishops, has distinctly committed the Church of England to the Real Presence as it is usually understood. Unless Protestant Churchmen rouse themselves and stand for old truths, the Church of England is doomed ; indeed, we believe the Primate's charge to be the knell of the Establishment." This article is followed by another, in which it is said that there is a growing yearning for home reunion among the Evangelical churches ; a consciousness that a grave crisis is upon us, which demands the concentration of all Protestant forces.

This is a significant and hopeful sign of the times. It is the first time that the hand of Churchmen has been so uncompromisingly held out to Nonconformists. Our contemporary asks :—

In the face of this determined assault upon the central citadel, shall we stand aloof from our Nonconformist brethren because they conscientiously believe in Disestablishment? Is a tottering Establishment, whose official heads have deliberately committed it to all sorts of heresies, doomed as much by the weak-kneed, back-boneless policy of the "charitable" majority of Protestant Churchmen as by the organised aggressions of the sacerdotalists, of more value than the hearty co-operation of spiritually minded men, whose only offence is the rejection of an episcopacy which is ever degenerating into prelacy, then striving to hand over the Church to Sacramentarianism.

If this is really the mind of the pronounced and thorough Evangelical leading men in the Established Church, a new order of things may be expected to arise. We shall find ourselves at a place where two ways meet, and the Sacerdotalists will go one way and the Evangelicals another. Hitherto, however, some of the foremost Evangelical and Evangelistic "Churchmen to the backbone" have rather clung to Churchism, though leavened by Sacerdotalism, than freely fraternised with Nonconformists who were really and truly Evangelical men of God. But the Lord's battles cannot be fought with carnal weapons. This is not our warfare, but God's. We are his servants, his soldiers ; and only as He goes before us can we succeed. Therefore let us pray without ceasing—"O Lord, revive thy work ; in the midst of the years make Thyself known. Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

The attitude of friendly alliance and co-operation taken by the Congregational Union towards the Evangelical section of the Church of England is the right one. But Evangelicals must not lean on outside auxiliaries, and the Union was kindly firm on that point. Dr. John Brown thought that they "had been guilty of almost sinful silence in not speaking out more loudly than they did." If these words are accepted in the spirit in which they were spoken, they cannot but produce a rousing and strengthening effect. It will never do for Evangelicals to adopt the tone of a distinguished clergyman, who wrote to Dr. Horton, saying, "We in the Church of England are helpless, and we look to you who are Nonconformists to rescue our country from this detestable tyranny." No party and no individual is helpless who is on the side of truth, and "who would be free themselves must strike the blow."

The arrival of the belated equinoctials has brought with it the first crop of accidents at sea. The most tragic was the total loss on the Manacle rocks, near Lizard Point, on Friday evening, of the outward-bound liner Mohegan, with two-thirds of the lives on board. Of the fifty lives saved forty-four were rescued by the brave life-boat crew of Porthoustock, whose daring and devotion will send a thrill of pride throughout the country. Certainly there ought to be a lighthouse on the Manacles. Mr. Passmore Edwards offered to erect one at his own cost, but Trinity House declined on the ground of the expense of keeping it up. Sooner or later such a policy always ends in some terrible disaster.

Is there not something here that illustrates a similar tendency in the spiritual life? It is possible to neglect a constant peril, to delay a much-needed reform of character, under the plea that the chances are all in our favour, that it is too much trouble to attend to it, and so on ; and for a long time nothing happens to disturb the sense of security. Without warning at last the threatened evil comes upon us, and we find ourselves at the mercy of irresistible forces, against which a little foresight and watchfulness would have made us safe. It is better to avoid disaster by preparing against it than to dwell in a false security in the hope of escape in the hour of trial. The many injunctions to watchfulness which we find in our Lord's discourses show how keenly He realised the perils of indifference, and the lamentable consequences of neglect.

The Principal of a Nonconformist College states it as his opinion that the practice of family prayer is declining, and wherever he goes he dwells upon the blessedness of observing it. We have so often seen this stated, and in places so wide apart, that we fear it is only too true. Simultaneously with the decline of family prayer, which once was the characteristic of Nonconformist homes, comes a complaint in The Independent of the decline of Bible reading. Of course the two habits flourish or decay together. Prayer can only live upon the truths and influence of the Bible, and he who prays little shows thereby that he reads little. We are paying a terrible price for our go-aheadness, in the damage of body and in the loss of spiritual power from which we are suffering. Even men who pray at meetings sometimes speak to God as if their minds had not been saturated with Divine truth. If we are to read and meditate and pray, we must take time to do it.

May we not call attention to the contrast between ministers of the Gospel and military officers in regard to the age when they can render effective service? Ministers over fifty years of age are now mostly considered ineligible for pastorates. It is one of the prejudices of Christian churches which needs correcting. On the other hand, it is remarkable that in the conduct of the war with Spain the leadership has been almost exclusively in the hands of men considerably past that age. The men whose names are conspicuous in the American forces, such as Dewey, Sampson, Miles, Merritt, Shafter, Wheeler, and Lawton, are more than sixty years old. Why should it be that only in the ministry of God's Word men of mature years are put aside as unfit for leadership? In medicine, in law, in diplomacy, knowledge and experience are in request. Only in pastorship and preaching, experience and practice are regarded as disqualifying for service! What an anomaly!

Dr. Dale used to be fond of pointing out the vital connection there is between all the great Gospel doctrines and the practical questions presented in daily life. In his preliminary essay to Schmidt's work on "The Social Results of Early Christianity" he says that at the root of all our theories concerning the ideal social order lies our conception of the nature of man:

> The Christian doctrine of man is implicated in the Christian doctrine of God; or, to speak more exactly, in the Christian doctrine of the Trinity; and the Christian doctrine of man determines the Christian theory of morals and the Christian theory of society.

One reason why certain teaching on social questions is not heard with avidity is doubtless due in part to the divorce between the deep things of God and the things of the workshop and the market. Some treat only of the latter; the two should be joined.

When we see that city missionaries can go into hotels and public-houses, and hold long conversations with the men who frequent them, and that preachers can get congregations in the street and on the racecourse, a bright light is cast upon the words of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The door of opportunity may open in the most unlikely places, and the most unlikely person may become the loveliest Christian. The highways and the slums may prove a better gathering ground than many regular congregations. There certainly is always a blessing in obeying the command to "go" and "seek."

It has often been pointed out that a good deal of the teaching of later science is strongly corroborative of the ethical teaching of Scripture; and it has also been said that "our realistic novels have one merit at least—they preach with one voice that the wages of sin is death, death for the individual and death for the world." There may be a good deal of truth in this; but how ineffective science and realistic literature are to turn men's hearts to righteousness! The reason is, they give no hope, they point out no better way, they supply no adequate motive and help. Heredity is, in science, an iron law, and knows of no redemption coming down from above.

Fiction shows the effects of evil-doing, but leaves the problem of recovery and amendment where it found it. The keen satire of "Vanity Fair" has never, since the day of the appearance of that powerful novel, abated the intrigues, the falseness, and the shame of fashionable life. Yet Thackeray was moved by pure motives, and set before himself a high ideal. The lack of the very thought and influence which distinguish every page of the Gospel is the fatal defect of the teaching which shows the sin and degradation, and can go no further.

Many of our readers will, with us, heartily endorse the protest in Tuesday's Daily Chronicle against the deterioration and degradation of our periodical literature.

The Daily News is placing all lovers of peace under deep obligations by the letters on Continental feeling regarding the Czar's Rescript written by its special commissioner to the various capitals of Europe. Speaking of the sentiment at St. Petersburg, the writer strikes a very hopeful note. He is persuaded that the movement has come from the Czar personally, that it is the fruit of his own deep convictions, and that in this matter he means to be "master in his own house." This is indeed good news, in view of the pessimistic views expressed by diplomatists generally on the prospects of a disarmament commission. It is disquieting to learn from the same source that our own Government is among the three or four who have not yet replied to the Czar's invitation.

By way of contrasting the enthusiasm of four of the chief nations for military as compared with educational training, the following figures are suggestive. England heads the list with £40,650,000 a year for the maintenance of Army and Navy, while she spends £10,140,000 on educating her children. France spends £36,570,000 and £7,920,000 respectively, while Germany's figures are £32,840,000 and £12,120,000. Thus, these three countries still consider it necessary to spend £4 in military preparation for every £1 spent on preparing their youth for the battle of life. The United States forms an honourable exception, and almost reverses this proportion, spending £16,700,000 on her soldiers and £36,000,000 on her children. It is clear that in Europe at least there is much work to be done ere the peace sentiment has its proper place in the opinions of those in authority.

The pathetic letters of Carl Neufeld (who was released by the Sirdar from a twelve years' imprisonment at Omdurman), which were addressed to his brother and to the proprietors of the African Review, give a vivid impression of the horrible cruelties of the Mahdi and his successors towards their captives. To have rid the earth of the unspeakable system of tyranny that made them possible is a benefit to unnumbered millions as well as to this poor victim of savagery. He is the survivor of thousands who have gone down into the pit of death with no record of their fate except their bleaching bones, and whose story no man can tell. Truly, man's "greatness is seen in the terrible ruin he makes." Those who deny that he is a fallen creature would do well to study Mahdism by way of corrective. If, then, they turn to Rom. ii. 28-32, they will find an old-world picture in sad harmony with these modern saturnalia of lust and cruelty. Unredeemed human nature is much the same in all ages.

Important as are the political changes that have taken place in China, we look with more solicitude to see what is the attitude of the nation towards Christianity; not the official attitude, but that of the mind and heart of the people. Dynasties may rise and fall, men in high office may be banished or put to death, forms of government may be changed; but the determining factor in the history of the nation is what the people are doing with Jesus Christ. In many places they are receiving Him as their Saviour and King. That veteran missionary Dr. Muirhead, of Shanghai, testifies that there is "good reason to hope that a new era is dawning, fraught with higher blessing than it has hitherto experienced." He has recently baptized in the city and foreign settlement sixty-eight persons, only two of them being children, most of them young men. The work has been preceded by much prayer and devotion. A higher standard of Christian life has taken possession of the native Christians. The kingdom of God waits not on politics, but comes as the dominating power.

The revolution in China is probably to be understood as the result of a conflict between the forces of progress and reaction. It is a pity that some papers should persistently trace it entirely to the rival machinations of English and Russian diplomacy. Such a course can only work havoc at a time when everything possible should be done to lay the spirit of distrust between great nations about to join in a peace convention. Fortunately, statesmen know what to think of the rash utterances of irresponsible journalists. This is surely a time for the severest self-restraint and the kindliest interchange of regard between those who voice the national sentiment in the Press and on the platform. An unparalleled opportunity is to hand, and Christendom will be judged according to the reception given to the effort made to sound the knell of war.

The advantage of understanding the habits of thought and temper of mind of the heathen as a condition of successful preaching is unquestionably great; but when Dr. Fairbairn goes so far as to say it is impossible to communicate the Gospel to India till we are thoroughly conversant with the Hindu mind does he not put a needless difficulty before young missionaries? The main object of evangelisation is to present Christ and Him crucified, as He is, and to urge Him on the acceptance of those who listen. If this is done simply and faithfully, the message has power to penetrate the densest mind in a way that is perfectly marvellous. Preachers and hearers are often utterly ignorant of each other's mental standpoint, and could not understand each other if they tried; yet the spoken word does its work. It is well to get the listeners to trust the speaker; it is better to get them to believe the message.

Some relief ought soon to come to the natives of Africa from the curse of the white man's firearms and fire-water, for next month the Powers will send their representatives to Brussels to consider the question. The Act of 1889-90 has expired. It was far from adequate, and we hope it will not be renewed, but a stronger and more effective one put in its place. When it is possible either to get rid of a tribe altogether or so to weaken it as to reduce it to helplessness by supplying it freely with drink, and when, in some parts, every second negro hut is a liquor shop, it is evident that the time has come for some decisive action to be taken. The vices of the poor coloured man cannot tell ultimately to the advantage of the white man, and prudence and humanity, as well as religion, teach that we should do to him as we would have him do to us.

The Gold Coast used to be the burying place of missionaries, but it is now becoming the most fertile and the most encouraging of all mission fields of the Basle Society. Christianity is so well rooted, and has so many adherents in some districts, that it is a power which has to be reckoned with. Village after village has some Christians. The heathen will sometimes even help the converts in building chapels and houses for the teachers. The great hindrance is drink, every second house in some negro villages being a liquor shop. An increased tax on brandy is said to have reduced the sale a great deal. Some day, we suppose, all our friends at home will see that it is a contradictory, inconsistent thing to aid foreign missions and at the same time to countenance the drink traffic.

The Paris Strike.—I earnestly request the united prayers of Christians for Paris. We live in anxious times. Many thousand workmen have been on strike. Soldiers are everywhere; they have been poured into Paris to overawe the people. Pray that order may be preserved and the storm averted. Pray for all the Christians in Paris, and especially for Miss De Broën and the working people of Belleville, among whom she has lived and worked for twenty-seven years, and to whom she still strives to make known the love of God in Christ Jesus. Her work is in great need of help.

Light in God's Light.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR.

"In thy light shall we see light."—Psalm xxxvi. 9.

Of the many cries continually arising from our nature there is none more intense or more persistent than the cry for light. The life of man is lived largely in the twilight. Of origins he knows but little, and that little either puzzles him or inflates him with vanity. Peering into the mist which envelops the beginnings of things, he discovers phantoms which oppress him, or shapes which his imagination tortures into false substances. Of processes he knows still less. His life goes on, and he hears the sound of the loom at work, but his eyes very often can see no form of a weaver. And over most ends the thick veil hangs with but little light to render it transparent.

The cry, then, for light which men everywhere utter is a just demand of their nature. For men want to know what life is, and how it may be lived, and what is its destiny. Numerous paths are before us; only one of these leads to our goal, and we want direction so that we may not tread the fatal way. But the cry for light is legitimate only in so far as we seek definite direction for our life work. When we turn aside to vain speculations, and seek to penetrate mysteries which are no concerns of ours, the demand for light becomes illegitimate. Vast numbers of men torment themselves with problems of which no solution is possible upon this side the veil, and which also have nothing in the world to do with them.

TWO ERRORS.

In this our state of knowing "in part" there are two errors to which we are all liable.

The first is that of impatience and bad temper. It is the state which Isaiah the prophet denounced with such fine scorn: "Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks, walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled" (Is. l. 11). Some men cannot await the rising of the sun—the source of all light; they would rather kindle a paltry fire of their own, which at the best can only illuminate a limited track, than patiently attend the full light which makes all visible. It is not surprising that Holy Scripture puts a high value upon patience, for it is a virtue the least of all exercised amongst men.

FALSE LIGHTS.

The other error, fatal in its action, is the choice of false lights. It would be difficult to say which is the more common error, the first or the second of these mentioned, but there is no difficulty in deciding which is more to be dreaded. Is there anything more widely spread than the habit of examining men and things under false lights?

If it were possible for us to break up the ray of white sunlight into its separate colours and fling these one by one upon a landscape, and we were to continually do this, we should never know the true beauty of a landscape. To appreciate its charm we must see it in its proper light. And so, of course, with everything else that is material. Yet in the higher sphere of life men continually act in the most foolish manner, and so offer themselves as willing victims of every form of falsehood. They regard their personal lives under the partial rays of conventionalism, prejudice, and pride, thereby flattering themselves that, after all, they are not so very bad, and do not need a salvation after the manner of the common herd. Their destiny is placed under the solitary ray of feeble light which comes from the human schools, with the result that they have no longer any certainty of the life beyond the grave, but only a hopeless negation. Their duty is examined in the light of utility, or of social considerations only, true charity being extinguished in the process.

Look around you—everywhere is confusion of life and derangement of ideas. A babel of voices shouts out contradictory answers to every serious question. Why is this? It is that men do not see light at all, but only exaggerated and perverted shapes which partial colours create. Men pretend, apart from God, to have light, but in place of that they deceive themselves with false beliefs and false judgments.

THE TRUE SOLUTION.

But the same prophet who warns us against these fallacies also gives us the true solution of our difficulties. Let us hear him. "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isaiah l. 10). In other words, let him wait for the shining of the true light, and all will become clear under its rays.

Last summer two of us arrived at Jericho one night after sunset. The sky was without a moon, and a deep darkness reigned over the whole plain. The various objects we passed were scarcely discernible, and the mountains ahead of us, into which we were about to penetrate, were completely obscured. Numerous camp fires were dotted all over the hills and the plain, but they, of course, gave us no light. We rode on and guessed at the shape and quality of the things around us. But the next day, when the sun rose, what a vision greeted us! All doubt vanished, and every shrub and tree and hillock and mountain peak stood out clearly defined. They were all there in the darkness, but in the daytime we saw them in their own light, and they became light to us. Light was needed to make everything manifest.

What is true of material things in this particular is equally true of all moral and spiritual things. We can only clearly understand them as we behold them

IN THEIR OWN PROPER LIGHT.

And yet we are always misunderstanding people because we forget this fundamental truth. We study men in our light, instead of studying them in the light appropriate to them. Many of the discourtesies which mark us proceed from this habit. Englishmen in particular have a very bad habit of judging "foreigners" in the light of the ways and customs of their island—the consequence being that they frequently make themselves very disagreeable towards those whose habits they ought to respect. The Frenchman or the Italian must be regarded in his true light if he is to be understood at all.

This same principle applies also to our common intercourse with those who are continually around us. Not infrequently we either misjudge or entirely fail to comprehend people, simply because we forget the fact we are now considering. We speak of certain people as being dull or uninteresting, and we treat them with scant courtesy, because in our light they appear to be so. But in the true light which alone can reveal them—the light of their circle in life—they are probably all that they ought to be. Let us remember this in our dealings with people.

Let us now turn to the most serious of all things and apply our principle. The appropriate light for a landscape is the sun: the natural light for social life is that of the circle in which we move. Where shall we turn for the sole true light upon our real life and its issues?

WE MUST TURN TO GOD.

"In thy light we shall see light." He is the Father of Lights, the Uncreated Sun from whom all beams proceed. All illuminated men, for whom the great problems have been solved, join in the chorus of assent to the truth that only in the light of God can full light be seen. "The Lord is my light and my salvation." "He hath shined in our hearts to give light." The writer of Psalm xxxvi., who has given to us the phrase, "In Thy light shall we see light," had himself seen life spread out in the clarity of God's light, and the result to his own spirit was perfect rest from all turmoil and foreboding. Hear his testimony: "How excellent is Thy loving-kindness, O God! Therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures."

This is rest as the result of clear vision, for no heart can be still so long as uncertainty haunts it. It is the light of God alone which gives to us definite knowledge.

National Protestant Congress.

The ninth annual congress in connection with the National Protestant League opened on Monday at Folkestone, and continued over Thursday. There was a large assemblage of the members at a reception and conversazione at the Town Hall at half-past six, and an hour later the opening meeting of the Congress commenced.

The chair was taken by Sir C. Robert Lighton, who, in his opening speech, said they were met at a time of the most momentous gravity. The plain statements by the Archbishop of Canterbury had not, he hoped, paralysed, but he thought they had certainly electrified, the Protestant people of England. They had often been grieved in past years that the Bishops had been so cold to their appeals against errors in the Church of England. They had wondered why they had been so callous to what they knew was lawlessness. But now the veil had been torn down, and they no longer wondered why their efforts had been in vain, why their appeals to the Bishops and to the Archbishop had been rudely unanswered or answered so curtly.

The Primate, who voiced almost the entire episcopate of the English Church, had declared that it was not unlawful to hold the Lutheran doctrine of consubstantiation or teach it in the Church of England. In other words, the Archbishop asserted that the doctrine of the Real Presence, as involved in the theory of consubstantiation, was part of the teaching of the Church of England. Nothing could be plainer than that. They had had things disguised before, but they now read the truth, and it was expressed in plain, simple words. They knew now why Dr. Temple had, with the so-called wish of keeping the peace, vetoed them when they had endeavoured to put down unlawful things in the Church of England, and they knew now why he had put off their appeals to him in their difficulties.

He asked them to grasp the momentous fact that the Primate had distinctly committed the Church of England to the Romish doctrine of the Real Presence. The Times, in a powerful leading article that morning, said there was not much difference between the mystified doctrine of consubstantiation and the Romish one of transubstantiation. If that were correct, he asserted that the Church of England ought no longer to be the Church of Protestant people. They should seek and investigate and join together for another Reformation, and purge these errors from the Church, or else she should be disestablished and cease to be their Church. But he claimed that the case was not proven. He maintained, against the high authority of Dr. Temple, that the Church of England was Protestant, and that her articles, homilies, and Prayer Book did not teach or allow to be taught that subtle doctrine, dishonouring Christ, of transubstantiation.

The Study of the Types.*

DOUBLE TYPES.

THE types are but a "shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things"; and therefore, like all shadows, they give but an imperfect representation, so that we often need to look at several together if we are to obtain a complete idea of the substance itself.

Most objects cast differently shaped shadows as the light falls on them in various directions; and by comparing them we may form a correct outline, even if the object itself be out of sight. If the shadows vary in some details, while they correspond in others, we may at once conclude that, though the object is the same, the light is thrown upon it in different directions, and reveals shadows cast from opposite sides: so is it in the types.

Sometimes in the same type we may find different sides of truth represented by two similar things. Thus, in the cleansing of the leper there are two birds: one slain over the running water; the other let fly over the field — evidently typifying the death and resurrection of Christ.

On the Day of Atonement there were two goats: the one God's lot, which was killed, the blood being taken inside the vail; and the other the scapegoat, that bore away the iniquity of Israel to the land not inhabited—the first speaking to us of God's requirements, the second of man's need.

In other cases, in order to complete the picture, we have two types closely connected with one another, similar in many respects, but emphasising different truths. For instance, on the journey from Egypt to Canaan the children of Israel had to pass through the Red Sea and the Jordan, and in both cases a way was made for them to cross on dry land. We are told in Exod. xiii. 17 that they might have gone by the way of the Philistines, when they would not have needed to pass through either; but we are given the reason why God did not lead them by this route: "For God said, Lest peradventure the people repent when they see war, and they return to Egypt." If the Red Sea had not rolled between them and Egypt, they could easily have returned; and this is evidently the key to the truth taught by the crossing of the Red Sea. Both it and the passage of the Jordan speak to us of the death and resurrection of Christ; but the former tells of deliverance from Egypt, the latter of entrance into the land.

Twice over, when they crossed the Jordan, the children of Israel were told to set up twelve stones for a memorial; a stone for a tribe; twelve in the midst of the Jordan, and twelve on the other side. The stones evidently typify the believer's standing in its twofold aspect. Those in the midst of the river of death tell us that we are dead with Christ; and those on the land that we are risen with Him.

In the same way we have the food of Israel, the manna and the old corn. In John vi. the Lord explained that He Himself was the bread sent down from heaven. The manna, therefore, clearly represents Christ in the flesh, in his incarnation, the provision for wilderness need; while the old corn of the land and the harvest which was ripe when they crossed the Jordan, and of which they would eat three or four days later, when they had waved the sheaf of the first-fruits, speak of Christ in resurrection.

In studying these and other double types it is necessary to put the two side by side if we would see the full meaning; for mistakes are often made in interpretation from not following this plan. One type does not supersede the other, for they are often both true at the same time. We may still feed on the manna, though we have the old corn as well.

There are some teachers who only draw lessons from the wilderness experience of Israel, and who do not see that our position is also in the land as victors taking possession, step by step, of what is ours in Christ. Others dwell entirely on the position in the land, and say that we ought not to be in the wilderness at all. Should we not rather take both? As one has said, "We are, as to our bodies, in Egypt; as to our experience, in the wilderness; and by faith, in the land." We are represented by Peter as "strangers and pilgrims," passing through a wilderness; and at the same time we are, according to Ephesians, in the land, in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus. By-and-by, when faith has been changed to sight, we shall be, as to our bodies and as to our experience, in the land.

In the two-fold sign that God gave to Moses to reassure him when about to stand before Pharaoh, there was probably a foreshadowing of God's power over sin and Satan. The rod that was turned into a serpent, and when grasped by Moses once more became a rod, tells of God's power over Satan; but the hand that became leprous and was afterwards healed speaks of power over sin. God's redeemed people were to be delivered from both these enemies.

The Tabernacle and the Temple give us different aspects of God's dwelling-places; and in Gen. xxii. we have a double type of our Lord Jesus—first in Isaac himself, and then in the ram which God provided.

There is a striking typical scene in Deut. xxi. which it has been pointed out is a picture of God's great inquest over his Son. One is found slain in the field, and inquiry has to be made as to who is guilty; when the city nearest to the dead body has been condemned, the heifer is slain to remove their guilt. Here, surely, we have another double type; for the Lord's death is foreshadowed in the one found slain and in the heifer: the first telling of the guilt of his murderers, the other of how the guilt has been met.

Young Men and Women Wanted.

THE greatly increased demand upon us for parochial evangelists, pioneering, tent and van missioners, mission-nurses, rescue and slum workers, and the extraordinary development of our mission and colportage van work throughout the country, keep our committee constantly on the search for likely candidates for the work.

We are very urgently in need of a number of bright, earnest, active young men, from 19 to 25 years of age, filled with the desire to do the Master's work. We must secure at least ninety such men before Christmas. We also require a number of thoroughly earnest, humble women, as mission-nurses, rescue and slum workers. The whole of the training is absolutely free of cost, while board and lodging is provided free during the entire period of training. All the men trained are, on passing the Diocesan Examiner, admitted by the Bishop of London to the position of lay evangelist in the Church. The guaranteed salary of our agents is small, but sufficient.

Our central committee earnestly appeal to all interested in home mission work to recommend to the Candidates' Secretaries — at head-quarters — any young men and women to whom we might write concerning the work—we, of course, taking all responsibility in the matter.

Picture Reading.

IN THE WOODS.

SMALL things may often be suggestive as seed-thoughts, if we are in a mood to let them grow. The observant can find "sermons in stones, and good in everything." A few simple sketches may serve to illustrate this, and to induce the habit of deriving profit and pleasure from the scenes and events of daily life.

Lack of business in the office makes the atmosphere here feel depressing; I will get into the open air. So, starting immediately, I pass the ancient castle of the O'Donnells, grand in its ruins; cross the "Stone Bridge" over the Eske, and turn to the left into a nicely kept path like an avenue. "The Bank," as this walk is called, stretches, half way under an arcade of trees, from Donegal town for about a mile alongside the Bay, and is a delightful promenade, with seats at intervals, for the townsfolk.

It is now covered with a carpet of leaves, in places about half a foot deep. Dead leaves, we reflect, with their glory departed! Changed with the changes of time! "We all do fade as a leaf." Yet when we have fallen shall we have served our purpose as well as these leaves? Shall lives of usefulness and beauty be

OUR MEMORIAL?

Earth seems girdled with an atmosphere of changes and opposing influences. We live among a strange environment of opposing forces, such as summer and winter, joy and sorrow, holiness and sin, no doubt necessary for a sphere of probation.

Temporal prosperity, like the tree leaves, may be too broad a sail or too heavy a cargo for our voyage, and may need to be taken from us, so that we may not be wrecked on the breakers in the storm of temptation, or swamped in the sunshine of pleasure. Our idols must be broken that we may turn to God; the storm must come down on the sea before we hear the voice, "Peace, be still."

Yet those trees with their naked limbs shall have a new robe by-and-by. They will not have to travel for it, but only to stay where they are, and it will be thrown over them; for the sun will come round in spring, and the buds shall swell and break forth into leaf and blossom.

Even thus to souls "dead in sin" "the Sun of Righteousness arises." Their own efforts do not bring Christ down from above; but He comes nigh them, shines upon them, and they live. What we call our efforts in seeking salvation may, if understood aright, be rather our efforts in resisting it. The struggle seems to be, to "stand still and see the salvation of God." The Good Samaritan comes to the place where we lie; but it is hard to get us to know that place and to make us let Him minister to us there. Unknown to ourselves we often lay flattering unction to our souls, and so talk to God, not about ourselves at all, but about somebody we think we are. And this falsehood we call prayer, and wonder it is not answered.

THE SOURCE OF LIFE.

But when we are enlightened to know what we really are—"sinners," "without strength"—we are in our true position, the only position to hear that Christ died for the ungodly, and to believe and have life through his name. Then this life, like the sun on the forest, descending from above without effort on our part more than that of the trees in the glow of April, produces life. God, at first, breathed on man, and he became a living soul. So is it still in the regeneration.

Life comes with the touch of life—only with the touch, as candle lights candle. By Christ's coming in contact with the man "dead in trespasses and sins" the man lives; and yet not he, but Christ liveth in him. "He breathed on them, and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

This is what we understand by "eternal life," as revealed in the Bible—the Spirit of God in communion with the spirit of his creature. It is the life of the angels in heaven as well of believers on earth; and there is none other, its absence is death.

Numerous other suggestive characteristics of the trees, such as their planting, taking root, growth, pruning, fruit-bearing, etc., press for further consideration. But the train of thought is now left as it is with the reader, as he may have a profitable exercise in working out its similitudes. Reference can be made to such Scriptures as Psalm i., John xv., etc.

*Priestism and Priesthood.

By Rev. A. ROWLAND, B.A., LL.B.

I WISH it to be understood that I do not make any attack upon the Established Church, except in so far as she tolerates those who are seeking to reverse the policy of the Reformation. I gladly recognise that many of the clergy and an overwhelming proportion of the laity are at present on the side of Protestantism, and I trust that in the coming struggle they will learn to regard us as their allies rather than as their enemies. The question is not one of more or less ornate ritual. If it were, we would gladly keep silence. Ritualism, however, involves far more than services which gratify æsthetic sensibilities. Its leaders are men in desperate earnest, ready to be martyrs if need be, not because they care for splendid show, but because they claim to be sacrificing priests, and intend to be recognised as such by the people of this country. In short, they have deliberately set before themselves the task of revolutionising the Anglican Church, by bringing it into harmony with Catholic tradition, and restoring it to the condition in which it was before the days of Henry VIII., when, to use Baring Gould's words, "the Church in England was corrupted by Protestantism." Many a parish priest has to-day deliberately adopted the resolution of Dr. Faber, who, while still a clergyman of the Church of England, said, "My whole life, God willing, shall be one crusade against the detestable and diabolical heresy of Protestantism." As those who believe, on the contrary, that but a faith which is essential to the continuance of civil and religious liberty, we are bound to defend it against insidious and unscrupulous attack. We have the more right to interfere because the Romanisers owe their influence largely to the fact that they are officials in a national institution, for the continuance and condition of which we as citizens of this country are largely responsible.

It is no doubt difficult to estimate the progress made in the Romeward direction, but I am convinced that it has been immeasurably greater than is generally believed, and that the Anglican Church is already far removed from the position in which it stood when some honestly believed that it was "the bulwark of Protestantism." It is evidently no longer that; it is the channel of Romanism. Besides this development of Romish ritual, I fear that among the fashionable classes submission to priestly authority is

SAPPING NATIONAL VIRILITY.

Multitudes are being trained in this direction, for these priests who claim to be a law unto themselves have no notion of giving similar liberty to their parishioners. Their demand for absolute submission is constantly iterated. It is our bounden duty, as citizens and as Christians, to rouse our fellow-countrymen to this movement, which threatens our faith and our liberty, that they may resist before it is too late. Rome has not altered since the days when she lighted the fires of Smithfield, and crushed the liberties of the people. The curse she brings is writ large in the pages of history, and appears in the deplorable condition of the nations who have submitted to her sway. The contrast everywhere seen between the freedom and prosperity of Protestant peoples and the poverty and ignorance of the nations she rules is an outward and visible sign of the national decadence she causes. Her insolent domination and her relentless demands are in no degree lessened. Though she claims liberty, she never grants it. With this accursed power of priestism there shall be no truce on our part. We see too clearly that always and everywhere it has blasted liberty, forbidden the Scriptures, crippled research, deadened conscience, interfered between ruler and people, between husband and wife, between God and the sinner; and so long as the Free Churches of this country have voice and power their strength shall be given to warding off this curse from the country we love.

THE REAL PRESENCE.

The "Doctrine of the Real Presence" is fundamental to the Sacramentarian system, and is constantly and explicitly taught in schools and churches. This heresy is the foundation on which almost all the errors of Ritualism rest. If the bread and wine are transformed into the real body and blood of our Lord, what necessarily follows? The table becomes an altar, and the officiating minister a priest. Communion depends not on the receptivity of the communicant, but on the mechanical action of the celebrant, and this cuts the root of spiritual religion. Such a Eucharistic sacrifice can be celebrated when there are no communicants at all. The consecrated bread and wine may be fitly worshipped, lifted up, and reserved in spite of Article 28, which says: "The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped," an article to which the men who upheld this heresy have solemnly given their unfeigned assent and consent! This doctrine of transubstantiation would, if it were true, justify the Eucharistic vestments, the lights and the incense, which only in it can find any significance and value. But is there not

TRUTH UNDERLYING THIS ERROR?

It seems to me to travesty two truths which have sometimes been obscurely taught in Free Church pulpits, namely, first, the atonement for sin inherent in the sacrifice of Christ, when He was once offered for the sins of the world; and secondly, the reality of Christ's living presence wherever two or three meet together in his name. When these truths become vivid there will be no more longing for a repeated sacrifice, nor even any toleration for it. The Atonement of Christ in our pulpits must displace the offering of the Host on the altar. Nor must we forget that there is a real presence which transubstantiation parodies. Instead of a dead Christ, re-incarnated in consecrated bread, we are to exhibit a living Christ, re-incarnated in consecrated people, as the sign on earth of his glory in heaven.

MASSES FOR THE DEAD.

Closely associated with the transformation of the Lord's Supper into a sacrifice are the masses for the dead now offered in many churches. The doctrine of purgatory as a place for purification, wherein the souls of the departed may be benefited by prayers on earth, is being revived by the Ritualists. It is true that for the most part masses are voluntarily said at present, but the restoration of traffic in them is not far off. I am free to confess that in our rebound from that error we Protestants have lost sight of Scriptural teaching on the intermediate state, which distinguishes between Hades and Hell, Paradise and Heaven. Indeed, it seems to me that our revolt against mediæval conceptions of purgatory and hell, abundantly justified though it is, has led some to ignore altogether the great doctrine of future retribution. Perhaps some of us have failed to proclaim the mind of the Master upon this stupendous theme. Men instinctively feel that there must be the supernatural in religion, that the unseen will play its part in their destiny. Depend upon it, ethical essays and social disquisitions are altogether inadequate as declarations of the whole counsel of God, and we shall find that counsels and warnings which appeal only to the interests of this life will utterly fail to stem the tremendous stream of worldliness which threatens to overwhelm modern spiritual life.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

I wish to refer next to the Confessional, which is now to be found in most Ritualistic churches. "The Priest in Absolution, privately printed for the use of the Clergy," inculcated the putting of questions to women and girls by priests, often young and unmarried, such as a good mother would shrink from asking her own daughter, in the sanctity of the home. No one can read such a book without sullying his own soul, and no man can ask the questions suggested in it without smirching the innocence of others. Unfortunately, the root of the confessional lies in the Prayer Book; indeed, this is implied in the fact that the absolution may only be read by one who is in priest's orders. Therefore I doubt if the Bishops could put down confession, even if they desired to do so.

I know it is said that no one need confess unless of his own free will; but already, in spite of the caution of these conspirators, compulsion is sometimes used. Yet even in auricular confession is a suggestion of something we lack. Too often we have failed in carrying out the precept, which has in it, however, mutual obligation, "Confess your faults one to another, and pray for one another." Obedience to that demands mutual love and confidence, of which most of our church members have very little experience. Humility and frankness in acknowledging a wrong, and eagerness to repair it, are too rare among us; and the wise counsels of experienced Christian men and women ought to be more sought after and more freely proffered. Instead of a confessional, I should like to see such close friendship between teachers and Sunday scholars, such intimate brotherly association between pastor and people, as would encourage prodigals to return, and conscience-stricken penitents to rejoice in the assured mercy of our God.

THE TRUE DOCTRINE OF THE PRIESTHOOD.

Finally, have we not too much ignored the true doctrine of the priesthood? It seems to me that the instincts of the human soul reach out after something which this recrudescent priestism simulates. We must substitute priesthood for priestism Of course, I am not referring to ministers only All Christians are made kings and priests unto God. Therefore let us ever be mindful of the fact, in visiting and in preaching, that we appear before men as the messengers of the Most High. What some of us want is an intense consciousness that we are thus sent from God, and that we cannot but speak what we have seen and heard.

But priesthood has two sides. A true priest is not only God's representative to man, but he is man's representative before God. And here, again, let me guard myself against the idea that this is true of ministers only. It is true of all Christians. Whether we lead the devotions of a congregation, or plead for this one or that with the Father who seeth in secret, we are anointed priests; and the glory of this universal priesthood must be set over against the pretentious claims of an arrogant and exclusive priestism. More than ever, therefore, we must strive after close and constant communion with God. Holiness of life, without which all spiritual effort is ineffective, will be the necessary accompaniment of prayer; and without holiness no man shall see God, no man can serve God. The true Apostolic succession finds its essence in consecration, and the world will be won by those who are holiest. Yet, after all, we are only of value as representatives. There is but one true Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus. He looks down on us, his redeemed servants, and says, "Ye are My witnesses"; and as such our success will consist in leading men to look above us and beyond us, to Him who said, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." And He is to be presented to the gaze of men not by images, not by pictures, not by consecrated elements, but by the spiritual lives of his people.

Day by Day.

"In all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself."

MONDAY, October 24.

Genesis i.

THE presence of Jesus Christ is diffused throughout the texture of this book as salt in ocean water, and as ether throughout space. His voice speaks in every utterance of Deity; his footfall is heard in the goings of the Almighty; his power in creation, his wisdom in providence, his love in redemption are all-pervasive. Give us eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to understand this great mystery, O Spirit of God. The Word under the words, the Babe beneath the swaddling clothes, the Divine Spirit in the forms and manifestations of his presence.

Our Lord Jesus is here. By Him all things were made. (John i. 1-3; Eph. i. 9; Col. i. 16; Heb. i. 2; Rev. iv. 11.) Everything that is has passed through his thought, and bears traces of his hand. Here, in the light, the emblem of his purity and gentleness, and antagonism to the chaos and darkness of evil. Here, in the water, the emblem of his fertilising and purifying grace. Here, in the growth of the vegetable world, in which the vine, the corn of wheat, the rose, the lily, the fragrance of the flowers for ever reflect Him. Here, in the sun rejoicing in his strength. Here, as the bright and morning star that glimmers on the brow of the dawn. Here, as king in the realm of living things which includes alike the finned fish, the winged bird, and every variety of animal. Here, above all, as the archetype and image in which man was made. It would seem as though it were He, the last Adam, to whom the Father addressed the majestic words, "Have dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, the cattle, and over all the earth."

TUESDAY, October 25.

Genesis ii.

Our Lord pervades all Scripture, it has been truly said, as light the brightest day, and as fragrance the garden of choice flowers. Be it ours, then, to find Him in this chapter, and in all the following chapters of this Book, for the happiest man on earth is he who is most enriched with enlightened views of Christ. He lives at heaven's high gate. To him the morning sweetly dawns, because it awakens him to the renewed light of Jesus' grace. To him the day gladly speeds on, because its advance yields time for progress in Divine instruction. To him the night is full of calm repose, because he rests on the pillow of atoning love. And all life becomes irradiate.

And He is here. These verses, like his robes, smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia. The rest of God on the seventh day was that into which He entered when He had finished the work of redemption, and ceased from it. He is the Tree of Life, beneath whose shadow we may sit with delight, and of whose fruit we may eat; and He is the River of Life, whose waters part to fertilise the four quarters of the earth. But, more than all, a greater than Adam and his bride are in the story of that first marriage.

The last Adam slept the sleep of death, and from his side, pierced by the soldier's spear, came the very elements through which the existence of the Church, his Bride, was rendered possible. Blood to expiate her sins; water to cleanse her that she might be without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. As God presented Eve to Adam, so He gave his chosen to his Son; and they have become members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones. We answer to him, as He to us. We are for Him, and He for us. All that He has is ours, though we have nothing to bring but an illimitable need.

WEDNESDAY, October 26.

Genesis iii.

The last Adam, our Lord Jesus, is here first by contrast. Like the first, He was tempted of the devil; but, unlike the first, the assault reached Him amid the wilderness which the primal sin had sown with thorns and lined with jagged flints. Like the first, He was assailed with an appeal to appetite and hunger; but, unlike him, He conquered, living wholly in the will and word of God.

But He is here also by prediction. Who is the woman's seed but He who was born of the pure Virgin? What is this bruising of the heel but the anguish and forsakenness of the Cross? And what this bruising of the head except it be that triumphant ascension in which the Son of Man was raised far above all principality and power, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but the next?

He is here also in type. The garden of Eden witnessed the destruction of human innocence, and also the remedy and palliative. The parents of our race were conscious of sin, and were ashamed. They made girdles of fig leaves, and hid themselves amid the trees. But all failed until the Lord God gave them the skins of lifeless animals as a type of that robe of righteousness with which He clothes us still, and in which we may stand unabashed before his holy presence. "The righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe" (Rom. iii. 22). "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21).

Gen. iv.

There is one God, says a holy man, and one access to his smile. There is one heaven and one door to it. The Saviour who was to come, and the Saviour who has come, and the Saviour who is to come is one Christ. The faith of Abel and of the Baptist looked at the same object. The Patriarchs did not rejoice in one hope, the Apostles in another. From first to last, all the pilgrims to the hill of Zion lean on one arm—all the voyagers, who cross the sea of life to the haven of eternal rest, are guided by one compass.

Abel knew that he was a sinner, and that his own life was forfeited, but his spirit rejoiced in God his Saviour. He beheld the day of Calvary, and was glad. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain" (Heb. xi. 4). He had, doubtless, pondered the primæval promise till, by the teaching of the Divine Spirit, he had found his way to the mystery of that Divine way of life which was fully revealed in the cross.

But the lamb, of the firstlings of his flock, in its young life, its fleecy purity and innocence, its beauty, anticipated the Lamb of God, who bore away our sin in his own body on the tree; and its blood, pouring forth in a crimson stream, foreshadowed that stream which issued from the broken heart of Calvary. That was the more excellent sacrifice.

Nor is this all. When Cain lifted up his hand against his brother, and the earth opened to receive his blood, is there not a prefiguration of that more awful tragedy, when the gentle, holy, lovely Shepherd fell beneath the mortal wound of Calvary? Our Saviour, we see thy murder in Abel's. But thy blood, unlike his, cries for pardon and mercy.

FRIDAY, October 28.

Gen. v.

It might be supposed that there is no trace of the presence of Jesus in this chapter, which reminds us of an ancient cemetery, on whose moss-grown stones we can decipher but a few almost illegible names. Yet surely here it would be of all places most desirable to discover Him. Where there is death there must be sin, and there will be sorrow. Where is it more necessary to find the presence of Jesus than in the dark days when the oldest, who had seemed the pillars of the race, and the holiest, who have walked with God, are taken away? If Adam, and Enosh, and Kenan, and Enoch, and Methuselah die, it is the more necessary to discover one, of whom it is witnessed, that He liveth.

Our expectations are not destined to disappointment. "This same shall comfort us," says the patriarch Lamech, as he receives his first-born, Noah. He was tilling a soil which bore the traces of the curse. But a son would now share, and alleviate, the pain of daily toil. Cheered by this hope, he called his name Noah, meaning rest or comfort.

What Noah was to Lamech, Jesus is to this woe-worn world. He is Christus Consolator. We have strong consolation who have fled to Him for refuge. In the world we may have tribulation, but in Him we have peace. Come unto Me, He cries, and ye shall find rest for your souls.

SATURDAY, October 29.

Gen. vi.

The story of the Ark is one of our earliest memories. How interested we were in it! But we may never have gone further than the merest circumference of the story. Yet of what use is it to possess the field unless we find the precious treasure hidden there? These stories are comparatively valueless unless we are able to discern the presence of Jesus. Always act on this principle, and never close the sacred page until you have seen his image reflected as in a mirror, and have been changed into it.

Where there is such sin as this—when the wickedness of man is great, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart only evil continually—there must be holy anger and deserved punishment. We are not surprised to hear the words, "Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth." But we should be surprised indeed if the Divine voice did not add, "Make thee an ark of gopher-wood."

What that ark was to Noah and his family the Lord Jesus is for us all. He is the only deliverance from the justly deserved consequences of sin. He is the all-protecting shelter. The weakest, most sinful, most fearful believer may say of Him, as David, when the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul, "I love Thee, O Lord, my strength. The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strong rock, in Him will I trust; my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower. The cords of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodliness made me afraid. Thou hast given me the shield of thy salvation."

The Nazarene.

By Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON, Leicester.*

And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled, which was spoken by the prophets, "He shall be called a Nazarene."—Matt. ii. 23.

WE are all familiar with the vow of the Nazarite, that we read about in Numbers vi. It was a threefold vow:—First, that the Nazarite shall refrain from wine of grapes; secondly, that his hair shall not be cut; and thirdly, he was never to touch a dead body. The Lord Jesus Christ never had the vow of the Nazarite upon Him at all. We read He was called a Nazarene. It is something altogether different from a Nazarite. To be called a Nazarite was to be given a name, but to be called a Nazarene was to be held in contempt. It was like as though you were to call a man to-day a clodhopper or a country bumpkin.

The name emanated from the thought which suggested the question, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" It is but a name of derision. It is so in many countries to-day. In more than one place I have had the name Nazarene hurled after me as I have walked through an Oriental street.

We can clearly see some reason why, in the providence of God, Jesus was associated with that name. It was to add everything to his mission and nothing to his name. He was not to come with great pageantry, or as a political deliverer, which the Jews expected. The risk of misleading the Je. was reduced to a minimum. We can see that He was associated with that name for the sake of his followers. If his followers are to be despised we know that this despised Nazarene can sympathise with them. We know he came to Nazareth.

We saw Thee not when Thou didst come
To this poor world of sin and death,
Nor e'er beheld thy cottage home
In that despised Nazareth.
But we believe thy feet have trod,
Its streets and plains, thou Son of God.

There are four things said about Jesus as to the fulfilment of prophecies. You remember it was written in Micah that He was to come from Bethlehem. That prophecy was fulfilled in the letter and spirit. You have the prophecy, in the second place, that his name was to be called Emmanuel. That was fulfilled in the spirit, but not in the letter. The third prophecy says that the Son shall be called out of Egypt. The fulfilment of that prophecy gave spirit to the letter. In the last prophecy there is the letter given to the spirit, "That it shall be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene."

Of all these prophecies, I prefer the prophecy of Matthew. Of all the prophecies it is the nearer. The fulfilment gives the letter to the spirit. All through the prophecies it is written that Jesus shall be the despised and rejected of men: when He came to the Jews they rejected Him, principally from the fact that He had a bad name, that He was born in Galilee and not in Judea, and being in Galilee He went to that little village, and they said, "He is a Nazarene." They despised and rejected Him. People do that still, and they reject Christ because of the people with whom He is associated, the learned men reject Christ because He stoops to the ignorant and unlearned, the rich men because He is the Saviour of the poor. It is still true that our Lord is a Nazarene, and He deliberately chooses to be called a Nazarene. He might have come in royal purple, but then it would have been the purple that made the appeal to the people, and not his mission. He deliberately chooses to be called a Nazarene.

It is a bad day for the Church when the world begins to patronise it. We have heard that the touch of the emperor cured what is known as the "king's evil," but the touch of the king gave the Church the "king's evil." When we seek for worldly position, when we like to be friends of the world, we become enemies of God. Christ deliberately chose to be called the Nazarene, the despised, and if we have the spirit of Christ we will deliberately choose to be like Him. It is not only in going out from society, but if you are sensitive you will have to take up a very heavy cross for Christ. You will have to be prepared to be called a Nazarene, to be called by a name of derision, simple-minded, fanatical, bigoted, ignorant, uncultured. That is the word that goes deepest, when they tell you that you are uncultured.

You know the name of Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh. He was a man of great intellect and superb spiritual attainments, but deeply modest. He had the respect of the whole community, but in his modesty he used to stand back and say, "You first, I follow." He let them all go on, and took some back place himself. When the old man came to die, and had bidden all his loved ones "Good-bye," he turned to his Master, and the last words he said were, "You first, I follow." Let us be able to say, however sharp the flints, however much they cut our bleeding feet, however great the pain, however great the contempt of the world, "Lord, you first, I follow."

There is a sect of Christians in which I believe—the only sect in which I believe with all my heart—the sect of the Nazarene. The people who are despised and rejected, and are willing to be despised and rejected, because of their loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ is an enigma to men. Even those who despised Him owned his power. While He was on earth it was true. It has been true ever since. The very enemies of Christ proclaim his power. He is the Saviour and protector. He not only saves, but He rescues and protects us from our adversaries. He can do that because He has come down into deep sympathy with us. He was a sharer in our sorrow. "Hail thou, once despised Jesus." Wesley says:

All are not lost or gone astray;
All have not left the Church and Thee.
There are who suffer for thy sake,
Enjoy thy glorious infamy.

I remember a Sunday that I spent at Nazareth. It is a good many years ago now, but I remember passing by a school, and the tears came to my eyes as I heard them sing the hymn: "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by." He passes by this morning again. He goes from place to place, and shall we not gladly raise the cry: "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by"—the despised and rejected, but the Saviour and Protector.

Let one in his innocent glory,
And one in the works He has done.
Thy blood is my claim, and my title
Beside it, O Lord, I have none.
The scorned, the despised, the rejected,
Thou hast come to this heart of mine;
In thy robes of eternal glory
Thou welcomest me to thine.

* Address at Christian Convention, Dublin.

Kilburn Hall Conference.—A meeting of Christian workers connected with various branches of the Evangelistic Mission in the North-west of London was held at Kilburn Hall on Monday, October 10, for thanksgiving for gracious results of summer work. Cheering cases were mentioned by some of the evangelists and workers.

A Protestant Demonstration.—The Council of the Church Association propose that a great Protestant demonstration should be held in the Albert Hall or elsewhere immediately before the opening of Parliament in February next. They suggest that all the Protestant societies be asked to form a united committee, and thus co-operate in making the demonstration a success.

Hackney-road Mission.—Through physical infirmity and lack of support, Mr. John Girling has had to discontinue the work which he began thirty years ago. He writes to us:—"While thanking our Heavenly Father for all his merciful dealings with me, and acknowledging the kindness of the Christian friends who have rendered practical aid, I think it is for me now, in Divine providence, to 'rest awhile.'" Mr. Girling's present address is 47, Pendlestone-road, Walthamstow.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

October 30.

Messiah's Kingdom Foretold.—Isaiah xi. 1-10.

Golden Text.—"The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Is. xi. 9.

The True Seer.

GOD has always sent, in the darkest day, some one who is able to pierce the darkness and proclaim the coming dawn.

This one has a firm faith in God, and a belief that God is the ruler of the universe, and will, in his own time, bring out righteousness triumphantly.

The man who tries to do God's work in society, in the Church, without this faith will fail. The work is so discouraging, and sometimes

He hides Himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God.
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Illustration.—Great reformers like the prophets, Martin Luther, Savonarola, etc., have been sustained only by this vision of God's ultimate reign.

The Case of Judah.

The Assyrians have destroyed Israel, and in the previous chapter Isaiah tells the reason. They are God's rod to chastise his children for their sins. "Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so," i.e., the Assyrian does not so understand his work of destruction.

Lesson.—God's temporal punishments are educative, not retributive. He wounds that he may heal, He chastises to save, not to destroy.

The prophet sees the Assyrians coming against Judah. They are almost at the gates of Jerusalem, and the command of God bids them stay their conquest at the gates of the Holy City.

The Messiah (1).

The Hebrew nation, from the time of God's promise to Abraham, had cherished the idea of a leader born to conquer and to save.

The illustration here is that, although the tree be cut down to the very ground, yet the old roots shall send forth a shoot and a new tree shall develop.

This is precisely what happened to the Jewish people, and the new shoot has grown into a tree and spread itself over the whole world so that all men can find shelter under it.

The King's Character (2).

He will be no mere earthly ruler. He shall be a King in spirit, wisdom, might, and knowledge. The powers of God shall be his powers, and He will rule in the hearts and lives of men. In respect of goodness the King is to be a manifestation of God.

His rulership in us governs our thoughts and feelings; and his commands govern our conduct. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' This is the condition of membership of the kingdom, and the mark of those who are its subjects.

Effect of the Spirit (3).

The effect of the Spirit of the Lord resting on the Messiah will make him "quick of understanding in the fear of the Lord," or "He will draw his breath in the fear of the Lord."

Lesson.—We, too, must breathe God's Spirit as the sustainer of our spiritual life. He is the strong man who is "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might."

He who dwells in this atmosphere will be pure, even as Christ was pure.

Government of the King (3-5).

"He shall not judge by the sight of his eyes," i.e., He will not be misled by outward appearance. He is no respecter of persons. Poor and rich are in his kingdom. "With righteousness...the poor." He will do justice to the poor who cannot afford to pay for it, and will rebuke the wicked who oppose the meek. The beauty of his character should be his strength—not relying upon mere externalities of authority. The teacher should give illustrations of these qualities in the life of Jesus Christ.

The Golden Age (6-9).

Under his rule the golden age shall develop. Asp, a small poisonous serpent. Cockatrice, one of the most beautiful and venomous vipers. When Christ takes unto Himself his great power and reigns there will be universal peace.

Suggestive Readings.

FIRE OR DEATH—WHICH?

A DEVOTED Christian worker has been passing through some "terrible" revelations of inward sinfulness, which appear to her like a fulfilment of Matt. iii. 12: "He will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

"Is this," she asks, "the fire of the Holy Ghost burning up sin?"

No; there is no fire under the earth or above the earth that can burn up sin. If the fire even of the Holy Ghost could burn sin out of the fallen creature, Jesus need not have died to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself.

God need not have been manifested in flesh. The great mystery of Godliness need not have taken place. The experiences which made Him the Man of Sorrows need not have been passed through. He could not have wailed forth the challenge to the universe: "Is any sorrow like unto My sorrow?" The agony of Gethsemane need not have been borne, nor the suffering of Calvary endured. The appeal for deliverance from the bitter cup of becoming upon the cross the curse of God, of being made sin for us though He knew no sin, would not have been made; nor the obedient acceptance of it even to the dregs have been written with an iron pen upon the rocks of eternity. The cry of his breaking heart, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" and the restful whisper, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit," would not have been remembered, for they would not have been heard.

There would have been no triumph over the grave. The twenty-fourth Psalm would have had no meaning: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this King of Glory? The Lord of hosts, mighty in battle, He is the King of Glory." Nor the second nor the seventy-second Psalm: "I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." "Give the King thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the King's Son."

There would have been no hope of the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. No destroying through death of him that had the power of death; no Church which is the Lord's body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all; no reign of Christ until He shall have subdued all enemies under his feet; no delivering up of the kingdom to the Father that God may be all in all.

There would have been for us no entering into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; no new and living way which He hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say his flesh. No Bible as we have it, with its deep and widespread roots in Genesis, and its beautiful and fragrant flower in Revelation. No Christ once offered to bear the sins of many; no looking for his appearing the second time without sin unto salvation.

No redemption and no Redeemer.

No second birth into the kingdom of God. No Gospel of the glory of the blessed God: but another gospel which is not another; that of the purification of Adam, an experiment made during 1500 years, under the highest cultivation the wisdom of the only wise God could devise: "And He looked for judgment, but, behold, oppression," ["He was oppressed and He was afflicted, yet He opened not his mouth"] "for judgment, but, behold, a cry"—["Crucify Him!"]

We cannot tamper with the method of God's salvation in one particular without entangling and distorting the whole.

The core and essence of every false system of religion is to patch the old Adamic garment; to put the new wine of the kingdom into the old legal wineskins; to repair the leprous house; to purify the diseased and poisoned creature; in some way to restore the first Adam who was made a living soul, and to ignore the last Adam who is a life-giving Spirit; to reinstate the first man who is of the earth earthy, and in so far to neglect and reject the Second Man, who is the Lord from heaven.

We are not a people purged or healed in a renovated Adam, but a people who have died and risen in the crucified and risen Christ.

Mysteries of Mind.

MAN is a being of mystery, and his mind is, perhaps, the most wonderful part of his complex nature. If the phenomena of physical life engage close and unremitting study and attention, it is in the interest of humanity, and in order that, in some measure, man may attain unto a useful knowledge of himself. It is no less reasonable, while it is certainly of equal importance, that the phenomena of mind should be carefully investigated; and this must be admitted so long as we assent to the substantial truth of Isaac Watts's well-known line, "The mind's the standard of the man." We hasten to explain that this quotation is not advanced as a definition of mind; the subject is too much in solution to admit of such a dogmatic and exclusive statement.

The subject is specially interesting to the philosopher, the metaphysician, and the psychologist; and though not enjoying a place in any of these classes, we have been greatly impressed as to the largeness and practical value of the subject through the perusal of a book just issued by Dr. A. T. Schofield, The Unconscious Mind. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Though dealing with a theme which might very properly be classed as out of the common, this book is written in a popular style, and will amply repay careful study by the so-called "ordinary reader." But

WHAT IS THE UNCONSCIOUS MIND?

What is Mind? What is Consciousness? The terms are variously used, and often abused. Dr. Schofield affords us definitions and explanations, and he elaborates theories which students will examine with pleasure, and should be well considered by parents and guardians, by physicians as well as by some of their patients.

For the most part mind has been so associated with consciousness as to be commonly identified with it; in a word, mind has been all but limited to consciousness. Dr. Schofield shows that this generalisation leaves out of account many facts and phenomena of essential importance. Mind is greater than consciousness; consciousness is a quality or state of mind, and not mind itself. Authorities are quoted for varying views, and in some chapters Dr. Schofield is largely content with letting others speak. The admissions of those whose position he challenges go far to establish his own view that mind is greater than consciousness. He writes as a Christian as well as a man of science; and in the rarer and remoter sphere of the unconscious mind he finds that region in which man's spirit resides, the home of conscience, and the seat of the Spirit's action.

The conscious depends on the unconscious, whence spring our standard of ethics, our character, and our varying moods. In terms of definition Dr. Schofield speaks of mind as "the sum of psychic action in man, whether conscious or unconscious."

Having shown the relation of unconscious mind to habit and actions of an apparently automatic nature, Dr. Schofield deals with memory and sleep, mind in the child, and unconscious education, bringing together a marvellous amount of illustrative incident and matter in proof of his contentions. In the "education of the unconscious" he not only constructs a phrase wholly new to us, but opens up a subject of such that we should like to see the three chapters that treat of it published as a separate manual. In summing up, he says: "It (this education) is nature's education, natural and Divine, instead of artificial and human. We merely point out the methods by which the education may be guided into good channels instead of bad; always remembering that, for good or ill, this unconscious education steadily proceeds all our lives."

After showing that the unconscious mind shares with the conscious the qualities of will, intellect, and emotion, he instances a fourth, which will come as a surprise to many—nutrition, or the general maintenance of the body. This fact is being slowly recognised; and the view that the body affects the mind is being modified by a growing sense of the greater responsibility of the mind for the condition of the physical man.

In a chapter on the unconscious mind and diseases our author adduces many striking testimonies, and the same may be said of two chapters on therapeutics. We have all heard of hope as a remedy in disease; now we learn on undubitable proof that, to a large extent, faith also enters into the cure. "What is the effectual agency in quack cures, in semi-scientific cures of all sorts, in faith cures, in relic, charm, and idol cures, in many spa and water cures, in some doctors' cures, perhaps in more than he suspects? After allowing fully for the intrinsic value of the quack remedy, of the mystic formulæ, of the millionth dilution, or of the prismatic electricity; for the sulphate of soda or magnesium, and even for the value of real B.P. drugs we must answer—it is mainly and primarily the power of the unconscious mind over the body. It is this, and this pre-eminently; and it is this, and this pre-eminently, that is everywhere ignored, however much other minor factors may be extolled."

In this candid statement Dr. Schofield tells the world what men of renown have been writing for professional readers only. He does more; he shows that such diseases as have a mental origin should be treated accordingly, and he gives instances of marvellous success attending efforts properly directed. Diseases due to the imagination may produce not merely functional, but even organic disturbances; and to ignore the primary cause of such maladies is at once to wrong the sufferer and to court defeat in treatment. Diseases may be both caused and cured by conditions of mind. Sufferers will be satisfied on this point if they read Dr. Schofield's book; and if parents and those who endeavour to influence the young will study its pages they will realise a new conviction of the greatness of their task and opportunity. At the same time, the book is a contribution to psychology, which touches at many points the teaching of Holy Scripture regarding man's nature and constitution.

The Leper.

That pitiful cry,
That heartrending sigh,
Oh, list to its echo, and pass it not by.
A terrible doom,
No escape but the tomb.
Stand aside for the leper. Make room! Oh, make room!
See him hurrying past,
With fleet foot and fast,
Not daring a look on his brethren to cast.
And none dare draw nigh
When, with lips parched and dry,
He casts himself down on the highway to die.
No sorrowing friend
To nurse and attend,
Forsaken through life and shunned to the end.
Oh, ye who have health,
Don't pity by stealth,
But give to the needy from out of your health.
If only "a mite,"
Help send out the light,
To cheer them and comfort through sorrow's dark night.
And earnestly pray,
That the Gospel's bright ray,
May enter their hearts and illumine their way.

London Flower Girls.

WHO does not love flowers—those beautiful products of Mother Earth that a kind and bountiful Creator has provided to gratify our senses of sight and smell? The ordinary dweller in London is able to procure these floral treasures at a wonderfully trifling cost all the year round, through the medium of the girl flower-sellers stationed at 'vantage points of our thoroughfares all over the metropolis. We wonder how many such purchasers know of the good work that has been going on for thirty years and more, among this class of our kaleidoscopic community, in connection with the Flower Girls' Christian Mission in Clerkenwell, of which Mr. John Groom is the experienced and devoted superintendent. Doubtless most of those who do know something of its operations have never personally examined them; in order to gauge the worth of any work one must have a closer contact with it than the mere reading of an annual report. I had often heard and read (writes a member of our staff) of the excellent work of the Flower Girls' Mission, but recent visits to its London headquarters and its Seaside Homes have strongly intensified my admiration of it, and I wish in this short article to pass on to the reader some of the impressions gained by personal inspection. A sketch (with portrait, which is reproduced on the front page) of Mr. Groom and his work for the flower girls appeared in The Christian some seven years ago, but the memory of the public is short, especially in these days when so many Christian and philanthropic agencies clamour for recognition and help.

I will speak first of the Seaside Homes at Clacton. It was on a lovely day in the late part of the summer that I went with Mr. Groom to the thriving marine resort of Clacton-on-Sea, by one of the fine steamers of the "Belle" flotilla. Clacton was en fête when we arrived, for it was regatta day; but our point of attraction was the group of charming cottages on the outskirts of the town that constitute a very important branch of the Flower Girls' Mission. Mr. Groom lays it down as an axiom that in order to share in the benefits of the institution those destitute girls in London who in their extremity have taken to street flower selling should relinquish that precarious and perilous method of living, and place themselves on his hands for training, as domestic servants.

MOST TO BE PITIED

are the girls who are either crippled or otherwise marked by physical defect. They are not suited for servants, and, as will be seen later, Mr. Groom makes a special provision for them as makers of artificial flowers, for which there is a steady and remunerative demand. The ranks of the girls drafted to Clacton for a period of household training are recruited also from those of tenderer years, rescued by Mr. Groom and his missionaries or deaconesses from actual or impending destitution, caused by the death or misconduct of parents. At the Clacton Homes I found not a few of these young folk; indeed there were some of very tender years who were still in the perambulator stage. As I noted the ruddy faces and general healthy appearance of the girls (who were mostly busy at their play in the field which forms part of the Mission property), I could not but feel thankful that they had been transferred from the noisome atmosphere of London courts and alleys, and the baleful influences of the gin palace and the streets, to the pure air and restful surroundings of the seaside. They are trained here in all the elements of general housework, and as residence out of town inclines them to quiet situations in the country their services are readily called for as soon as the training is complete. It is enough on this point to say that some 2000 girls have been placed in such situations, and the available supply is far short of the demand.

One of the pretty Clacton cottages is specially set apart as a place where the more ailing and weakly of the crippled children cared for in London may be sent for a few weeks in the summer time to recruit health and strength by daily baths of sea air and rambles in the country or on the sands. It is an invaluable boon to these little folk, physically handicapped as they are in life's race. The Mission is fortunate in the possession of this place at Clacton; they have space left for the erection of several more cottages, as the growing needs of the work may require.

Coming back to the London part of the work, I may say that I have very pleasing recollections of some hours spent in an inspection of the Mission headquarters in Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, and in seeing the crippled flower-makers at work. Of course, we are all made familiar with the skill of these artificers by seeing the finished products adorning the head-gear of our lady friends. As we see these imitation flowers in beauty of form and brilliance of colour, we wonder how it is done. A visit to Sekforde-street solves the mystery. Deeply interesting it is to watch the deft and skilful fingers of the girls piecing together the petals of a rose or the parts of some other flower, previously shaped and tinted by other hands. On the occasion of my visit most of the girls were busy manufacturing spring flowers, as the market must be stocked months ahead. Mr. Groom seems quite up to date in all his arrangements, and the flowers he produces compete well with those of the best makers. It is dainty and interesting work, and its variety at once serves to develop the intelligence of the girls, and to give scope for any special talent for tasteful construction they may possess. It requires no great physical strength, and is therefore capitally suited for girls of weak or defective physique. Much of the flower-making is done in the homes of the girls themselves; those who work at Sekforde-street are such as may specially need guidance and care out of working hours.

If space allowed I could say much that would prove of interest about the perilous conditions from which many of these girls are rescued, and the sorrows they experience before they come under the friendly ægis of Mr. Groom and his helpers. I want, however, to emphasise a special need of the Mission at the present time. The premises at Sekforde-street have recently been enlarged and improved, so that a larger number of crippled girls can be received for the necessary period for training in flower-making. But a great want is felt in the limited accommodation for housing the girls who are thus under tuition, and who require the influences of a Christian home. Admirable premises adjoining the present building are in the market, and Mr. Groom is earnestly hoping by the help of sympathetic friends to secure them. The lease of these additional houses can be bought, and the necessary alterations made, for £1000, and this is considered to be a very low price for the great advantage gained to the work. After this initial cost is met, the houses will prove self-supporting through the skilled labours of the flower-workers. I trust Mr. Groom will soon see the desire of his heart accomplished. His unceasing devotion to the best interest of these girls is worthy of all praise, and he richly deserves to be aided in his good work. His address is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Besides all the operations I have mentioned there are special provisions made for helping the girls who attend Covent-garden Market in early morning to purchase their daily stock-in-trade; there is also regular visitation of the sick and distressed, and an eye ever kept open for cases that need prompt help. Gospel preaching work, and subsidiary efforts of all sorts in the shape of week-evening meetings and classes, are sustained in connection with the chapel in Clerkenwell adjoining the Mission premises. Altogether a network of agencies for the help, the salvation, and the guidance of this class of our community is in constant operation, and, though it is a quiet and unassuming work, it is doing a noble service, the full results of which will only appear "when the roll is called up yonder," and God's faithful servants shall see his face.

The engraving of Mr. J. A. Groom, which appears this week on our front page, is from a photo by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, 53, Baker-street, W.

Hop-pickers in Mid-Kent.—A very encouraging account of the recent season's Gospel work in this district comes from Mr. G. Gillingham. Some twenty widely scattered hop-gardens were visited.

Homes of Rest.—It may not be known to many that there has been for the last two or three years a home of rest for missionaries at Darjeeling. This home has proved to be such a boon that the lady who was the means of establishing it has been urged to open others of the same sort. Miss Orlebar has therefore opened homes at Furze Bank, Kodai, Karnal; Stillbrook, Coonoor; Longleat, Coonoor; Blair Athol, Coonoor; and Queen's Hill, Darjeeling. These homes are open to all missionaries. Miss Orlebar's permanent address is, Post-office Bombay.

Congregationalists at Halifax.

BY A MINISTER.

ABOUT 1100 ministers and delegates were present at the "Autumnals" this year. They came from all points of the compass, a large contingent arriving from London and the Southern counties. The hospitality of the friends of the Union at Halifax was great, but in order to provide for so large a crowd the kindness of all the neighbouring towns within a radius of twelve or sixteen miles was called into requisition. The members of other communions, not excepting the Church of England, freely placed their houses at the disposal of the Union, and treated their guests with cordial and thoughtful hospitality. One of the secondary benefits of this interchange of courtesies is found in the alleviating effects they have on ecclesiastical controversy and the deepened sense of a common faith. I call it secondary, because it is apart from the direct object of calling the Assembly together. From a wider point of view it might well be called primary, for the extension of the sense of brotherhood among Christian churches is a result second in importance to no other.

The delegates first met on Monday, the 10th, for tea in the spacious lecture-hall of Square Church, once the scene of the ministry of the "lion-hearted" Enoch Mellor, whose work of late years has been ably carried on by his successor, Rev. Eric Lawrence. At 6.30 we gathered in great numbers in the beautiful adjoining church to hear the Union sermon from Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, of Union Chapel, Islington. After a very long introductory service, lasting three-quarters of an hour, Mr. Harwood preached from Haggai ii. 9 and Zech. viii. 3. These two prophets, the older and the younger, each spoke of a the difference between them lay in the emphasis they placed respectively on the two factors. These "two voices" represented the two voices of Christ, calling to a loftier worship and a more righteous social and national ideal. It was necessary to emphasise both, the difficulty was to give them their due proportion. The older generation tended to look for all hope of regeneration to the time-honoured activities of spiritual service, the younger to the potent influence of newer and freer methods. Mr. Harwood dwelt on the necessity of progress through reverence for the past, but pleaded for freedom from prejudice against every movement and effect that aimed at leavening the wider life of the world with spiritual influence. The sermon was brief, but full of sound advice and earnest power.

Immediately after the service the gathering resolved itself into a temperance demonstration, and listened with unabated interest and close attention to the addresses from the Union chairman, Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch End, London, Canon Hicks, and Rev. Silvester Horne, of Kensington. There was a ring of hearty conviction, tempered by in all these addresses. Mr. Rowland dwelt on the more personal aspects of the duty of abstinence, Canon Hicks on the need for social and political effort, and Mr. Horne answered some objections brought against the movement by its "friendly critics," especially relating to the alleged "immoderation" of temperance advocates. All three made much of the steady advance made by temperance principles during recent years, and spoke with buoyant hopefulness of their prospects in the future.

On Tuesday the Assembly met in Stannary Chapel—a handsome building, capable of containing 1800 people—to hear the chairman's address. This is given in part elsewhere. It was received with hearty applause, and spoken of as a timely and effective exposé of the Ritualistic Conspiracy which is just now absorbing so much attention.

On the conclusion of the address the Chairman proposed a vote of sympathy with Dr. Berry, whose breakdown in health was largely the result of his devoted services to the Union and the Free Church movement. Dr. Horton moved another, sympathising with the Evangelical party in the Church of England in its endeavours to resist the inroads of our common enemy, Sacerdotalism. He told us that he had in his possession a letter from one of the most distinguished clergymen of that Church, in which he said: "We in the Church of England are helpless, and we look to you Nonconformists to rescue our country from

THIS DETESTABLE TYRANNY."

Dr. Brown, in seconding, however, demurred to this attitude among the Evangelicals in the Establishment, and said they had been guilty of almost sinful silence in not speaking out more loudly than they did.

Rev. James Wylie, of Belfast, here put in an earnest plea for the Congregationalists of Ireland. The Irish Evangelical Society is being taken over by the Irish Union, but as it closes its individual career with a debt of £2000 he appealed to the English churches to take this up, and to enable them to amalgamate the two societies with a clean balance-sheet. Congregationalism is but a weak force at present in the island, but it is an aggressive force. In Belfast alone there are five large churches, three of them capable of holding 1000 people, and all full; a sixth will be opened by the end of the century, and two mission halls are in the same state of rapid expansion. In other parts the work was going ahead, and there had recently been much encouragement in open-air work.

Rev. W. Lord, of Liverpool, and Rev. J. E. Flower, M.A., the energetic secretary of the Church Aid Society, placed before us the position of that very useful organisation. They pleaded for a "Home Missions Sunday," at which the town congregations could hear of the work being done, and there would be no difficulty in getting their people to subscribe if they could be interested. During the last three or four years between £3000 and £4000 a year had been voted in grants to increase the stipends of country ministers to the minimum of £90 a year, and the secretary hoped this might be raised to £100 by the beginning of the new century.

FREE CHURCH PRINCIPLES.

On Tuesday evening there was a great mass meeting of delegates and townsmen at Stannary, when the subject was "The Exposition of Free Church Principles." Mr. Halley Stewart presided, and Rev. D. Walters, of Chorlton-cum-Hardy, and Dr. Guinness Rogers were the speakers. It is needless to say that there was a fine breezy air about this meeting, and the audience rose to great enthusiasm before the end. The sacerdotalists are clearly not going to get it all their own way on the bracing Yorkshire moors. The spirit of the nation is only just rising to the occasion. The great conflict has yet to come.

Wednesday's sessions were given to questions of a less controversial character, and we all enjoyed the opportunity granted us of rising into a worshipful mood. In the morning we had two excellent addresses from Rev. J. Alford Davies on the "Public Ordinances of the Church," and from Rev. John Brown, D.D., on the "Spiritual Meaning of the Lord's Supper." Mr. Davies's address was a trenchant treatment of the problem of public worship. He said it would be well for ministers to look at the pulpit from the standpoint of the pew. A course of hearing even might be taken by them with advantage. At any rate, it was desirable that ministers should not become too absorbed in their own part of the service, forgetting the needs of the people. In answer to the question "What is the he said it was something more than evangelistic—primarily attestatory—a witness on the part of the congregation as well as the preacher to their faith in God and in his truth. "They are there not so much to listen to what is new as to attest to what is old. In short, it comes to this: those who are there come to share in the service, and the work of that service is measured by the extent to which they do it." Men should come to church to give as well as get, not merely money, but worship, honour, praise, adoration. Even though such a congregation be silent, it would nevertheless share in the service from beginning to end. This was a very suggestive paper, delivered without much reference to notes, and it made a marked impression.

Dr. Brown touched on controversial material in his treatment of the Lord's Supper, but it was done in a devotional and not a polemical spirit, and its quiet and helpful appeal was felt by all. The opposing doctrines of the rite he characterised by a happy antithesis—was it a symbol of God's amercy to men, or an act of sacrifice from man to God? Those who held the latter view were the sacerdotalists, and with them Dr. Brown held no truce. He even criticised Dr. Dale's position in his treatment of the question, as reopening the gates of confusion. Dr. Brown touched with terseness on the history of the Protestant doctrine, and contrasted the Lutheran position with that of Zwingli. Passing to exposition, he claimed that the Passover, Covenant, and Supper alike represented three great ruling ideas: (1) deliverance and forgiveness through sacrifice; (2) ratification of union with the ever-present and ever-living Lord; and (3) nourishment of soul by common participation of the Divine food which God gives for the life of the world.

After an interval of prayer, we passed to a communion service, presided over by the veteran Rev. Henry Batchelor. About 1200 took part. It was an impressive and moving sight—this fellowship of men so diverse, and drawn from every part of the kingdom to celebrate the dying love of the Redeemer, and the address, brief as it was, helped to solemnise the occasion. Mr. Batchelor said that the significance of the rite came in the fact that in it we celebrate not our Lord's teaching, though it had created revolutions; not his life, though it was the bright ideal of mankind; not his resurrection or ascension, though they were the crown and climax of his work; but his death as a sacrifice for the sins of the world. He died in order that we may live. The collection at this service is always given to the Evangelical Widows' Fund for the benefit of ministers' widows.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

The evening saw a multitude numbering little, if any, short of 2000 people packed into Stannary Chapel, the occasion being a valedictory meeting to twenty-three L.M.S. missionaries going out or returning to the scenes of their labours. A more delightful meeting it would be hard to imagine.

The proceedings were regulated with business like punctuality and the time programme loyally adhered to, and everything was full of happy spiritual fervour. One of the features of the evening was the brief five minutes' testimonies from the young men and women who were going out for the first time. "Spiritual autobiographies" they might be called. In simple language, but with a directness of speech and manner that was most impressive, these young men and women bore their testimony to the motives which led them to devote themselves to the mission-field, and gave utterance to their aims and hopes. All were full of a buoyant and joyous spirit, and were alive with missionary fervour. The audience thrilled to their touch, and were profoundly moved by their devotion and enthusiasm. It was clear that they knew their own mind in the matter, and were confident that it was also "the mind of the Master." Rev. Eric Lawrence delivered the dedicatory prayer, and the farewell address was delivered by the President-elect of the Union, Rev. Arnold Thomas, who was chairman for the evening. A finer missionary meeting I have never attended. There was a tenderness and a warmth in it that was better than a noisy enthusiasm, and those who were present could hardly fail to be thoroughly and helpfully stirred.

PUBLIC QUESTIONS.

Thursday was the last day of the regular meetings, though there was a people's meeting fixed for Friday evening, after the delegates had left. The morning session was given to the discussion of public questions of the day. The Indian cantonments regulations were dealt with in a resolution proposed by Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and seconded by Rev. J. K. Maconachie (of Manchester); the Czar's Rescript by Drs. Goodrich and Guinness Rogers; the disabilities of Nonconformist teachers by Rev. E. Hinchcliffe Higgins (Greenwich) and Mr. A. J. Shepheard; and the need of popular control over elementary schools by Revs. A. J. Vines, Dr. Mackennal, and J. Hirst Hollowell. The only one of these resolutions calling for remark here is that on the Czar's Rescript. It was a noticeable fact that, whereas the resolution was eminently favourable to the Imperial proposal, the speeches were somewhat tinged with military ardour regarding the French at Fashoda. This was not in the first intentions of the speakers, but the question was in the air, and they and the audience alike were tempted by the present crisis and by Lord Rosebery's speech to dwell more upon our dispute with France than on the need of upholding the Czar in his noble endeavour to promote the cause of peace among the nations. This was unfortunate, especially as the papers all over the country took it as proof that the Government had the Nonconformists at their back in their dealings with France. We must be more careful to apportion due emphasis to things primary and things secondary, lest "our good be evil spoken of."

In the evening Stannary Chapel was again full. This time it was with young people, who were brought together under the auspices of the Young People's Union; and the speakers, Dr. McClure (of Mill Hill), who was in the chair, Mr. Lloyd George, M.P., J. Lewis Paton (Rugby), and Rev. Stanley Rogers (Liverpool) delivered earnest speeches to the youthful crowd who filled the pews to the top-most gallery. It was a fine sight, and we had a rousing time.

Besides this main current of gatherings, many sectional and district meetings were held during the week at odd hours and in various chapels—discussions of women's work, University and other settlements, temperance work, a conference on methods of Christian culture, another on the use of the Old Testament in the pulpit, a colonial missionary meeting and sermon, a Watchers' Band meeting, a Y.P.U. conference on the cultivation of a healthier denominational sentiment among the young folk—time would fail me to speak of these, and my space is already running short. Altogether, though we had no exceptionally memorable speech or gathering except the missionary meeting, the Assembly held some very stimulating sessions, and the townspeople expressed themselves with enthusiasm of the help rendered to the denomination in the place, and to the spiritual uplifting they had experienced. The benefit and the stimulus were mutual. Halifax friends vied with one another in giving us a Yorkshire welcome, attended the meetings in overwhelming numbers that grew as the week advanced, and sent us homeward rejoicing, but exhausted. Let us hope and pray that all will retain a blessing in their hearts as well as a very happy memory in their recollection.

Winchester Conference.

A VERY happy four days' conference has been held at the Soldiers' Home. The subject for the first day was "The love of God as reflected in his works and revealed in his Word." The structure of the world, the formation of man, and the ordination of family love proved the first; God's promises, the gift of Christ, and the blessings which follow proved the second. The speakers were Revs. J. Tuckwell, Allen Davis, David Baron, Mr. J. Wood, and others.

On the second day was considered "The Work of Christ—finished for the sinner and continued for the believer." Rev. Lindsay Young, Rev. J. R. Taft, M.A., D.D., Messrs. W. Hobson and A. Ellis, showed how Christ had finished the programme of Scripture, dying as a sacrifice for sin and a ransom for the slaves of sin, death, and hell. Thus his judgment was taken away from off Him and from off the sinner. The work was continued in heaven by Christ's priestly intercession, whilst as Melchizedek He meets the believer with blessing in the conflicts of earth. His work is also continued in chastening and in his Shepherd character.

"The Work of the Spirit" was the subject of the third day, "in relation to the Church and the world." Dr. Hibberd spoke on the indwelling of the Spirit. The body was "for God," as surely as meats were for the body, thus we know God, as surely as we should know a man if he could convey to us his spirit. The work of the Spirit was shown in his many operations (referred to in Ephesians) at the Bible reading by Mr. F. W. Pitt. By Him we are sealed, we have access or right of way, we see the mystery of the Gospel. In the evening Dr. Taft followed, ably dealing with the same subject. His work in the world was dealt with by Dr. Hibberd and Rev. Manton Smith.

The fourth day was given over to "Work." The North Africa Mission, under Mr. E. H. Glenny; Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, under Rev. David Baron; Open-air Work, under Mr. F. Cockrem; and Work among Soldiers, under Miss Perks, being brought before the meetings.

In the evening the Home was filled with children, when a special address was given by Mr. H. Hutchinson, of the Children's Mission. On Saturday a praise meeting was held to thank God for his abundant blessing.

The Value of Margate Air.

"MARGATE air" is proverbially a vigorous restorative. Why, then, should not orphan children enjoy it as well as adults? This was the subject of a largely attended meeting, held at the Mansion House, in support of a movement to establish a seaside home in connection with the Stockwell Orphanage, founded by the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

The Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, occupied the chair, and declared his own personal conviction that the institution was well managed. Dr. J. A. Spurgeon (president) said they had received into the Orphanage during the thirty years of its existence 2083 children, of whom no fewer than 1250 came from the metropolitan area. That being so, he thought they might fairly look to the people of the metropolis to give them, in an emergency like the present, their generous help. The need of a seaside home to which they could send their ailing and convalescent orphans had been keenly felt for a considerable time, but they had not seen their way to burden the ordinary income of the institution, about £10,000 a year, for that purpose. They had recently purchased at Cliftonville, Margate, two houses which could be made suitable for their requirements. The sum they wanted to raise was £10,000, and he trusted that the whole of that amount would be shortly forthcoming.

Rev. A. J. Poynder moved a resolution expressing the sympathy of the meeting with the project of establishing a seaside home, and assuring the managers of its generous support in maintaining the good work of caring for 500 fatherless children. Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., seconded the resolution, and it was agreed to. A list of subscriptions was announced, including five guineas from the Lord Mayor.

Among East End Jews.

WRITING from 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E., Mr. Henry Barnett says:—

"During the summer the Lord has given us boldness of utterance in our open-air work, and we have had most encouraging times. Jews in large numbers have crowded around us to hear the Gospel. During the whole of August we had standing by us a Jewess who had turned from persecuting us to active sympathy in the proclamation of the Gospel.

"We had remarkable times, also, during the festive season. On the evening of the Day of Atonement, speaking to the Jews at the top of Sidney-street, I read the closing verses of John v., and reminded them that because of the rejection of Him who came in his Father's name their experiences have been sad, and that still darker days are before them. We are now resuming our indoor meetings. I count it a privilege, too, to help in the work of Mr. Baron, of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel."

Primitive Methodist Missions.

INTERESTING reports of the Clapton, Whitechapel, and Hoxton Missions are published, from which it appears that a helpful social work is being carried on. The doctor's register at the Clapton Dispensary shows that 31,900 cases of sickness had been attended to, in addition to which 14,000 cases had received attention at the Hoxton branch, and this total of 46,000 cases, for which 50,000 bottles of medicine bearing the label "Primitive Methodist Medical Mission" had been issued, did not include the special cases visited by the medical officer.

Bible Flower Mission.—The hon. secretary, Mrs. W. W. Turton, reports that owing to the prolonged drought affecting the supplies of flowers, the number of bouquets sent out in September were 6500 fewer than for the corresponding month last year. Consequently the mission has been unable to supply the fever hospitals regularly. Mrs. Turton suggests the substitution, for instance, of clematis seed and wild rose berries combined; bracken, autumn tinted leaves, acorn cups, Michaelmas daisies, and chrysanthemums; and pleads for the little ones, who are met with in such large numbers in our hospitals, infirmaries, and workhouses. Small albums, made of old post cards; picture cards; match boxes covered with bright paper, and ornamented with relief scraps; wool balls and toys are always acceptable, and delight the poor little sufferers, bringing a smile to many a wee, wan face. The address of the mission is 120, Cannon-street, E.C.

Clifton Conference.

A LARGER gathering than usual of Evangelical men as speakers, and a yet larger company of listeners, might have been seen thronging the Victoria Rooms on the occasion of the thirty-sixth Clifton Conference. The topic this year (says The Rock) was what some would call no less simple than faith, forgetting that there is nothing more sublime. Rev. James Ormiston, and the friends associated with him, did their utmost to make due provision for visitors.

On Tuesday morning the large hall of the Victoria Rooms was filled to the door. A few words of cordial welcome were spoken by the president (Mr. Ormiston), telling of the joy with which he had anticipated the conference. Rev. Talbot Greaves, the first speaker, directed attention to the fact that faith is the gift of God, and has for its object the Lord Jesus Christ. Saving faith he characterised as the drawing of a lost sinner to Christ for salvation; it derives all its preciousness from Him, for there is no more merit in faith than in any other of the Christian graces. It should never be forgotten that the feeblest faith brings salvation.

Mr. Stanley having offered prayer for Christian brethren in China, the morning was brought to a close by Dr. Spence, who vigorously attacked the notion that faith is something visionary and shadowy, whereas on the other hand it is the most practical thing that could engage the strongest heart and mind.

In the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Thomas, addresses were given by the representatives of various societies.

It was expected that Dr. A. T. Pierson would have spoken on Wednesday, but illness prevented his leaving home. The opening address was given by Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of Bath, upon "The Life of Faith." Faith being a Divine gift, it could not be exercised except under direct and Divine control, and under the impulses of God the Holy Ghost. The next speaker was Rev. W. Hamlyn.

In the afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. S. Thomas, the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland had an excellent meeting. Rev. Dr. Spence, of Belfast, as a superintendent of Scripture Readers in his own city, and well acquainted with other districts in which they labour, was able to speak comprehensively of the entire work, and with great sympathy and eloquence of the Society's position at the present time. Cordial addresses in support of the Society's claims to be liberally supported were given by Rev. W. B. Doherty and the convener of the Conference.

An interesting and valuable feature in the meetings of the afternoon were two Bible-readings on the topics daily considered in the large hall. These were most helpful for those who desired to lay fast hold of the Conference topics for the day in preference to attending society meetings with the workings of which many of them were familiar. Pastor Fuller Gooch gave the readings, and various friends took part in the after conversation.

In the evening, when there was the largest attendance yet seen, prayer was offered for brethren working in China under dangerous conditions. The speakers were Pastor Gooch, Mr. Samuel Thomas, and Colonel Saville. On Thursday Rev. Henry Dening took up the last topic of the Conference, "The Household of Faith." Earnest words next came from Rev. J. N. Worsfold, rector of Huddlesey, Yorks. He called upon his brethren to do true soldier service, and not to shirk the battle. Rev. F. J. Horsfield, after a vigorous address, closed by saying that, as Evangelical men, they did not live and labour to promote the special good of sect or party, but only the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour. Finally, there came the loving farewell of the convener of the Conference to his brethren in the ministry and to visitors generally.

A Summer Sunday in the Highlands.—Several correspondents write to complain of the statements embodied in a contributed note which appeared in our last issue with respect to drunkenness in a Highland district of Scotland. It is objected that the form of the note makes it appear that the description given represents the normal state of things in the Highlands, whereas the incident, if it is not in any case much exaggerated, must have happened in connection with some railway construction in which imported navvies were engaged.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Continental Holiday Notes.

I HAVE lately taken a holiday in the South of France, meeting with nothing but kindness and courtesy from the interesting people of both town and country districts alike. It is impossible not to be struck by the evidence of devotion amongst the poorer of these people, and one cannot but feel one's sympathies drawn out towards them, particularly when one contrasts the luxury of hotel life with the simple and Spartan frugality of the working classes, who seem to work very hard for very modest wages.

This is sadly noticeable amongst the women, who labour very patiently in what amongst us is always considered man's work. Imagine women —some of them very delicate and weak in appearance—acting as railway porters, as may be seen at Bordeaux! Or again—as I have seen—a woman yoked together with a cow and an ass, ploughing! Or again—as can be seen in other places in Austria and Italy—working as brick-setters, labourers, or paving the streets!

These incidents lead one to feel how great is one's opportunity and responsibility when holiday-making, to try to do something to bring light and comfort into the poor lives of these hardly worked people. And over and over again did I feel guilty in not having done something in this direction by gifts of portions of the New Testament to those with whom one was brought into contact. Want of a supply of them, which I had intended to take, robbed me of the pleasure I should have had in doing as proposed.

It is sad to see how easily devotion may become superstitious, and even idolatry, as evidenced by the concourse of pilgrims—we were told numbering as many as twenty thousand in a day—at Lourdes, which place during the beginning of September was thronged by devotees from far and near, who came to worship at the shrine of the Virgin, built as an outcome of the hysterical statements of a peasant girl some twenty-five years ago.

This huge assembly of pilgrims is officered by scores of priests, who seem to foster the delusion, and, judging by their personal appearance, do not lead an austere life. I venture to hope that my note may suggest useful thoughts to other holiday-makers.

Destitute Children in Korea.

THE need of a home for the reception, protection, and training of destitute children has long been felt in Korea by missionaries and others working among the people. If in our own country there is need for such homes, how much greater must be the need in a heathen country, where girl life is held to be of little importance, the position of women is low and degraded, and children generally who have no friends are entirely without care and protection? The child with no one to care for it is frequently sold as a slave, or, if there is no one even to take that trouble, is left to die; while numbers of children throughout the country starve to death every year just for want of a home to befriend them.

This need is now being supplied in a Home for Destitute Children, situated in Seoul, the capital of Korea. Two ladies, Miss Ellen Pash, graduate of Girton College, and Miss Jean Perry, daughter of the late Mr. H. T. Perry, sometime superintendent of the Little Boys' Home, Farningham, are giving themselves to the work of caring for the children. The object of the institution is to clothe, feed, lodge, educate, and give religious and industrial training to destitute and neglected children, especially orphans or those in danger of falling into crime.

The cost of one child is estimated at £9 per year, in the case of those individually supporting children, to be paid quarterly in advance. The religious teaching is from Holy Scripture, Protestant, but thoroughly undenominational. The secular instruction consists of reading, writing, and arithmetic, and other elementary branches of knowledge, all given in the Korean language. The industrial training, as the Home grows and the funds permit, will include dairy, laundry, and needlework for the girls, and Korean industries and farm-work for the boys. The buildings at present occupied are very inadequate, being but small Korean cottages built of mud and stone. Better buildings will be provided as the funds permit.

The work is under the direction of a council, of which Dr. Underwood, the well-known American missionary, is chairman. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Edward Pash, Esborne, Lawrie Park, Sydenham, S.E.

New China and its Leaders.

IN 1826 there was published a large work in twenty volumes called "King Shih Wên," or widely known public documents. It consisted of essays from the most distinguished men in the empire on all questions of public interest during the sixty previous years. In 1886 there was published a supplement, also in twenty volumes, containing the most important documents since 1826.

As the Chinese Government in many of the documents in these two works showed itself very hostile to Christianity, publishing in some of them the vilest calumnies against Christians, the attention of the General Missionary Conference, held in Shanghai in 1890, was called to the fact, and the opinion expressed that if the Chinese Government did not suppress these calumnies there might be riots and massacres any day. The riots and massacres did take place in the years following, as all the world knows.

In the beginning of this year, 1898, the reform party published what they call the "New King Shih Wên," also in twenty vols., and uniform with the two former works. These new volumes contain 580 essays and documents, of which 160 are anonymous. The rest are from 135 different authors—one is a member of the Imperial family, one a president of one of the Boards of Government in Peking, others are viceroys, governors, judges, censors, hanlins, editors, etc., and there are essays from English, American, French, German, Russian, and Japanese writers. Upwards of thirty of the essays are by the well-known missionary Rev. Timothy Richards.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE REFORMERS

towards Christianity is worthy of special notice. In the words of The Chinese Recorder: "The Chinese writers of these documents appear in three stages. The first is that in which the writer notes the number of points of similarity between Confucianism and Christianity, and then draws the inference, 'How widely known is Confucianism!' But writers in this stage are apparently conscious of the weakness of such an argument, for they write anonymously. The second stage is that in which the writers assume the superiority of Western civilisation, and say that it arises from the West having paid attention to higher truths of religion which Confucianists have neglected. The third stage is that in which the writers, like the son of the Governor of Hupeh, become apologists for Christians and defend them against the former aspersions and calumnies.

In this intellectual change we see the seeds of one of the greatest reforms China has ever seen. The avalanche has begun to move, and its onward course is irresistible. The Christian forces that were supposed by many in China to be inert are beginning to prove themselves the most potent over the practical Chinese mind as over the thoughtful Western mind. Let the Christian Church take courage and all thoughtful men take note. Advices from Pekin inform us that the Chinese Government is asking the help of the venerable Rev. W. A. P. Martin, LL.D., in regard to their new departure in education. It is a fitting crown to an honourable life and magnificent talents for fifty years devoted to the welfare of the Chinese.

Writing to us regarding his great undertaking to reach the higher classes in China, in the foundation of the

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF CHINA,

Rev. Gilbert Reid says:—"My scheme has been sanctioned by the eleven princes and ministers of the Imperial Board of Foreign Affairs. President W. A. P. Martin is associated with me. The Chinese are anxious to have it specially established right in Pekin. They contributed at the ports £2000, and the foreign residents £1000. I have secured £6000 in the United States, but only £2000 goes for the building fund. There is needed £10,000 more, and then all the building can go up at once, for the first public library, for the first lecture hall, for the first exhibit hall or museum, for the first social hall, where Chinese and foreigners meet, and for class-rooms, under the University extension system—all to be directed by missionaries for the glory of God, and the adaptation of Christianity to the social and intellectual life of the people.

"Those who cannot give large amounts can give smaller for the maintenance of the work. £2 per annum makes an auxiliary member. Donations can be sent to Hong Kong Bank, 31, Lombard-street, London. I can also be addressed there through the autumn and winter. Here is a way of approach. The British in this can exert an influence right in Peking. I have arranged with a lecture agency to lecture with lantern slides and Chinese costumes on 'China's Living Leaders,' 'China's Open Door,' and 'China's Upheaval.' Communications addressed to me will mee prompt attention. Will the Church take the lead in shaping China's future?"

The Situation in Asia Minor.

IT seems desirable that our fellow Christians in this country should understand the way of God's providence in Turkey at the present time. Over the whole area of Asia Minor there is a slowly returning sense of security, and such a measure of freedom is already attained that the persecuted people can now assemble without fear to hear the Gospel of the love of God. True, a large number of pastors and teachers have been laid in martyrs' graves, but a remnant of impoverished workers remain, and in one of our latest letters we have striking testimony to their fidelity and necessities:—

"The preachers and labourers in school and Bible work have been patient and faithful in their efforts. They often meet with difficulties hard to bear, and suffer much in witnessing the sufferings of their people. In some cases, where lack of funds has necessitated a large reduction in salaries, they have, with great self-denial, continued in the work, though receiving little or no pecuniary remuneration."

It is for these native servants of the Lord Jesus we desire to plead, believing, as we do, that chiefly by such instruments the diffusion of saving truth must be effected in any country. Our special aids to such for the past two years have been greatly blessed of God, and have kept many zealous workers to their posts. Nor must the Massacre orphans in Asia Minor be overlooked. Upwards of 4000 of these pitiable children are under the care of American missionaries, to whom our aids are transmitted. These orphans will require aid for years to come, as they must be taught how to earn their daily bread. For these two specific objects—provision for the Armenian orphans and for the support of the native pastors, teachers, and other workers—we ask earnest prayers and ready gifts, believing they are just now the greatest available agencies for uplifting the oppressed Armenian people, and leading them into the light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.—Yours truly,

Kinnaird.

The Plague in India.—The plague returns for the week ended the 15th inst. show a slight improvement as regards Bombay city, where the deaths reported numbered 200, as compared with about 210 in each of the two previous weeks. In the other districts of the Presidency, however, the epidemic is still extending, the deaths reported for the week being 4300, as against 4000 in the previous week, and 3000 in the week before. There is also a marked increase in the Baroda and Mysore States.

Spain.—The latest issue of Gleanings from Spain tells of progress in several directions. Mr. J. Chorley, writing from Tudela, says that many of the people have freed themselves from the power of the priest. A lady worker who has been visiting villages around Saragoza writes: "In Zuera many of the people are friendly, and the meetings well attended. Three of the converts (bright, earnest Christians) are in training, that they may be missionaries among their own people. In Muel there is much to encourage. It does one good to see the interest with which they read round, and how quickly they learn to find the references." Copies of Gleanings may be had from Mr. E. Ives, 55, St. John's-villas, Upper Holloway, London, N.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Weaver Brothers in Belfast.

THE visit of these brethren was eagerly looked forward to, for many memories linger in this city of the work of their honoured father. Great preparations had been made, and great expectation was aroused. Our hopes were not disappointed, for the first Sabbath morning the power of God was manifestly present. At night the church, seating 1400 people, was crowded, and many entered the inquiry room. All through the week the interest deepened. The second Sunday was a day long to be remembered. The brothers preached and sang four times —in the afternoon for the Y.M.C.A. of Mountpottinger, when scores were turned away. At the night service the crush was tremendous, pulpit stairs and aisles being crowded. Better far, a number confessed Christ.

During the second week the spacious church was filled from floor to ceiling nearly every night. Many ministers gave us the right hand of fellowship. Once again, as the people were "as one," and as in one voice they praised and thanked the Lord, the glory of God filled the house. The minister and session and the whole congregation gave the brothers a united invitation to return to them at the same time next year. And now, looking back on the mission, we can exclaim, "There failed not aught of any good things the Lord had spoken to Israel; all came to pass." And so we thank God and take courage. Wm. Witherow,

Minister, Westbourne Presbyterian Belfast. Church.

Gipsy Smith at Wigan.

UNDER the auspices of the Free Church Council, Gipsy Smith has conducted a ten days' mission in the Drill Hall, Wigan. From beginning to end the services have been attended with rich blessing, and the whole town and district seems to have been moved in an extraordinary manner. This is the third United Gospel Mission held in the Drill Hall of Wigan within ten months. The two preceding missions were conducted by Mr. George Clarke, when a large number of people passed through the inquiry rooms. During Gipsy Smith's mission the great hall has been crowded every night, and there have been multitudes of inquirers. The immediate result of these missions is a powerful quickening of the spiritual life of the churches, and a great development of mission work in the town and district. F. L.

Evangelists' Movements.

Mr. Jas. Wharton has held an eight days' mission at St. Albans. The meetings were well attended nightly, and crowded on Sundays. A number of conversions are reported.

Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz began a sixteen days' mission on Sunday week in Byrom Hall, Liverpool, when she preached to large congregations afternoon and evening. The mission promises to be very successful.

Rev. Mr. Clark, of Galashiels, has concluded a fifteen days' Gospel mission in the Bristo-place Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh. Each night there were decisions for Christ. In one place of business six young women were invited to the meetings, and all of them professed conversion. Special meetings were held for the young people.

A correspondent writes that a most encouraging mission is being held in the British School, Sunnyside, Hitchin. Mr. Goudie is conducting the services, and the room has been well filled every night. Several who were impressed have remained to seek spiritual guidance and prayer. It has been decided to prolong the meetings for a few days.

Mr. Josiah Nix recently conducted a ten days' mission in the Wesleyan chapel, St. Just. Much interest attached to the missioner's visit. Large congregations assembled night after night to listen to the preacher's earnest and faithful addresses, while on Sunday the spacious chapel was well filled. Many entered the inquiry room, not a few of them boys and girls from the Sunday-school, and over 200 persons signed the total abstinence pledge.

As to the second week of Rev. John McNeill's Gospel Mission at Dingwall, The Northern Weekly says:—"It is believed that many who have heard him in Dingwall will have reason to look back upon his mission with deep thankfulness for blessing received through his instrumentality. Mr. McNeill preached one afternoon at the Cross of Dingwall to a large gathering of farmers and others attending the weekly sales, and was listened to for the space of an hour with rapt attention."

Mr. McNeill goes to Invergordon this week, beginning in the Free Church on Sabbath, and continuing nightly till Friday.

The work of grace in Inverness, referred to in a recent issue, is continuing. Mr. Fraser, Divinity student, conducted a third week of special services in the Music-hall, where meetings were held nightly. The attendances are large and the attention encouraging. Mr. Fraser has no intention, as was rumoured, of giving up his classes at the New College with the intention of devoting himself wholly to evangelistic work. He proceeds to Edinburgh soon to prosecute his studies at the Divinity Hall.

Rev. T. L. Johnson has completed a fourteen days' mission in the Assembly Rooms, Putney. The attendance has been very good from the beginning. Best of all, we have to praise the Lord for souls brought to decision every night. Mr. Johnson was in suffering most of the time, his health having broken down through overwork. He has now returned to his home in Bournemouth for a rest. Will the reader pray that he may be strengthened for further work in the Lord's service?

B.

The recently concluded mission of Gipsy Smith at Portsmouth has left results which call for abundant gratitude. The Wesley Church, which is, with one exception, the largest Nonconformist place of worship in the town, proved quite inadequate to accommodate the crowds. A large number of inquirers came forward, who are now being gathered into the various churches. The ministers of the Free Churches co-operated in a very signal manner, and the bond of union between them has been strengthened.

Mr. Monro Collings's next engagement is Worthing, Oct. 23 to 28.

Sergeant Pullinger's next engagement will be Strathmore-road, Croydon, Sunday, Oct. 23.

Mr. Josiah Nix's engagements:—Oct. 23, Rotherham; Oct. 29 to Nov. 7, Tunstall; Nov. 12 to 21, Market Rasen; Nov. 26 to Dec. 5, Burnley; Dec. 11 to 19, Leicester.

Rev. J. Manton Smith's engagements up to the close of the year:—Oct. 31 to Nov. 4, East London Tabernacle; Nov. 6 to 13, Winchester; Nov. 19 to 29, Elland; Dec. 3 to 13, Norwood; Dec. 18, Epsom; Dec. 24, Croydon; Dec. 31-Jan. 1, Croydon.

"What Would'st Thou have Me to Do?"

What would'st Thou have me to do, Lord?
Show me my task for to-day,
Lowly or high, as Thou wilt, Lord!—
Only give strength to obey.
Neither an hour nor a life-time
Dare I plan out at my will;
That is my King's part—and mine is—
Simply his plans to fulfil.

Whispers conflicting I hear, Lord!
Counselling all the days through;
'Tis for thy counsel I wait, Lord!—
What would'st Thou have me to do?

Where would'st Thou have me to go, Lord?
Point me the path for to-day;
Rugged or smooth, as Thou wilt, Lord—
Only go with me alway.
Neither a step nor a life-path
Dare I plan out at my will;
That is my King's part—and mine is—
Simply to follow Him still.

Hither and thither they call me,
Voices of friend and of foe;
Voices of sin and self-will, Lord!
Where would'st Thou have me to go?

What would'st Thou have me to be, Lord?
What in thy vineyard to-day?
Busy or still, as Thou wilt, Lord—
Only thy servant alway.
Never a nook in that vineyard
Dare I choose out at my will;
That is the part of the Master—
Mine, his commands to fulfil.

Truly thy servant am I, Lord!
Truly mine eyes are on Thee.
Take Thou life's choice from my hand, Lord;
What would'st Thou have me to be?

It is so sweet to surrender,
Bowed at thy crucified feet,
Wishes and choices and hopes, Lord!
Yea, for thy Love makes it sweet.
Some Thou'lt give back to me granted;
Some Thou wilt gently deny;
Keeping the rest to fulfil them,
If not on earth, then—on high.

Lives unsurrendered to Thee, Lord,
Freely, whatever the cost,
Fair tho' they look in the world's eyes,
God counteth mis-spent and lost.

The People in the Music Hall.—The Sunday evening services in the enlarged Metropolitan Music Hall, Edgware-road, conducted by Mr. Chas. Cook, are drawing very large audiences. This work is a splendid antidote to the public-house and street attractions which beset the young people of the district. The expenses (£13 per week) are about half met by the collections; the remainder may fairly be looked for from the Christian public, especially as the Sunday League has tried hard to secure the building for secular lectures and entertainments.

Protestant Sunday.—At a recent meeting of the Protestant Secretaries' Federation it was decided to appeal to all the ministers of Christian denominations to co-operate on Lord's Day, November 6, in commemorating the providential deliverance of the Sovereign and people of England on November 5, 1605, when the Gunpowder Plot was discovered; also for the deliverance of the English people from Popish tyranny and arbitrary power in 1688, when William, Prince of Orange, landed at Torbay. It is proposed that sermons should be preached and suitable references made in as many pulpits as possible.

Thursday Half-holiday.—Mr. William Forbes, 71, Tollington-road, N., writes: "On Thursday evenings thousands of young men and women are wandering about the streets not knowing what to do with themselves. Most of the week-night services at places of worship are held on Wednesdays. Why should there not be Pleasant and Profitable Thursday Evenings for these people? I should like to arrange a meeting of this kind for Holloway district, but I am so often from home I dare not attempt it unless others are willing to join in this matter. If something is not done quickly the half-holiday will not be an unmixed blessing."

A Visit to George Yard.

"THESE," said kindly Mr. Holland in a whisper, indicating a large roomful of tiny toddlers, "these are the homeless ones. Yes, their parents are poor out-of-works driven to the streets by misfortune. They leave the children with us during the day. Ah! here is Robinson Crusoe; and how are you, Robinson?"

Robinson was, strange to say, a little girl. She came forward with a nice little smile upon her pale face, but yet with an air of heavy responsibility, for in yonder corner lay a cotton bag containing the family belongings, and even amid the dictation of "A man caught a rat" she keeps an eye on that bundle.

Now, many of you, dear children, who have nice homes and warm clothes, for which you are so grateful, would be sad at heart if you saw the hundreds of poor little ones who gather daily in the homely, pleasant schools at George Yard. There are hundreds of them, of all ages and sizes. Many of them are Jewish, of olive skin and flashing dark eyes; but the majority, sharp and nimble, if pallid, are just samples of London street boys. Here is a row of them. They stand up with a good-natured grin. What if their knickerbockers are sorely rent, or glimpses of pink flesh peep through here and there to

of a shirt? They cannot help it, you know, for they have little chance of buying new ones. Their evenings are often spent in selling newspapers or matches to help to swell the family income and buy a herring for dinner on Sunday. Still, rags are getting beautifully less, for there is actually a sewing class for boys, where some scores of them are instructed in the mysteries of patching and button-holing.

But, you will say, "Are they not hungry?" No, because in the long, long list of good work done in this beautiful cluster of houses behind dingy Whitechapel there occur the magic words of "bread" and "soup," wisely given to those in need. And, if it be any assurance of the honour of a London street boy, permit me to tell you that, so far from these lads complaining, the teachers have difficulty in ascertaining whether a boy has had any breakfast or not. Nobody comes for "what they can get." As a great poet said, "We needs must love the highest when we see it," and so the struggling sons and daughters of squalor recognise the light in the darkness. And that light is

DIVINE TRUTH, DIVINE LOVE.

You understand?

Here is another big room. It is full of important little chaps deep in mathematical problems about the cost of sixteen dusters at 2½d. each; while one vigorous young man, whom I nearly called "young waistcoat," for he wore a very large one, which covered his podgy little legs like a coat, waved a big sponge and cleaned all the slates. Room after room we pass through, and crowd after crowd of children we see, for the premises are so carefully planned out that all is in use, and, when the day schools cease and the youngsters are gone, the elder folk—many of them once scholars in this very place—will come in to classes and the reading room, for to many hard-working young people it is a great blessing to have so nice an institution in their midst, bright and spotlessly clean.

"But," says Mr. Holland, "we have not done with the children yet. There are the babies. We must not miss them."

No, no; we must not. So we climb the stairs that are so neatly lined with glazed white bricks and with dark blue tiles, usefully set as a substitute for banisters; we reach which is a long apartment, as spick and span as loving hands can make it. Just outside is a bath room, with two little baths—just the very thing for babies. Inside there are infants everywhere. Some are asleep in the cots that gleam in such charming array, more are having a delightful time on the big, warm rug in front of the firescreen, kicking and laughing as though there were no such words as "trouble" and "sorrow" in the world. This department is the crêche, where on payment of twopence poor mothers can leave their little ones for the day while they themselves go out to work.

"When they arrive at seven o'clock in the morning," says Mr. Holland, "if it is advisable to use soap and water, then those useful articles are used; then the nurse puts them into fresh warm clothes. If they are hungry, they have breakfast; then there is soup at mid-day, and bread and butter at two, and so on." "As for the babies' bottles, we are pretty busy with them all day long," murmurs the nurse.

So you see they have good value for the twopence. But they evidently like best of all the and, getting attached to the mission in very infancy, they presently pass into the schools, join the Bible-class, help in the Sunday services, and many grow into manhood or womanhood serving the Saviour. There are so very many branches of the work that I should really need a book if I were to record the advantages of all—the Addiscombe training home for servant girls, the "holidays for suffering women" (in which the late Duchess of Teck took such practical interest, which is continued by her kind daughter, the Duchess of York), the Sunday evangelistic meetings, and many more satisfactory and successful undertakings.

Yet let me, in conclusion, whisper softly in your ear that Mr. Holland has to pay out a good deal of money to keep up so large and well managed a mission, and he would be so very glad if the boys and girls who read The Christian could send, addressed to 87, High-street, Whitechapel, some toys for the babies, and especially some cast-off clothes for the elder children. Our Prize Competition.

IT has given me very much pleasure to examine the numerous papers sent in, especially as this time they have been (as a whole) better done than at any previous competition. The questions have been answered very correctly, and the papers prepared with much care and neatness, which does great credit to the competitors.

Of course, my nephews and nieces will each consider that his or her paper must be worth a prize. This is only natural; and I must confess that, now and then, it has been extremely difficult to decide which ought to have a prize and which not. When this has occurred I have awarded an extra prize.

I heartily congratulate the prize winners, and trust that their efforts and their success will make them love the study of the Word of God. But I fully sympathise, too, with those who have failed. Do not be discouraged, my dear young friends: you may be in the List of Prize-winners next time. Keep up your weekly searching; persevere with an intense purpose to succeed. Remember the old adage, "If at first you don't succeed," etc. There is one very great advantage in your Bible Searching, whether you gain a prize or not—you will know more of the Word of God than you knew before; and knowledge of the Bible will acquaint you of Him to whom all the books of the Bible point, the Lord Jesus Christ, who loved us, and gave Himself for us. And to know Him is better than all the prizes.

Brave "Arethusa" Lads.—A pleasing sight was witnessed the other day on board the Arethusa training ship at Greenhithe, Kent, when, in the presence of all the officers and boys, the vellum certificate of the Royal Humane Society was presented to a lad named Henry James Gale, for gallantry in saving a child from drowning at Greenhithe. Mr. Archibald E. Scott, chairman of the committee, in making the presentation, announced that the lad Oscar Harman, who was associated with Gale in the rescue referred to, had since entered a Royal Navy training ship, and a similar presentation had been made to him by the captain superintendent in the presence of the entire ship's company. The vessel belongs to the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, London.

A hundred and fifty young men attended the opening reception of the Islington Y.M.C.A., given by Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick Brown in the Barnsbury Hall.

Throughout the past summer a united band of members of the Wakefield Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. have held open-air services in the centre of the city each Sunday night. Very many have been the testimonies as to blessing received.

In connection with the Edinburgh Association a well-attended Conference was held on October 15, on "the utility of special evangelistic efforts, and how these may be rendered most effective." The discussion was of a practical and useful nature.

The annual conference of the North Midland District Union took place at Leeds on Oct. 13. Over fifty delegates were present from Associations in Derby, Notts, Lincoln, and the southern half of Yorks, and various practical topics were discussed.

The Coventry Association has concluded a most successful membership campaign extending over a month. The result showed a total addition of 370 new members. The president received the new members at an "at home." The membership is now nearly 600.

The work of the young Association at Hanley, under the direction of Mr. J. Palmer Howard, has made rapid development. The membership has nearly doubled within the past twelve months, now standing at 300, and a first-rate programme has been arranged for the coming winter.

The inaugural reception of the winter season, of the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A., given by Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Procter, president, was held on October 13. There was a very large attendance. Brief addresses were delivered by Mr. Procter, Mr. Robert McCann, and Mr. O. H. McCowen.

At the recent annual meeting of the Church of Ireland Y.M.C.A., in Dublin, interesting addresses on the objects and benefits of the Society were given by the Archbishop of Dublin, Mr. Campbell, Q.C., M.P., Sir F. R. Falkiner, and others. Prizes were distributed for proficiency in different subjects.

At Oxford Y.M.C.A. the opening reception of the autumn session was given by Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Dodd. An address was given by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., who urged the many young men present to hand on the great blessings which they had received to the less fortunate around them.

A report is to hand of the thirty-third annual business meeting of the Cape Town Y.M.C.A. The statement presented by the secretary, Mr. Will G. Sprigg, as to the work of the past year showed that there were twenty-eight distinct sections or agencies in operation, and that the total membership was now 826.

The Bayswater Y.M.C.A. made a promising commencement of its winter's work at a successful social gathering, over which Dr. Parker Young presided. On October 24 the Association begins a series of meetings, at which the speakers will be Preb. Webb-Peploe, Revs. E. H. Hopkins, G. Hanson, F. B. Meyer, and G. H. C. Macgregor.

The Newcastle-on-Tyne Association is successfully maintaining a "Chamber of Commerce." This agency "does not attempt commercial classes nor any interference with the teaching agencies which already abound, but aims at persuading young men to join those classes and enter for the London Chamber of Commerce examinations and certificates.

On Tuesday, October 11—Sir George Williams's seventy-seventh birthday—the annual meeting was held in Battersea Town Hall of the Clapham Junction Y.M.C.A., Sir George kindly occupying the chair. A report of excellent work was presented by the honorary secretary, Mr. Harry Swift. There was a good attendance of men, and the meeting was bright and successful.

Fifty-eight delegates assembled at the Ipswich Association on October 13, for the annual conference of the Eastern Counties District Union. Canon Garratt occupied the chair in the morning, and Sir W. Brampton Gurdon in the afternoon. The National Council's recent circular upon the "Inner Life of the Associations" was very warmly discussed. The conference was one of the most representative and successful ever held by the District Union.

Between five and six hundred young men accepted the invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams to a social gathering at Exeter Hall on Monday week, to inaugurate the work of the winter session. Afterwards the first meeting in connection with a fortnight's special mission by Rev. W. R. Mowll took place. Mr. J. H. Putterill, the general secretary, spoke of the benefits to be derived from membership in the Association, and Mr. Mowll followed with an earnest address on the words, "Choose Life!" The subsequent meetings of the mission have been largely attended.

The most successful men's mission ever held in connection with the Sheffield Y.M.C.A. has just been conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, principal of Cliff College, who was assisted by eighteen of the students of that institution. The work of the latter consisted in canvassing the shops, offices, and warehouses of the city during the daytime, and holding open-air meetings prior to the indoor service at night. The addresses were of a high order, and the results of the mission most gratifying to all the workers. Christian Evidence missions were conducted at Derby and Nottingham during the same week.

Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL.B., who has been appointed by the English National Council to develop and supervise Y.M.C.A. work throughout Burmah, has for some years been honorary secretary of the Association at Tralee and of the South of Ireland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s. He is a member of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, and an enthusiastic worker in the interests of young men. Mr. McCowen will visit a number of the principal home Associations, with a view to interesting the members in his work, and a farewell meeting will take place, at Exeter Hall, on December 2.

The autumn conference of the Western District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations was held at Bath on Thursday, 13th inst. The delegation was one of the largest ever sent to the conference gathering, over seventy delegates being present. The report showed an increase in the membership on the past year of one hundred and twenty-nine. In the three counties of Gloucester, Somerset, and Wilts it was estimated that there were some twenty-five towns in which new Associations ought to be planted. The district is now engaged in the consideration of the appointment of a travelling secretary.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. is enjoying a season of remarkable prosperity in every department. The number of young men attending, and the spiritual results, have attracted the attention of the Christian community, and deep interest is being evinced on every hand in the work of the Association. The weekly average attendance of young men at present number 1000. Notwithstanding that the new building is only some eighteen months opened, the pressure for room is already being felt to such an extent that the committee have purchased, within the past few days, additional premises adjoining, at a cost of £7700, a part of which will be thrown into the principal hall of the Association. Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, is to conduct a mission in connection with the Association next month.

The Y.W.C.A.

A Y.W.C.A. Home is to be opened this week in Turin (Corso Oporto 23). It may be of use to parents wanting to send their daughters to teach in Italy to know of such a Home.

The work at Cloudesley Institute, Barnsbury, has been graciously owned by God throughout this year. The Sunday attendances have been large, and a steady interest has been manifested in the Word of God, whilst many have come out distinctly for Christ, and are now seeking to win others. The junior branch and large Band of Mercy afford useful training places for the members. The boarding house is always full, and valued by parents whose daughters come to London for business purposes.

A Missionary Cruise.

A CRUISE for public schoolboys and others has been arranged by Sir Matthew Dodsworth and Rev. Norman Bennet, who purpose visiting several stations of the North Africa Mission in the Mediterranean. The object of the tour is to rouse increasing interest in foreign mission work, especially among the young men attending our public schools and universities. The hon. secretary of the North Africa Mission has arranged to accompany the party, which proposes to call at Tangier, Gibraltar, Tetuan, Algiers, Tunis, Sousa, Tripoli, and Malta. The trip will cost from £16 16s., including the fare to and from London to Marseilles. Any friends interested in missions are invited to join in the tour which will begin on December 21 and close about January 10. Address, Rev. Norman Bennet, Church Parochial Mission Society, Church House, Westminster; or Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bournemouth; or Mr. Glenny, 21, Linton-road, Barking, Essex.

Obituary.

MR. W. HAYFORD.

Brompton-road Y.M.C.A. has recently lost an old and valued member in the death of Mr. W. Hayford, Sloane-street. For more than forty years he was connected with the S.W. branch, and until recently acted as treasurer, and when health permitted was found at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class unfolding the Scriptures to many young men. He also took a lively interest in all the work carried on, and supported in an unostentatious way many Christian institutions outside the Y.M.C.A.

REV. W. H. DICKENSON.

We regret to announce the recent death of Rev. W. H. Dickenson, at his residence in Paddington, aged sixty-five years. He was born in Manchester, and left that city to take his place as a Congregational minister in 1859. He filled with credit the office of pastor in that body at Paddock, Huddersfield, Bicester, Wendover, Erdington, Robert-street, Grosvenor-square, and Notting Dale. Mr. Dickenson was greatly esteemed by those who knew him, and the church at Notting Dale has lost a faithful preacher and pastor.

PASTOR E. H. SOPER.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death of Rev. Edwin Herbert Soper, pastor of Greendale Baptist Church, Bathurst, Victoria. A native of Southampton, Mr. Soper led a wayward life while still a youth, and passed some time in South Africa. In 1882 he was converted, and a short time afterwards entered upon earnest evangelistic work. We soon find him in the West Indies; then in Brazil, working under the auspices of the American Board. During his nine years of service in that dark land he gave full proof of a blessed ministry. Returning home, Mr. Soper put in two years of devoted work at Birmingham; but, his health breaking down, he was recommended to try southern climes, in the hope that the evil wrought by South American fevers would thereby be eradicated. After two years' faithful toil he has been called home, leaving a wife and four children to mourn his loss.

MR. ROBERT MEEK, EDINBURGH.

This Christian brother, who recently died very suddenly, was one of the oldest workers in connection with the Carrubbers Close Mission. Born in Leith sixty-two years ago, he was early brought to the Lord. One of the earliest and oldest friends of the late Richard Weaver, his name is frequently mentioned in his memoir. For some years he was assistant superintendent of the Sabbath evening open-air work in the meadows. But he was best known for his faithfulness as a tract distributor. For the last sixteen years "Father" Meek was to be found in all weathers every Sunday morning, with his bundle of tracts, in front of the General Post Office. These he distributed to passers-by and to callers for letters, and many interesting facts he could record about his tracts and those who received them. He also visited the shops open on the Lord's Day.

COLONEL URMSTON.

By the death of Colonel Urmston a familiar figure passes out of the life of Maidstone, and a large Christian circle is thrown into mourning. The third son of the late Sir James Brabazon Urmston, our departed friend entered the East India Company's service in 1847, and did duty in several capacities and districts. Having passed the higher standard examination in three languages as interpreter in 1849, he was appointed adjutant of the 16th Irregular Cavalry in 1851. He took part in important engagements, and subsequentl occupied assistant commissionerships at Peshawur and in some of the wildest frontier districts.

While at Peshawur he assisted in the founding of a mission to the Afghans, and this was only one of the many links which associated him with missionary work during his military and civil career. As political officer at the Court of Maharajah Gholab Singh, of Kashmir, he was successful in his efforts to preserve the loyalty of the Maharajah during the outbreak of the Mutiny; and on the Maharajah's death, in 1857, although unprotected by any British force, by his firm and unflinching attitude he prevented the suttee of five of the Maharajah's wives, who desired to burn, in accordance with the Hindu custom, on the funeral pyre. His health became seriously affected in Kashmir, not only by his anxious and arduous work, but by an attempt to poison him, a danger he only escaped by the vigilance of his devoted wife, who, suspecting the native doctor, gave but a small portion of the dose the latter had prescribed. His first furlough was after eleven years of continuous service. He finally returned to England in 1874, retiring with the rank of Colonel after twenty-seven years in military and civil employ. On more than one occasion he received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council, though his modesty prevented his name being put forward for those official distinctions which his services had abundantly merited.

After retirement Colonel Urmston devoted himself to Christian and philanthropic work of various kinds, being specially identified with evangelistic work at home, missionary work among the heathen, and the temperance cause. His services, as well as those of Mrs. Urmston (whose death from typhoid a year ago had much to do with breaking his health), were widely sought, and he was much appreciated as a speaker on these subjects. Particularly in connection with the zenana work among the women of India were Colonel and Mrs. Urmston successful in arousing interest. Colonel Urmston took an active part in the endowment and building of St. Luke's Church, and was one of the trustees of the benefice. His faith, however, was unbedged by prejudices, and the Nonconformists of Maidstone will miss his sympathetic help as well as the Church of England, of which he was a devout and earnest member.

Personalia.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will not visit the United States in January, as was inadvertently announced in our issue of last week.

Rev. D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, S.W., begins, on 23rd inst., a month's mission in churches in and around Nairn.

Rev. A. B. Evans, curate of St. Stephen's, East Twickenham, has been appointed to the assistant secretaryship of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Dr. Baedeker writes to us: "Will you have the kindness to ask for sympathy and prayer from the readers of The Christian on my behalf for a journey to some of the neglected countries in the east of Europe? I propose leaving England on the 27th inst. to visit Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Turkey, Armenia, and South Russia, to preach the Gospel wherever opportunity offers, and to do whatsoever my hands find to do with my might. I shall be very grateful for the fellowship in prayer of those who tarry at home by the stuff (1 Sam. xxx. 24). I also hope to visit some of the Armenian relief centres and orphanages."

Notices.

A correspondent would like to know the author of the hymn beginning:—

Hark! eternal praise ascending,
Round the throne the concert stands,
Thousand, thousand saints attending,
Palms of triumph deck their hands.

Letters to the Editor.

Municipal Luxury.

Sir,—The attention of ratepayers should be given to the proposal of the County Council to set up on the Council's own account a "Bacteriological Laboratory." It would be interesting to know who fathers the proposal, and how far the research for endowment is responsible for this suggestion of the "endowment of research." A new laboratory means heavier rates; it also means lucrative posts for learned professors.

There are already in London a quite sufficient number of laboratories wherein members of the animal kingdom (the cat, the dog, &c.) are painfully experimented upon and inoculated with all manner of diseases from appropriate bacteria.

Thousands of the citizens of London are opposed to these practices. Will they not protest against the quite unreasonable squandering of ratepayers' money in the way now suggested by the L.C.C.?—

Your obedient servant, H. J. Monro.

"General Servant."

Dear Sir,—You ask in a recent Christian "Why is it that so few girls are qualified or willing to take the place of a general servant?" The answer is very simple. Because, in nine cases out of ten, "general servant" means "general slave." The mischief is usually done in a girl's first place. She is young, inexperienced, and often defenceless. The mistress drives and scolds her from morning till night. She works at least fourteen hours out of the twenty-four, and yet her work is never done. Consequently, after a year or two, which has had the double effect of turning her into a hopeless muddler and turning her for ever against service, she goes off to the factory or some other occupation, and a good servant (very likely) is lost to the community.

It will be a good day when mistresses and servants will alike have to exchange characters and references before a situation is entered upon.—

Yours truly, S. S. Butlin.

Temperance Notes.

The result of the Canadian plebiscite shows a total majority of 29,827 for prohibition. Quebec was the only province giving an adverse majority. Nova Scotia figures are especially interesting, showing a prohibition majority of 22,015 out of a total vote of 26,152.

At the quarterly meeting of the Leeds Methodist New Connexion Circuit a resolution was adopted affirming that it was not to the interest of the people of Leeds that anyone connected with the liquor traffic should have a seat upon the Watch Committee.

At an inquest recently held at Woking, on the body of a man who was run over and killed at the station, the coroner said that railway refreshment bars were nothing more than drinking saloons. They were intended for the use of bona fide travellers and not for station loafers to stay in and drink all the evening.

Preaching in Lincoln Cathedral recently, the Bishop of Glasgow (Rev. Dr. Harrison) said that more than forty years ago Scotchmen perceived that some of the greatest blessings of Sunday were frustrated by drinking, and got an Act passed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks on Sundays except to bona fide travellers. That Act proved a universal blessing. It had blessed the publican and his wife and family, and it had blessed the man of weak will. And if anyone to-day in Scotland were to propose that the Act should be repealed, he ventured to say that nowhere would he meet with support.

In connection with Rev. L. M. Isitt's Temperance Crusade, which commences on Sunday afternoon, October 23, at 3.30 p.m., in St. James's Hall, six local committees, numbering about four hundred members, have been organised, including representatives from many active temperance societies. The three concluding meetings in Exeter Hall (November 2, 3, and 4) promise to be remarkably attractive and enthusiastic. Those who wish to aid this metropolitan enterprise can communicate with the hon. secretary of the London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance, Broad Sanctuary Chambers, 20 Tothill-street, Westminster.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Among the most genuinely attractive serials for the young are the Boy's Own Paper and the Girl's Own Paper, published by the Religious Tract Society. The yearly volumes make splendid and handsome additions to the family library. They each contain over 800 pages of lively, instructive reading, and plenty of pictures of a first-class order. All the legitimate tastes of young people are catered for, and those who are not satisfied with the result must be hard to please. (8s. each.)

Among old friends an important place is occupied by The Quiver, the annual volume of which shows a great improvement upon those of previous years. Over a thousand pages and nine hundred illustrations; this is a splendid book. In addition to serials and many complete stories, there are instructive articles and sermon papers. A special feature is a series of sketches of great religious and social undertakings, including the works with which are associated such names as Dr. Barnardo, Miss Weston, the late George Müller, and Rev. W. Carlile. (7s. 6d. Cassells.)

Messrs. Partridge's Magazines.—These choice serials come to us clothed in perennial beauty and freshness. Early in the field, they have fully retained their high tone as to reading matter and artistic excellence. We have often expressed our high sense of their value in the ministry of social and family refreshment, and can but reiterate this opinion. The volumes are the "Friendly Visitor," "Family Friend," "Children's Friend," "Infants' Magazine" (2s. 6d. each, cloth, gilt), "British Workman" (1s. 6d.), and "Band of Hope Review" (1s.). Each volume has an appropriate pictorial frontispiece.

FOR TEACHERS AND LEARNERS.

Recent years have witnessed a good provision for the preparation needs of Christian workers. A notable addition to the worthy list has recently been made by Rev. R. A. Torrey, superintendent of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, with the title What the Bible Teaches: A Thorough and Comprehensive Study of all the Bible has to say concerning the Great Doctrines of which it Treats. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) It is fitting that such a book should come from such a source; it is gratifying, on examination, to find in its pages a full justification of the claim of the title. In a word, the work is a systematic exposition of Scripture, intended specially for the use of teachers and preachers.

Opening with "What the Bible teaches about God," the book passes on to set forth the teaching regarding Christ, the Holy Spirit, Man, Angels, and Satan. Everything fundamental in the entire range of Scripture is classified under these primary headings. Here we have, without the terms, theology, Christology, anthropology, soteriology, also teaching on justification, sanctification, present standing and future destiny. Mr. Torrey tells us that the book represents years of study. He remarks:—"Its contents have been tested again and again in the class room—in classes composed, in some instances, of thirty-six denominations. However, it is not supposed for a moment that it exhausts all the Bible has to say on the topics treated, much less that it takes up and exhausts every topic dealt with in the Bible. The Bible is the one inexhaustible book. This work is simply an attempt at a careful, unbiased, systematic, thorough-going, inductive study and statement of Bible truth."

Mr. Torrey's method is to give the proof texts in full, and to follow them up with propositions which may serve as ready-made points for addresses and Bible-readings. Occasional notes and explanations add to the value of the work, which is the outcome of a thorough knowledge of Scripture, and is calculated to promote such knowledge in those who use it. The author has had in view the provision of a class book in Bible teaching, but his work should not be overlooked by any who need help in a careful and thorough course of study of the main doctrines of Holy Scripture.

The Pathway to Pentecost (1s. Reed & Co., 64, Stanley-street, Liverpool) is a helpful spiritual book by Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, emphasising, among other points, the danger of laying stress on outward signs, while neglecting the need of the inward grace.

An interesting book for prize purposes is Master Martin (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), a tale of the adventures of a little boy baronet who is stolen by gipsies. The illustrations, by Mr. Lance, are far above the average, and the half-tone reproductions of admirable workmanship.

An interesting book relating experiences of revival work amongst Salvationists and Methodists is The Story of my Life (post free 11d., of the author, Miss Rosa Woollard, care of Rev. G. W. Hancock, Alfreton), which gives some account of the everyday experiences of a lady Salvation Army officer and evangelist.

A highly useful book is A Dictionary of Employments Open to Women. (1s. 6d. Women's Institute, 15, Grosvenor-crescent, Hyde Park.) The information supplied has evidently been collated from reliable sources. It gives details of every profession or trade open to women, specifying the means of training and of obtaining work, rates of payment, etc., and is, indeed, a model book of reference.

Rev. George P. McKay, minister of Devonshire-square Church, Stoke Newington, writes on life and death, salvation and judgment, in Immortality on God's Terms: Endless Life in Christ the Lord. (1s. H. R. Allenson.) The title plainly indicates the Conditionalist standpoint. The book is expository as well as controversial; deeply solemn questions being considered with befitting reverence.

Mr. Robert P. C. Corfe is continuing his protest against the ill-treatment of Divine revelation in the house of those who profess to be its friends. In vol. ii. of Official Attacks on Christianity he examines the utterances of Church dignitaries and professors, religious editors and clergymen, as well as others who should stand by religious truth. He does well to be vigilant, and we trust many will read his book and be actuated by a like jealousy. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's booklets are the medium whereby one warm heart addresses others. Last year "A Carillon of Bells" rang out the old truths of free grace and dying love; this year we have A Cluster of Camphire; or Words of Cheer and Comfort for Sick and Sorrowful Souls. (1s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) A right rich cluster it is. Let those who sympathise with the sick and sorrowful see that these words reach them. The booklet may fittingly accompany greetings to friends at any season of the year.

Dr. George Fleming, the well-known authority on veterinary surgery, has reissued, after careful revision, with the title The Wanton Mutilation of Animals, an article which he contributed to The Nineteenth Century a few years ago. He deals especially with the ear-dropping of dogs and the mutilation of horses at the ears and the tail. Handsome plates accompany the article, greatly assisting the intelligent interest of the reader. It is to be hoped that this publication, issued by desire of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, will do much to terminate a cruel and disgraceful abuse of "our dumb companions." (1s. 6d. George Bell & Sons.)

Social and Political Economy (3s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) is a series of incisive and pointedly written essays by Mr. Thomas Judge, some appearing for the first time, and the remainder being reprinted from The Morning Post. Dealing with the subject of workmen's dwellings, Mr. Judge gives startling facts as to the excessive rents paid for bad accommodation by "thousands of toilers whose average incomes do not exceed twenty shillings a week." The interference of Parliament is advocated, with a view to the creation of a system by which parish councils, or a specially constituted body, should undertake the responsibility of providing workmen's dwellings according to the local need, the necessary capital being raised by loan.

Anything on missions by our venerable friend Rev. E. Storrow is sure of attentive consideration. For many years he laboured in Calcutta, and had special facilities for the study of the condition of Indian women; and his deep interest in everything affecting the country and its people has led him to follow during the years of retirement the progress of the forces which he witnessed in motion a generation or so ago. Mr. Storrow's book Our Indian Sisters (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society) is not only a strong appeal for renewed interest in the female population of our great Eastern Dependency, but it is a repository of information on their life conditions. He is historical as well as descriptive, and many will read for the first time the facts he gives as to the social standing and experiences of women, not only as found in daily life but as set forth in modern Indian literature. "Woman as Seen in Ancient History" is a useful chapter, as also is "Woman in the Code of Manu." The sorrows of our Indian sisters cry aloud for Christian sympathy and Gospel light, and our author hopes that his book may promote an intelligent knowledge of the subject, and aid the cause of missions which has already done so much to set the captives free.

The Golden Text Calendar for 1899 is in the worthy succession of publications which we have used for years. The block is easily manipulated, and the date stands out plainly with a selection from Holy Scripture beneath. (1s. Alfred Holness.)

Preaching at the opening of the new church of SS. Simon and Jude, North Meols, the Bishop of Liverpool said that, no matter who the man was who took on himself authority to forgive sins, he was invading the office of Jesus Christ, and doing that which was an insult to our Lord.

The Bishop of Durham, in dedicating the "Durham No. 2" Church Army Van at the Cathedral last week, referred to the value of this migratory provision of a chapel for teaching. In many parishes in Durham there were three, four, five, and more centres of population, or small hamlets, which it was impossible for the clergy to minister to effectually.

The work of the Church Army in Oxford is showing signs of increasing vitality. Stirring services have been held during the last week both at St. Ebbe's and at the Labour Home, Capt. Turner, from Cambridge, assisting among others. There is now a scheme to enlarge the work of the Labour Home by attaching a lodging-house for those men who have passed through the Home and obtained situations.

The Bishop of Worcester, in his charge at St. Martin's Church, Birmingham, said when they were told that the Mass was the same thing as Holy Communion in the Church of England, and when most barefaced forms of worship of the Virgin Mary were practised, and masses for the dead offered, he could only say such introductions and unauthorised services were not in accordance with the Church of England.

A special mission has been held in Durham gaol, with the co-operation of Captain Frith, the governor. Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, was the mission preacher, and during the eight days' services the interest shown was remarkable. At St. Denys parish church, the rector (Rev. J. Glynn Childs) recently remarked that he had the honour of being the oldest clergyman in Cornwall, and the oldest man in the parish. He had been engaged in the Lord's ministry for sixty-five years, and rector of St. Denys for forty-six years. During his ministry at St. Denys he had baptised 1651 persons, married 271, and interred 1189. Guest said that never in the history of the world had there been seen such a spectacle as the practical return of the Church of England, in this land of light and Bibles, to the exploded superstitions of Rome.

The Governor of H.M. Convict Prison, Portland, reporting on the eight-days' mission in the Prison just concluded by the Church Army Prison Gate-keeper, says: "I desire to thank you very heartily for having placed [illegible] services at our disposal. I feel hopeful that [illegible] will follow his efforts." The Chaplain of the Prison reports: "Several of the men have already expressed their great appreciation of the Mission. I am particularly glad that the Church Army is so ready to assist men on their discharge from prison, because at that time, even with the most earnest, their position is specially trying and difficult."

Clothing Wanted.—May I venture to make an appeal in your widely circulated paper on behalf of the Clapham Maternity Hospital, under Women Physicians, Jeffreys-road London, S.W. Many ladies organising working parties for the coming winter, or who are interested in giving work to poor needlewomen, might be willing to help us with gifts of clothing if they knew of our need. We require a constant supply of the following articles for the use of patients in the hospital: Nightgowns and dressing-gowns for mothers, night-gowns, long flannels, and shirts for babies. Patterns will be gladly supplied if application is made to the matron of the hospital. We should also be thankful for old, disused, or outgrown baby linen, and for old sheets and white rag of any kind.—MARION RITCHIE, Hon. Secretary.

Notes and Comments.

☞ As our circle of readers widens it becomes more than ever necessary for articles to be brief and the records of work concise. We shall be compelled more rigidly to omit what is local or temporary, although our kind correspondents may consider that we have thereby eliminated something of the vigour, variety, and value of their contributions. On the other hand, we remind them that our circulation is world-wide and general, so that matters of strictly local import are less suitable for our columns than for a local journal. To write under conditions which compel the expression of thought in as few words as possible, consistently with clear transmission of meaning, is in itself a much-needed and valuable education in these days of speed and brevity.

If words, like river torrents, overflow,
'Tis hard to find the grain of thought below.
If thou would'st have the heart and spirit stirred,
Let thought be jewelled on each chosen word.

Intelligence of forward evangelistic work in any of the churches is always valued.

The Brighton Conference of the Evangelical Alliance promises to be of exceptional interest this year. In view of the progress of sacerdotalism in the Established Church, particular emphasis will be laid upon the need for closer union between Evangelical Christians of all denominations. We hear that intimation has been sent to all the speakers at the forthcoming congress that the Council have called a meeting of Evangelical ministers of the Church of England and leaders of the Free Churches to confer upon holding a great demonstration in London, and others in the provinces, to assert Evangelical principles. The present conflict is not so much between Protestantism and Romanism as between Evangelicalism and Sacerdotalism. In this proposed movement of the Evangelical Alliance we very cordially concur.

Here is a basis of union on which Evangelicals in the Establishment and in the Free Churches may cordially co-operate in asserting abhorrence of the unscriptural assumptions of Anglican priests. The very foundations of New Testament truths—the "simplicity as it is in Christ"—are being deliberately attacked. We believe that on this Evangelical foundation a great movement may be organised that will express the opinions of a very large section of earnest Christian people in the country. There is little hope that the bishops will adopt any radical measures to purge the Church of prevailing heresies. Evangelical Christians should, therefore, show a united and firm front.

The confusion of counsels that now reigns in the Anglican Church is commencing to invade the episcopal bench, which is beginning to break the oracular silence which has so far marked its occupants on the question of ritual, etc. Some of them speak with veiled but real enthusiasm in favour of "confession." The Bishop of Worcester, however, has protested against the custom, saying that it would be difficult to produce a single passage, either from the Old or New Testament, in which confession to a priest was implied, much less expressed. Many customs might, he continued, be harmless, and even salutary ; but it was nothing less than blasphemous presumption for any Church to impose a custom of tradition as necessary to salvation, or even ordinarily necessary. When we consider the widespread evils associated in all ages with the unscriptural practice of auricular confession, even this modified attitude towards it is not sufficiently outspoken

The Primate's charge furnishes a useful test of the real attitude of the dominant party in the Church of England towards the points at issue between that Church and that of Rome. Judging by a remarkably able but enigmatic leader in The Church Times, it is not difficult to draw the conclusion that in so far as the Archbishop favoured Romanist interpretations of the Eucharist, confession, etc., his charge is thankfully accepted ; and in so far as he differs from the Romish doctrines, there is a veiled but obstinate attitude of reserve towards it. It would seem as though the High Church party favoured everything Romanist except the authority of the Pope. It would be well for the nation to awake to the fact that we can have all the evils of priestcraft thrust upon us without submitting to the Papal yoke.

We need a revival of the preaching of foundation truths. There are many congregations in whose ears they are not often sounded. Yet a new generation is continually growing up, who need the elementary truth as much as we did. We have a grave responsibility to utter the sayings of old, which we have heard and known and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works that He hath done. We owe it to our fathers to pass on to our children (who are their children) the testimony they have borne to us of the wonderful works of God (Ps. lxxviii.; Acts ii.).

When preachers used to be asked to theatre services they were sometimes requested to avoid the Prodigal Son—he was too worn a subject. Some good men avoided the parable because they saw no atonement in it, and because the Unitarians therefore claimed it. Others, in order to keep clear of a false view of the Fatherhood of God, confined the parable to backsliders. But the Spirit reveals death and resurrection in the oft-enacted story, and would show the preacher and his hearers that though, as a child of God in Adam, the prodigal was dead because of sin, he is alive again in the last Adam, a child of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

Duncan Matheson, a man of God of the almost past generation, used to say we need preachers with Eternity stamped upon their eyeballs, proclaiming a Gospel that grips the conscience, promising eternal life to the believer, and denouncing eternal punishment on those who obey not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness.

At the young people's meeting in connection with the Congregational Union Assembly at Halifax some golden pieces of advice were given to those who are on the threshold of manhood. One of these was by Dr. Maclure who urged them not to try to shirk the difficulties of life, but to bend their energies towards overcoming them. Too much is being done to make the path of learning and accomplishment easy to the young. The speaker poured well-merited contempt on such pretentions as "French in three months," "Painting in twelve lessons." He urged parents to acclimatise their children's minds to grapple with things they do not like. The easy, self-indulgent methods of many people in their family training, as though there were something cruel in making young folk attempt hard things, is the ruin of many who might, under proper influence, develop the "wrestling thews that throw the world," and rise into the Christian temper which "endures hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ."

There is no sounder suggestion that could be given to young men than that urged on them by another speaker—to think out their religious principles. We all tend to build our opinions out of other men's thinking, and so to have only a second-hand creed and a second-rate faith. The great Reformation was fought and won by men who had thought out the problem of religious faith on their knees, and who were able on that account to stand against the superstitions and prejudices of a continent unshaken—and to conquer. Now that the battle has to be fought over again, it is of the utmost importance that the young manhood of the nation should be able to enter into the issues at stake, and so range themselves, with intelligence as well as enthusiasm, on the side of the truth. Nothing but first-hand, clear-eyed conviction will stem the current of priestcraft that is surging rapidly through the land. We shall need men of the stamp of Luther, Penry, Cromwell and his Ironsides to quell this resurgent foe.

It is no accident that, in the economy of nature, "the season of mists and mellow fruitfulness" is also the season of decay. The falling leaf follows on the ripe fruit. We are face to face here with a solemn fact. Ripeness in nature means, among other things, that the fruit has reached its final form. Till then much can be done to modify and better it ; after a certain point has been reached we can only take it as it is, no further improvement is possible. Is there not something like this in character? Up to a certain point there is almost infinite capacity for change and improvement. But a time comes when character takes its form ; it tends to finality. When this happens only the All-Seeing can tell. The fact that so it is should quicken in all of us the desire to take advantage of the down-falling dews of grace, the quickening power from above, the urgent call of God to repentance and renewal. Spiritual opportunity is not endless. If neglected, at last comes the cry, "The end is come on my people Israel; I will not pass by them any more" (Amos viii. 1, 2).

It is this tendency towards finality in character which furnishes the most formidable argument against the theory of restoration of the wicked in the world to come. All that we know of human nature in its fallen and rebellious condition tends to the conclusion that a second chance would not be accepted any more than the first had been; indeed, the probability would be that the rejection of the first would make the acceptance of the second infinitely more difficult. With such facts staring us in the face, the responsibility of those who in the full light of the Gospel continue unrepentant is incalculable. Nor is the task of those whose business it is to warn and win sinners lessened by them. To hold out hopes that may be futile of future chances by repentance while present chances are wilfully neglected, is to incur a responsibility that no one should lightly face. The commission is to preach: "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."

False ideas of the Church of Christ have their origin and outcome alike in contracted views of Scripture teaching. True ideas of the Church cannot exist alongside Romish sacerdotalism or theories of Apostolic succession. The New Testament Church was not made up of Apostles, but included the entire body of Christ's disciples. Privilege and obligation were, and still are, common to all. This fact being understood, it is as reasonable as it is easy to read Matt. xxviii. 16, 17, in the light of 1 Cor. xv. 6, and to conclude that the eleven disciples formed part of the larger body of five hundred to whom our Lord gave the great commission to "go and make disciples of all the nations." The connection of these passages is admirably shown by Dr. Anderson in a booklet, "The Closing Verses of the First Gospel" (1d. Marshall Bros.).

Lord Derby said a few days ago that he wished the head-lines of newspapers had never been invented; he might have added the display bill also; for, in the present difficulty with France, it is too often covered with direct provocations to war. It is the cheap evening papers, so largely read by the working classes, that are the chief offenders. It is to be hoped that they will not succeed in making bad blood and hot heads. Thoughtful and responsible men assure us that there is no ground for any serious misunderstanding, nothing that cannot be removed by explanation and forbearance. This is pre-eminently a time when rash writing and speaking should be avoided, and when everything in our power should be done to promote peace and good will. The Paris Municipal Council has set an excellent example by passing a resolution expressing the hope that the Government will "put forth all its efforts with a view to obviating a serious conflict with England relative to the Fashoda affair."

The Daily News is almost alone among the great daily newspapers in its uncompromising advocacy of the peace policy of the Czar. Some leading organs among both parties are too much absorbed by the Fashoda crisis to give anything like due prominence to this noble eirenicon, and seem to think that the rival claims of England and France to an obscure village on the Nile are of greater importance than the securing of the peace of the world by mutual consent among the nations. The French papers, on the other hand, in their anxiety to turn public attention from the exposure of the Dreyfus conspiracy in the Army, are full of bellicose utterances against this country. It is of the utmost importance that the followers of the Prince of Peace all through our land should see that the question does not go by default.

It is a suggestive fact that while the tremendous slaughter of the Dervishes in the Soudan gives a feeling of satisfaction to many minds as a doom that they deserved, the slaughter of the Canaanites by Israel is denounced as unjustifiable cruelty. Thousands clamoured for war with Turkey as a punishment for the Armenian massacres, and would be glad to have it now, who altogether condemn the wars of Moses and Joshua. Yet we are supposed to live in a much more humane age. The fact seems to be that we apply our humanitarianism quite readily and confidently to the conduct of men who lived four thousand years ago, but decline to apply it to ourselves. And is there not manifest in all this a very obvious bias against the Old Testament, a determination to condemn it on any ground that can be found—whether good or bad does not matter?

Certain passages in Dr. Busch's "Life of Bismarck" throw a flood of light on the inner experience of that great, but curiously mixed, personality. He was conscious of having been the cause of three wars, in which 80,000 men were slain, of "having made great numbers unhappy, mourning for brothers, fathers, husbands, and friends," and though he dared to say, "I have settled that with God, however," he was forced to add, as his confession, "but I have had little or no pleasure for all that I have done, while, on the other hand, I have had a great deal of wrong, anxiety, and trouble." At this time he was at the zenith of his power and popularity. How different from the experience of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, who after a career of unexampled suffering, privation, and hardship was able to say out of his prison and in view of the headsman's block, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

The extraordinary pilgrimage of the Emperor of Germany, through Constantinople to Jerusalem, fills the world with pained astonishment. He has been received by the Sultan with fulsome flattery, and the account of the festivities in the Ottoman Court has altogether turned the heads of German journalists. The spectacle of a Christian Emperor fraternising with the murderer of 100,000 Armenians, whose only crime was their Christian faith, fills us with despair, and sheds a sinister light on the mystery of failure that made the European Concert, of which the Emperor was a prominent member, a byword and a reproach. The Emperor, of course, is fascinated with the novelty of the situation, and is, no doubt, doing the best he can to gain commercial and political power for his country. It is also romantic to read:—

> Politically the most significant feature of the festivities is the hoisting upon all the vessels of the German naval ensign, the Cross side by side with the Crescent. Since the conquest of Constantinople by the Turks, no flag bearing the Cross has ever been officially hoisted there. They were run up yesterday by special command of the Sultan, shortly after the address delivered by the Kaiser at the Embassy.

It is not easy to believe that it will do anything for the religious uplifting of the East. If, however, the Kaiser can open any wider the door of religious liberty in the oppressed East he will do a good work.

Lady Wimborne describes in The Nineteenth Century the religious practices in many schools used by members of the upper and middle classes. At one school fasting in Lent and Advent, besides on all Wednesdays and Fridays, was compulsory; attendance at High Celebration as an act of worship was the rule; the pupils were taken to as many as five services on a Sunday to various churches where extreme ritual was practised. Confession is "strongly advised," and the strength of the advice must be practically equivalent to compulsion, for the teacher who gives the information about the school was herself obliged to leave owing to her refusal to confess. In the results many of the girls will develop a dislike for all religion, and others will become formalists; perhaps they will generally find their way into the Church of Rome.

Mr. Richard Heath, who writes in The Contemporary on "The Church and Social Democracy in Germany," comes to the conclusion that the mediating power of the Church, or rather of Christianity, no longer existing, the struggle between the Throne and the people will proceed till one or the other succumbs, > and then will arise a tyranny which will either turn German Protestantism into a worse Cæsar-worship than under the Roman Empire, or one that will crush out German Protestantism altogether.

The remedy he believes to lie with the Evangelical clergy of Germany, who, he thinks, ought at once to resign their connection with the State, and live among the people, sharing in their work and in their poverty. But the question arises, Does any party ever secure such a complete and enduring victory as Mr. Heath believes will fall to either side in Germany? Surely some tertium quid is possible.

If temperance reformers had reason to be alarmed when great brewery firms were formed into limited liability companies, they have additional cause for fear in the transforming of provision stores into companies which acquire the right to trade in alcoholic drinks. The change may be a great injustice to some shareholders who bought shares when the company dealt only in provisions; for they are placed in this position—either they must remain and become part owners of a business they conscientiously disapprove of, or they must sell to someone else who shall take their place. Either way it is not comfortable for the conscience. Prior to investing in a concern, much more than the dividend needs to be thought of if Christians are to keep a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

The speech of Lord Cadogan at Belfast, in which he advocated the establishment of a Roman Catholic University for Ireland, has met with strong opposition, though it is evident that he had some sympathisers. He knows that Ulster will have to be "educated" up to the point, but he evidently thinks that that is not impossible. And until that is done Ireland will have a difficulty and a grievance. Dr. Kane, who had risen and left the hall by way of protest when his lordship got on to this tender subject, is of this opinion:—

> The people of Ulster will never be educated in any such direction as the Viceroy suggested on the subject, as it is quite impossible that they should ever acquiesce, except unwillingly, in giving to the Roman Catholics of Ireland a million of public money for a purpose for which they do not presume to ask a single penny for themselves. The suggestion of his Excellency that we were influenced by intolerance is not only unjust but an absolutely cruel suggestion, because what intolerance can there be in refusing on the verge of the twentieth century to approve of a public grant of a million of money for the setting up of a mediæval Ultramontane institution?

There will not be an end to difficulties and grievances of a religious kind in Ireland so long as the Pope is denied the free use of the public purse.

An Open Letter—

To the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY
Upon THE LORD'S SUPPER.

MY LORD PRIMATE,—In your Grace's first visitation charge at Canterbury, as reported in the newspapers, the Holy Eucharist being the subject, several expressions occur which suggest the following remarks. I am partly relieved of the sense of presumption in thus venturing to examine the terms of the charge, by your Grace's expression, on the following day, of willingness to hear the opinions of the laity on these profound questions, and by the reflection that my contribution will be of the nature of an addition to, rather than of any criticism of, the views expressed.

Presenting to your audience the two prevalent opinions as to the meaning of the ordinance, your Grace is reported to have said:—

Some held that no special gift was bestowed by this Sacrament, but that the value of it mainly, if not entirely, resided in the effect produced on the soul of the receiver by the commemoration of that wonderful act of love, our Lord's sacrifice of Himself on the cross.

Again—

On the other hand, there were, and always have been, those who believed that the Sacrament conveyed to the receiver a special mysterious gift, uniting us to Christ in a special manner and degree.

Now, although it seems reasonable to believe that our Lord, in selecting a supper of bread and wine as the means or method of "commemoration," intended to convey that as the material emblems are for the refreshment and strength of the body, so the spiritual truths typically presented in them would be for the blessing and enriching of the soul; yet it is impossible to overlook the fact that in no single unquestionable reference in Scripture to the Lord's Supper

IS ANY SUCH DOCTRINE TAUGHT.

In so saying, the sixth chap. of St. John's Gospel is not forgotten. For although to many devout and exact students of the Holy Word this chapter contains no such allusion, it does seem improbable, if the Eucharistic Supper was entirely excluded from view, that the Apostle, when recording, so many years after its institution, the Lord's words as to eating the bread from heaven and drinking his blood, should have added no warning as to their misinterpretation.

For this reason, as well as others, it may be safely taken that in instituting the service of commemoration our Lord did take into account the blessing that would accrue to the worshippers, "the gift"—to employ your Grace's oft repeated term—which the communicant should receive in the Sacrament; a blessing and a gift which no one who partakes of it in a true and spiritual manner can have failed to experience.

Nevertheless, it is not in any such sense that our Lord and the Apostle Paul presented the object and intention of the sacred institution.

Let me refer your Grace to the actual language of Scripture. In Matt. xxvi. the remission of sins is not connected with the drinking of the cup, but with the shedding of his blood, which the cup was to commemorate, and for which the communicant was in the drinking of the cup to give thanks. This is further confirmed by the promise that follows, that He who needed no remission of sins would drink that fruit of the vine with them in the Kingdom of God when they would no longer need remission of sins. The giving of thanks at the opening, this promise at the time, and the singing of the hymn at the close, exactly convey the true character of the service as a service of praise. That is, if we employ the figure of Jacob's ladder, the blessing and the gift were to be borne, not by the descending, but by the ascending angels, as the offering of grateful hearts to the God of our salvation.

Turning to the Gospel of St. Luke, the purpose of the service is plainly recorded. "This do," said the Lord, "in remembrance of Me." It was to be an act of loving remembrance of Christ Himself, in his absence from his beloved disciples. The breaking and eating of the bread were to say in a figure: "We remember thy body broken for our sakes, by which our sins have been remitted. The pouring out and drinking of the cup were to say: "We remember and give thanks for thy precious blood, by which Thou hast cleansed us from all our sin." It was to be a service of

WORSHIP PURE AND SIMPLE.

Passing on to 1 Cor. x. 16, we read: "The cup of blessing which we bless." This is conclusive. There is blessing in the Sacrament, but it is we who give it. It is the overflowing of full hearts, the uprising of the sweet incense of praise, the waving of hands filled with the fulness of Christ upward, heavenward, Godward (Exodus xxix. 24). The congregation blesses—that is, gives thanks for the cup. Upon this point may I quote a former Dean of Canterbury (Alford). He says: "Observe the first person plural is the same throughout; the blessing of the cup, the breaking of the bread, the acts of consecration, were not the acts of the minister, as by any authority peculiar to himself, but only as the representative of the whole Christian congregation. The figment of sacerdotal consecration of the elements by transmitted power is as alien from the apostolic writings as it is from the spirit of the Gospel." (Note—The italics are the Dean's.) He also bears out what has been suggested above, by saying that is not the cup "which brings a blessing," but the cup "over which we speak a blessing."

Lastly, the record of St. Paul as to this institution in 1 Cor. xi., corresponding in the main with that of St. Luke, adds the important words, "Ye do proclaim the Lord's death till He come." There is no hint in this of an assembly of suppliants coming for gifts. It is rather a pæan of victory, a celebration of salvation, a personal honour offered to the Church's Champion on the field of a battle that has been won by his valour unto death. It is also a service of hope; a faithful people, waiting for their coming Lord, bear Him witness that his triumph in visible glory and power is their daily expectation.

Thus it seems to me that your Grace might fairly have enumerated a third class of Christians, who, differing from both those described at the opening of the charge, view the Lord's Supper from the standpoint of an accomplished salvation, and who, enjoying fully that forgiveness of sins in which the "Apostles' Creed" expresses their belief, come together at the Lord's table to offer the homage of loyal and loving hearts to their Lord and Saviour, to bear witness that He lives for ever in their remembrance and affection, and to give thanks, as oft as they drink the cup, for the shedding of his precious blood as shadowed in that fruit of the vine.

But may I venture to repeat that such an attitude as this by no means excludes the thought of blessing received in the sacrament. When Mary of Bethany brought forth her very precious ointment and with it anointed the feet of the Lord and wiped them with the hairs of her head, there was no thought of doing herself a service—her eye was single to the honour of her adorable Master; and yet she bore away unconsciously upon her head all the sweetness of her offering, so that the house where they were sitting was filled with the fragrance of her ointment.

So is it, without doubt, in the case of all true worshippers. Forgetful for the time being of all needs, all pains, all fears and sorrows of their own, fixed in heart on Him, captivated by his love, ravished by his beauty, dazzled by his glory, they burn their sweet incense of praise to his name with undivided purpose of devotion; and yet when the hour of their transcendent joy is past, and the eye turns from the heavenly vision to itself again, it is the testimony of all that nought on earth can compare with such a service as a means of enriching, of blessing, of peace, love, comfort, strength, and joy to the soul. For have they not eaten of that bread, and drunk of that wine, and thus, in a figure, become receivers of his blessing even while they gave Him theirs?

I have ventured thus briefly and imperfectly to lay before your Grace, and those who may read this Open Letter, a view of the Supper of the Lord which, if accepted more widely than it is, might go far of present controversies, by diverting the minds of men from the secondary and indirect purposes of the Lord's Supper to its first intention and raison d'être.

Is it not painfully manifest that, to a very large extent, in the reformed Churches generally, the idea of worship has given place to that of religious services as means of grace to the suppliant? No doubt this may be truly interpreted as the natural consequence of prevalent doubt in the revelation itself, and, in the case of those who accept it, of prevalent uncertainty as to their own proper participation in the salvation, the forgiveness therein proclaimed. For is it not a necessary condition of worship, of a Eucharist, that the communicant should have a firm conviction, based on faith in the truths of the Gospel, that his own soul is in the favour and grace of God? that his own sins have been remitted? The want of this seems to me to be the cause to which the various theories as to the Lord's Supper mentioned by your Grace may be traced. Men want to use it for salvation, instead of as a vehicle of praise for salvation and to the Saviour.

I am, with great respect,

Your Grace's humble servant,

GEO. F. TRENCH.

Unfailing.

Look to the hills, nor fear to face,
O stream, the channel of thy life,
For fed, sustained by heavenly grace,
Thy way shall hold through peace and strife.

The burning plain, the dark ravine,
May try thy faith, and tear thy breast;
Our life has many a changing scene
Before we enter into rest.

But dew and cloud shall never fail
To bless thy passage to the sea,
And many a thirsty soul will hail
The tide of grace which flows through thee.

So live united to thy source,
And flow down to the haunts of men,
There spend, but still increase thy force,
Until thou turn to God again.

Seeing Light in God's Light.

By Rev. F. C. SPURR.

(Concluded.)

HAVING established the principle that we can only truly comprehend ourselves and the most serious things of life in the light of God, it remains for us, as honourable people, to frankly expose our natures and all our enterprises to this searching ordeal—for ordeal it is almost sure to be. To admit the correctness of the principle is not sufficient; if we would see light we must definitely place ourselves in the light of God. Avoiding generalities, let us deal briefly, and in outline only, with four specific things—Sin, Life, Duty, and Destiny.

I.—Sin.

There can hardly be a greater contrast in the wide world than that which exists between the Christian and the secular conceptions of sin. The one treats sin in the most serious way, enjoining upon men deep penitence and reparation both towards God and man. The other treats it lightly, superficially, scornfully, and sometimes even humorously. Let anyone compare the "confessions" of St. Augustine with the "confessions" of Voltaire or Rousseau; or again, John Bunyan's "revelations" with the unparalleled rubbish of the much-vaunted "poet" Walt Whitman. Throughout the works of the first there runs an unmistakable thread of penitential feeling, which discloses itself in any subject which may be under discussion. In the works of the others—the latter especially—there is an underlying contempt for what others call penitence. Whitman so far degraded himself as to say that the beasts when their day was over did not whine about their sins "as men do" before they retire. A man must have fallen very low when he can put men and beasts upon a common level.

Vast numbers of people, however, practically hold these views, although they express them in more polite terms than those just quoted. The Christian is regarded as a person who is somewhat "mopish," and who holds extreme views about certain subjects. The one thing which men out of Christ have never grasped is the which is that he has seen light in God's light.

Men who live near to God are always penitents—they must be, for they have seen sin as it really is. Ordinarily men regard sin under false lights, and so come to think lightly of it. Gambling, argues the man of the world, offers an occasion for self-enrichment, it affords some amount of excitement, and "everybody" practises it, therefore it is all right. But when gambling is seen in God's light, it must either be destroyed, or the man who persists in it after his illumination will destroy himself. For the eighth and tenth commandments fling the light of God upon this vice, and declare all illegitimate getting of another's goods to be stealing.

The lustful man places his passion in the light of his own desires and in the false light of a supposed necessity, and then proceeds to do according to his will. He cannot understand the restraint which a penitent places upon himself—and he often doubts its reality. But in the light of God the body appears as a temple of the Holy Ghost which must not be defiled, and the persons of others also are seen to be the property of the Creator—and must therefore be respected.

And every other sin must be subjected to the same test. It must be brought into the light of God if we would know its real nature. Under false lights sin always appears as a mere trifle to which little attention need be given—in the light of God it appears as that "abominable thing which He hates."

II.—Life.

This also can only be understood as it is revealed in God's light. The fierce scientific discussions which have raged from Mr. Darwin's days to our own about human life have practically bequeathed to us the doctrine of the "survival of the fittest" as the final word of non-Christian science. This life of ours, according to our soi-disant leaders, is a terrific battle between the competent and the incompetent, the strong and the weak, the man and the animal, and the fittest only can survive—the unfit must disappear. There is no Providence, no provision made for making the unfit fit, nothing but the merciless movement of relentless laws which grind and crush. The effect of this doctrine is, naturally, fatalism. We are merely victims of chance, we must take what comes, it is of no use to resist.

There are tens of thousands of men and women in our land to-day who have no further light upon life than that. God forgive the money-grubbing novelists who have popularised these barbarous doctrines. But

LIFE IN GOD'S LIGHT IS WONDERFUL.

The nature of the individual man is made clear to us. He is no mere development from lower forms of life. He has a connection with lower forms—nothing is better demonstrated than this; but it is his glory that he is also specially and directly connected with his God. God has breathed into his nostrils and made him a living soul. God has made him after his own image.

The value of the individual is made clear to us. We are not loved and guarded in companies, but as individuals. God cares for each separate soul. "There is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." The best that modern socialism can do for us is to promise a future for the race. But the race is made up of individuals, and if it is ever to be right they must be separately right.

Here is the glory of the Gospel, that it has a message for the individual. The non-Christian does not suspect this—does not believe it, for the reason that he has never seen men in their true light. In the light of God a soul's value is demonstrated. The possibilities of the individual are also opened up to us in God's light "through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Under the false lights of earth the fallen man must either remain where he has stumbled or do his best to recover, but there is no guarantee that he will recover. The Gospel, on the contrary, has a note which guarantees the perfect recovery of every disorganised life, upon the condition of unswerving faith in the Redeemer of Men. But this light we only see in the light of God.

If you would understand yourself, place your life in the light of God—apart from that all is darkness and confusion.

III.—Duty.

Duty, which is life in proper relationship, becomes luminous when viewed in God's light. No man can fully know or fully accomplish his "duty" until he sees light in God's light. For what is our "duty"? The sum total of our dues—our debts. And yet there are fewer things less understood than this, and fewer words used with a falser meaning than the word "duty." The late Justice Stephen wrote some time before his death: "Do your duty, and let speculation about God alone." Which is about as wise as saying: "Discharge all your dues, pay all your debts, but be careful to ignore the person to whom you are chiefly indebted." It is a contradiction in terms.

A man is bound to ask "To whom am I indebted?" and he will not settle the matter by seeking out his inferior creditors, satisfying them, and coolly

IGNORING HIS CHIEF CREDITOR.

If man is in debt to anyone surely he is chiefly in debt to his Creator, to whom he owes life, preservation, and love. But false lights play about him, and his "duty" is reduced to those human and personal relations which are economic, social, or pleasurable. A man has not done his duty when he has paid everybody twenty shillings in the pound, given his vote, educated his children, been true to his wife, and generally deported himself as a respectable member of society. Yet we continually hear men complacently telling us that they have "done their duty" when these things only have been accomplished.

How shall we see our duty? "In THY light shall we see light" here. And the light of God upon duty shows to us as its ideal the love of God with all the heart, soul, strength, and the mind, and the love of our neighbours as ourselves.

IV.—Destiny.

Upon our DESTINY, too, we need the Light of God if we are to be saved from the crude and desolating doctrines which abound on every hand. Outside the rim of that revealing light men carry their poor lanterns, and with something of pride point out to us what they have discovered.

One arrests himself at the tomb, and declares that beyond it there is nought but an abyss. Another tells us of Nirvâna, where every human wavelet shall be reabsorbed into the impersonal sea from which it was derived. Another teaches an almost endless series of reincarnations in which sin shall be atoned. And so must it ever be. Apart from the light of GOD, man is stupefied with the narcotic of materialism, or tormented with the dread of a vague "to be." But in his light we see light. The path from our cradle to the throne of God is well defined and glorious. We learn that we have come from God, and that we return to God; that our mortal life is but a passage; that death is the dawn of the abiding life; and that sufficient grace is offered to each man to enable him to fulfil his destiny and reach his goal. Light and immortality have come to light through the Gospel. Jesus Christ has taught the doctrine and walked before us in the way. If we follow Him we shall come at last to be with Him where He is. Such is the consoling truth of his Gospel.

To return to our starting-point. We cry for light; we must have light. Our choice is between the partial and false lights of men and the perfect light of God. Unhappy men if we choose the former; but happy we if our lives sun themselves in the latter.

Shipwrecked Mariners.—Vice-Admiral S. E. Adeane, chairman of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, 26, Suffolk-street, Pall-mall East, S.W., writes:—"The stormy season of the year, which has now commenced, accompanied by disastrous wrecks and loss of life, entails serious expenditure on this Society, both in providing for the wants of shipwrecked persons and in assisting the widows, orphans, etc., of the drowned. We expended over £19,000 in relief last year, and funds are now urgently required to enable us to continue our work of charity. Contributions will be gladly received and acknowledged from this office by the secretary, Mr. G. E. Maude."

The Study of the Types.*

THE GROUPING OF TYPES.

THERE are many helpful ways of grouping the types together. For example, we often find that those which differ in many respects have one detail in common; and when this is the case, we may assume that the teaching conveyed by that one point is the same in each case, and by linking all together it is emphasised and impressed upon us.

Thus in the Tabernacle and its service, and elsewhere, we again and again have the sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ typified by the crushing or beating of different substances. In the Tabernacle itself the gold for the mercy-seat and for the candlestick was not only pure gold, but beaten gold. The spices for the holy ointment, for the incense and the frankincense, must be crushed, for they would not otherwise give forth their fragrance; and the perfume which was thus made was to be beaten very small (Exod. xxx. 36). The oil with which the ointment was compounded, and the oil for the meal-offering, was beaten oil; and for the candlestick "pure oil olive beaten for the light." The corn for the meal-offering was beaten out of full ears; and the flour for the same offering, which speaks to us of the Lord Jesus Christ was fine flour, as also the flour for the shew-bread. There was no unevenness in Him. The Captain of our salvation was made "perfect through sufferings." In all his followers, even in those who are most like Him, there are many inequalities: they have some beautiful traits of character, but the very fact that these traits are so prominent suggests that they are probably lacking in some other characteristic. Our Lord was remarkable for no one attribute. He was perfect in all. He was like the fine flour, perfectly smooth and even; and the crushing and bruising served to prove this. In Isa. xxviii. 28 we read that "bread corn is bruised," and the manna needed to be ground in mills or beaten in a mortar. All these different pictures speak to us of the sufferings of our Lord throughout his lifetime.

OFFERING TO GOD A SPOTLESS LIFE,

We are told that Gethsemane means "olive press"; and it was not only on that last terrible night that He visited it, for we read that He "ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples." His and as we have this again and again brought before us in these types we learn something of the meaning of the words, "it pleased the Lord to bruise Him," and of Paul's desire "that I may know Him...and the fellowship of his sufferings."

It is also interesting to link together types which in themselves closely resemble one another, especially those which represent different aspects of Christ's life and work. For instance, He is often foreshadowed by bread or corn in various forms. We have already looked at the manna and the old corn, and the sheaf of the firstfruits, and have also mentioned the corn and the fine flour in the meal-offering. He was also typified by the unleavened bread that was eaten at the Feast of the Passover. There must be no leaven in anything which typified Christ; and for this reason it was forbidden to be offered in the meal-offering, for throughout the Word it always represents evil. In John xii. our Lord compares Himself to the corn of wheat, which, except it fall into the ground and die, abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. In the memorial Supper He brake the bread and said, "This is my body, which is broken for you."

In the Tabernacle we see Him in connection with Israel represented by twelve loaves; while it is said of the Church united to Christ, "We being many are one bread (or one loaf)." And lastly, in Revelation, the hidden manna is promised to the overcomers. These types, which are so similar, seem to cover the whole of our Lord's life, and even look back into the past eternity. The manna that fell round about the camp of Israel represents the incarnation of the Lord Jesus Christ. He Himself says: "My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven; for the bread of God is He which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world." But we also see from this passage that before He became manna for us for these types not only speak of the Lord Jesus Christ as the food for man, but tell us of Him on whom the Father's heart delighted to feed. This thought is prominent in the meal-offering, where a handful was burnt upon the altar representing God's portion, and the remainder given to the priests; telling us of the believer's fellowship with God concerning the person of their Lord.

HE WAS THE BREAD OF GOD;

In Psalm lxxviii. the description of the giving of the manna is very beautiful; for it tells how God had "commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven, and had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven. Man did eat angel's food," or as it is in the margin, "every one did eat the bread of the mighty." The manna before it fell to the earth was "the bread of God"—"the corn of heaven." The doors of heaven must be opened, and heaven must be emptied that earth might be filled. Thus we see that the manna speaks to us first of Christ from all eternity, and then of Christ in the flesh. The fine flour, as we have seen in the preceding group of types, tells us of his perfect life on earth, and of the suffering He underwent; the corn of wheat which falls into the ground and dies, that it may bring forth much fruit, clearly typifies Calvary; and so also does the broken bread, which reminds us of his body broken for us.

Meetings on Revival.

THE work in the Great American Tent, Bruce Grove, Tottenham, goes on with unabated interest. A growing impression exists among evangelists and aggressive Christian workers that there are indications of a widespread revival at hand. In the above tent, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Nov. 1, 2, and 3, special prayer and testimony meetings with reference to revival will be held.

SUBJECTS.—(1) Prayer, Private and Public; (2) the Use of the Word of God in Revival Work; (3) the Work of the Holy Spirit in Revivals.

Times of meeting: 11, 2.30, and 7. Many prominent ministers, evangelists, and workers have promised to take part. The tent accommodates 3000.

Shoreditch Tabernacle.—Rev. Wm. Cuff and the friends at this well-known East End centre of Christian work are rejoicing in the extinction of debt on the Tabernacle. They are to celebrate the event by a day of public thanksgiving on Monday next, October 31. Rev. R. Glover, D.D., will preach at the Tabernacle at 4 p.m. Tea will be provided at five, and a public meeting in the evening at seven will enable many friends from other parts of London to join in the happy occasion.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

November 6.

"HEZEKIAH'S GREAT PASSOVER."—2 Chron. xxx. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Yield yourselves unto the Lord, and enter into his sanctuary."—2 Chron. xxx. 8.

HEZEKIAH.

HIS name means "the strength of Jehovah." He was the son of Ahaz—a noble son of an ignoble sire. He was considered to be one of the three perfect kings (others being David and Josiah). During his reign of twenty-nine years he had huge difficulties to deal with, but he faced them all in the calm strength and wisdom of God, and so overcame.

Lesson.—Those who are born and bred in Christian homes have great advantages for which they will be held responsible; but "a man need not be a horse because he is born in a stable," and although a person may be born, as Hezekiah was, of a bad father, this drawback, like every other in life, is to be conquered.

CLEANSING THE TEMPLE.

Ahaz had closed the Temple and permitted it to go to ruin. Religion and morality did not thrive in his reign. He introduced the vilest forms of idolatry among his people. But on the first New Year's Day of Hezekiah's reign he began cleansing and repairing the Temple. The altars were rebuilt, and the building assumed something of its ancient glory.

Compare the moral cleansing of the Temple by Jesus.

Lesson.—Our hearts, if not kept "with all diligence," get into the same state as this ancient Temple. We need the daily cleansing by the love of God. This is brought about by communion with Him. He cannot dwell in the heart without first driving away sin.

INVITATIONS TO THE FEAST (1).

These were sent out in all directions, from Dan (the northern point of Israel) to Beersheba (the southern extremity of Judah). It is taken for granted that his own people would be present, so the appeal is made chiefly to the remnant of Israel which had not been taken captive.

This was an attempt to unite the two kingdoms and peoples before the throne of God. "Blessed are the peacemakers," but there is no union like that which is made in the Lord. (If the teacher has read "The Story of a Face" he will be able to use it in illustration.)

INVITATION MAKES TWO CLASSES (10, 11).

(1) There were some who laughed the postmen to scorn.

(2) Some accepted the invitation gratefully.

These two classes existed before, but undistinguished. Compare with this:—

1. Marriage Feast (Matt. xx. 1-14).
2. The Great Supper (Luke xiv. 16-24).
3. Christ's Lament over Jerusalem (Matt. xxiii. 37-39).

The Judgment Day is a period in the future when great and final divisions will be made or revealed; but every temptation to do wrong and every chance of doing right are judgment days for us, because they reveal our true character and proclaim to us which side we are on.

NATIONAL PRAYER AND PRAISE (13).

It is good to see a whole nation bowing before God in prayer and praise.

Teacher should point out such times as when Mr. W. E. Gladstone died; the nation as a whole went into the spiritual temple of God. Or the autumnal harvest thanksgiving throughout the land.

RESULT OF THE FEAST.

(1) Hezekiah encouraged the priests in their work of teaching the knowledge of the Lord.

(2) The spiritual life of the nation was revived, and very soon became active in the destruction of the idols and idol temples. Renewed spiritual vigour must always show itself in conduct.

(3) With the increased and cleansed spirit came morality and all virtue. The men grew strong, hopeful, courageous, and their enemies were defeated. They became industrious, and the land smiled in plenty once more.

"Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Handles and Habits.

A TALK ABOUT EASY LIVES.

"HANDLES and Habits! What can these two things have to say to one another?" you may perhaps exclaim. Wait just a minute or two, and it will be quite plain.

We generally turn a handle when we wish to open a door, or to open a drawer, in order to take advantage of what is inside, do we not? Well, then, habits should enable us to reach what we need, at the time when we need it.

Most of you have seen, as I have, a pathway through some field being gradually made by the feet of those who tread it. The children coming to our school run along by a "short cut" in summer time which they must leave for the dry high road in winter, and day by day this path grows more hard and more sharply defined. You could not miss it if you tried by July, but in spring you would not be so sure of taking the directest way.

Something like this goes on in our brains. "Thought leads to Acts, Acts become Habits, Habits make character." Whatever we are accustomed to do seems easy and natural, it is when we are called on to learn a new lesson, or follow a new line of conduct, that difficulties begin, explanation is needed, and trouble must be taken before that particular path has been formed within us.

Look, for instance, at writing. When a child first begins to write he has to pause over the shape of every separate letter, but afterwards his hand runs along the beaten track of Habit quite quickly.

It is a splendid help this power of habit, but it may be an awful hindrance also. Just as easily—indeed, more easily—do we "run to evil" as "run to good." That is why I am writing to you, in the hope of showing you how important it is, with God's grace assisting us, to form wise habits now, which will become "second nature" by and by, and make it easy to do what is our duty, because it is what we are accustomed to.

When the bell rings in the morning wise people turn the handle of early rising, and jump out of bed, ready to have a quiet time with God before the worries of the day begin; but many a boy and girl turn the handle of laziness and sleep on "just a little longer."

We may add years to our waking lives by being dressed in good time, and it is really quite as easy to rise at 6.30 as at 7.30, if only you make a habit of it.

Then there is the Handle of Daily Bible Reading, which opens such stories of treasure. The Handle of constant Prayer, which provides us with help in every sudden emergency. The Handle of Good Temper, which makes that "soft answer which turneth away wrath" quite "ready to hand," when some unkindness or disappointment tries us.

Think for a little while about all this, dear children, and you will find out many interesting and helpful handles for yourselves.

Doors.

YOU will be thinking of a great many different kinds of doors, from a cupboard-door to a front door. But I am going to speak of none of these.

The door I want you to think about is a Person. In Gen. iii. 24 we have two cherubims standing as a door to keep people out, but this door invites us to enter in by Him. Can you guess who this door is? Through Him you pass into holiness, happiness, and heaven.

A Strait (narrow) Door (St. Matt. vii. 13).—On the summit of a hill about three miles from Kollegor in Southern India there stands a great stone with a very small hole in it. The Hindoos think to please their gods if they can squeeze through it. They strip off everything, or they would have no chance of success. That is absurd and wicked. But to pass through the "strait" gate into heaven we must leave (Heb. xii. 1, 2) many things behind. The door is narrow because we cannot carry our burden of sin into heaven. When we come to Jesus, who is the door, we lose that burden.

A Single Door (St. John xiv. 6).—If you will turn to that verse, you will find that Jesus Christ is the only way into heaven. There are many paths to sin, but only one door to happiness and holiness. People try to get into heaven by many ways (St. John x. 1), but there is one door only, and that is Christ. Just as there was only one gate into a city in Asia called Troy, so there is only one way into heaven.

A Sprinkled Door (Exod. xii. 22).—Everyone as they went into the house for safety went in under the blood of the lamb. The child who enters in by the door enters in under the blood of the Lamb of God. The blood was overhead, and not underfoot; that is, it was not to be trodden underfoot, not to be despised. In the battle of Gandamuck an officer, to save the colours, wrapped the scarlet flag about his body. He not only saved them, but also his own life. The Afghans, seeing the gorgeous apparel, spared his life, thinking him to be a great officer, and hoping to obtain a great ransom for him. This door is crimson with the blood of the Lamb of God, and all who are under the blood are quite safe; the enemy will not touch them.

A Sanctuary Door (St. John x. 9).—Durham Cathedral used to be a place of sanctuary where a man might flee for safety from his foes. It was always open day and night, and keepers were on the watch to protect the man who fled thither. This door is a sanctuary. The guilty boy or girl (and we have all done wrong) can flee to Him who calls Himself the Door. I see on some doors "tradesmen's entrance." There is one door for the household and their friends, and another for those who come on business. This sanctuary door is not marked "private," or "no admittance," but anyone who is in danger may run thither (Joshua xx. 4).

A Strong Door (St. Matt. xii. 29).—The strong man in that verse is the devil, but the stronger who binds the strong man in Jesus Christ. I once went to see a castle which had stood many sieges, but what impressed me most was the strength of the great door. It was built of the hardest wood and crossed with thick bands of iron. Of course it had to withstand attack. And this door is strong. No one can capture the one who has entered in by that door (St. John x. 28, 29)—Jesus, the Door, will stand between you and the enemy.

Ruth Pledger.—Thank you for your letter. Shall look out for your papers.

Reginald Measor.—I am pleased with the interest you have always shown in the Searcher. When you get a little stronger you may then be able to start again.

I shall be pleased to forward to Winchester for the sick soldiers a box containing bright-coloured lavender bags, which has been sent me by one of my "nieces" for that purpose.

Eva Kentish and Helen Morgan.—Please write out the answers, as well as giving the references.

Nettie Thomson.—I was exceedingly pleased to receive your family group. I seem to know my "nephews" and "nieces" so much better when I see their photographs.

Madge Bellerby.—I hope you will be successful. Am glad you are joining the Searcher.

Dorothy Daintree.—Sorry you were disappointed after taking extra pains with your paper. You did not get a certificate, because there were a good many before you. I wish everyone could get a prize, but that is impossible.

Madeline Woodford.—Am very pleased to welcome you. There is no limit as to age in doing the weekly Searcher, but for the Quarterly Prize Competition competitors must not be more than eighteen years of age.

Ella Hewitt.—As your birthday will come so near the date of the competition you may enter for it if you have succeeded in getting nine papers correct during this quarter.

National Protestant Congress.

In our last week's issue we gave some account of the opening meeting of the National Protestant Congress at Folkestone. The succeeding meetings, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, were well attended, and it was resolved to meet next year at Manchester.

The afternoon of the first day was given up to papers on Holy Scripture and its accuracy. Rev. John Urquhart was the first speaker, and he showed that recent discoveries confirm statements in Genesis to which the Higher Critics have taken exception. Mr. T. G. Pinches, of the British Museum, spoke on the tablets and antiquities of Babylonia, Assyria, and Egypt, illustrating his remarks with limelight views. In the evening of the same day addresses were delivered on the encroachments of priestcraft. Mr. Charles Walter, who presided, declared that Protestant principles would not be lost sight of at the next election. Rev. Dr. Townsend, of Forest Hill, spoke on the blighting influence of priestcraft in the Church, and Rev. T. Eynon Davies, of Beckenham, followed, maintaining that Romanism means ruin, and predicting that Ritualist and Romanist would at length be found in the same camp.

Mr. John Kensit spoke of the lawless practices prevailing in many churches. The Bishop of London told him that the people of England would never take to Ritualism, because they had not enough sentiment in their nature.

RITUALISTIC SENTIMENT

would never do for them; they wanted the Word of the living God. The time had come when they were led to say that this thing must be either ended or mended, and this had led him to enter his protest on different occasions.

On Wednesday morning Rev. A. J. Palmer presided over a meeting whereat the relation of the Free Church Councils to the Protestant movement was the subject of discussion. He expressed the hope that Evangelical Churchmen and Free Church Evangelicals would long co-operate in good work. Mrs. Arbuthnot, president of the Women's Protestant Union, welcomed the formation of the Imperial Protestant Federation, the object of which is to unite the colonies and British dependencies with the United Kingdom, for the purpose of maintaining Protestant supremacy, as opposed to Romish and sacerdotal, or infidel ascendency, in every branch of the constitution and life of the Empire.

An address was delivered by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who held that the Romanising movement had been organised almost from the centre of the Protestant Church, and the attack must be directed at the fountain-head. Everything else was a mere bagatelle. They must co-operate with those of the Protestant laity who hoped that through Parliament they would be able to reform the Church, though he feared that the obstacles to the realisation of that hope were almost insuperable, being in the hands of the High Church party at the present time. It would need the united strength of the whole Protestant sentiment in the country for some years to succeed in the desperate contest which lay before them. Other speakers were Revs. J. Tolefree Parr and C. Fenwick Ward.

ALMOST ALL THE POWER

The meeting on Thursday morning was devoted to a discussion of the conventual system, the speakers being Mrs. Arbuthnot and Mrs. W. P. Lockhart. In the afternoon Mrs. Arbuthnot presided, and Miss Larritt read a paper on "Rome at Home," and Mme. Rocha one on "Rome and the Jews." At the closing meeting in the evening the chairman was Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., and the speakers were Dr. H. Grattan Guinness and Canon O'Connor. The chairman, speaking as a follower of John Wesley, said that if there was one thing upon which Wesleyans were more united than another it was on the paramount necessity of maintaining, in the interests of religious liberty and civil progress, those glorious principles for which their forefathers fought and died—the principles of the Protestant Reformation. He would not join in a "No Popery" cry in this country, and he saw no need for panic. It had been the cherished principle of the Free Churches and the Established Church of the country to secure for Roman Catholics the same civil rights which they enjoyed themselves, and he trusted that would always be so.

Training Evangelical Nurses.

THE training of Christian nurses who shall not only be fully efficient in the important work of nursing, but who may be able to impart spiritual help to those committed to their charge, is a matter of the greatest moment. The announcement, therefore, that the Evangelical Protestant Deaconesses Institution and Training Hospital at Tottenham is to be closed at the end of this month calls for serious consideration.

This work, which was founded by the generosity of the late Messrs. John and Samuel Morley, and was carried on for many years under the direction of the late Dr. Laseron, was intended to furnish Evangelical Christian nurses for the Tottenham and other hospitals, and also for private service. There was other work connected with the institution, but the building of a large hospital naturally directed chief attention to the training of Christian nurses, and this is the work chiefly associated with Tottenham.

As many readers of The Christian doubtless know, controversies which arose in connection with the hospital after the death of Dr. Laseron crippled the usefulness of the institution, and have led to the financial condition which has given rise to the PROPOSAL TO CLOSE THE HOSPITAL.

Into the merits of the case it would be unprofitable to enter, but it is generally admitted that nothing short of a thorough reorganisation will restore public confidence in the institution.

The Council of the institution have within the past year put before the Charity Commissioners a scheme for reorganisation, but this has met with very considerable opposition, both locally (9000 signatures being obtained in Tottenham and neighbourhood in opposition to the scheme) and from those interested in its Evangelical character. Under these circumstances the matter engaged the consideration of friends specially concerned in the subject of medical training upon definite Christian lines. Of these the names of Dr. Harry Guinness, Dr. Henry Soltau, Dr. Herbert Lankester, and Dr. Harford-Battersby are a sufficient guarantee that the matter was thoroughly considered by men who ought to know something of the subject.

As a result it was decided to submit a scheme to the Tottenham Council. This was at the outset most favourably received, and is now supported by three out of six of the trustees, namely Messrs. R. L. Barclay, T. F. Victor Buxton, and Eliot Howard; also Mr. C. Raitt, a member of Council. Other well-known names of former trustees or members of Council who approve of the scheme are Messrs. R. Barclay, S. Gurney Sheppard, and H. Wilbraham Taylor; also Messrs. D. C. Apperly and F. G. Adair Roberts; besides Sir George Williams, Messrs. T. A. Denny and J. and R. Cory, who have contributed largely to the funds of the hospital in the past; and likewise by Mrs. John Morley, widow of the founder.

THE MAIN LINES OF THIS PROPOSAL, which it is believed would have been in accordance with the wishes of the founder, are—(1) The institution to be managed by a Council of Evangelical Protestant Christians in full harmony with its religious and medical character. (2) A training home for Christian women as nurses always to be maintained as an essential part of the work of the institution. (3) A first-rate hospital to be maintained for the benefit of the sick poor of Tottenham and neighbourhood, worked in accordance with the usual practice of the general hospitals of London. (4) Opportunities to be afforded for missionaries to gain practical experience in the elements of medicine and surgery.

It has been stated in error by a contemporary that the institution is to be worked on distinctively Church lines. We are glad to know that this is not the case, but that a clause in the new scheme states that "the undenominational character of the institution shall always be maintained."

Under this scheme it is proposed that Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, Principal of Livingstone College, should be appointed director and medical superintendent, his wife becoming lady superintendent, and Livingstone College being transferred to Tottenham. This, it is believed, would be a distinct advantage both to the hospital and the college.

Many and considerable changes are proposed in this new plan, but they have not been recommended without the most careful thought, and they are believed to be necessary. The matter is now in the hands of the Charity Commissioners, and it is important that the scheme should receive large sympathy and support. Further information may be obtained from Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, 2, Whitehall-court, S.W.; or from Dr. Harford-Battersby, 14, Earlham-grove, Forest Gate, E.

Missionary Day in Manchester.

CONFERENCE HALL, STRANGEWAYS.

ON none of the many earnest Christian efforts which have their centre at the Conference Hall, Strangeways (the well-known headquarters for work in Manchester on behalf of destitute children), has the Lord's blessing been more richly bestowed than on the day annually set apart for awakening increased interest in the great cause of the world's evangelisation. Men and women from various parts of the world, representing the great societies engaged in carrying out Christ's last command, meet, and tell of the world's great need, and how the Gospel alone meets that need.

Friday, October 21, was the day set apart this year, and all the meetings were largely attended. The Bishop of Manchester was present at the early morning meeting, and after breakfast gave a helpful address.

The first meeting in the hall was for prayer, and an earnest spirit of supplication pervaded the whole day. Prebendary Macdonald presided. Dr. Henry Soltau gave a brief word, and then the speakers for the day and the various mission fields were pleaded for before the Lord. Rev. David Baron gave one of his deeply instructive Bible readings from Ps. cxiii.

Rev. W. E. Burroughs told of the wonderful work of the C.M.S. Each year of the Society's work surpassed the records of the year that had gone before. Rev. Arnold Foster, of the L.M.S., followed, and strongly condemned the introduction of opium into China, but drew a hopeful picture of the results of education now springing up in China.

Prayer and praise followed, and then came a succession of earnest, thrilling addresses from Mr. John Hay, fresh from South America, and Rev. John Lofthouse, from North-West Canada and the great lone land, who both told of hardship and self-denial which puts the most devoted life at home to shame.

The Hon. Miss Kinnaird told of the blessing of zenana work in India, and Mr. Marcus Wood of marvellous "open doors" in China. Medical missions had a special meeting, when news came of Miss Creane and Miss Dodson, M.D., the Strangeways missionaries in China and in North-West India, who were sent forth five and three years ago respectively.

A very solemn consecration meeting closed the day. The loving appeal of Mr. Burroughs to parents, to young men, and to young women was irresistible. Tears flowed down many cheeks; God was touching hearts, and we know blessed results will soon follow to his glory. The money offerings were liberal.

L. K. Shaw.

Ham-yard Soup Kitchen and Hospital (Great Windmill-street).—During the year ending Sept. 30 a total of 236,281 meals were given at this institution. Any poor person can dine for one penny, and 91,079 did so last year. The hospital afforded 5127 nights' lodgings to homeless men. A mission-service is held, and the City missionary endeavours to instil fresh hopes into the weary wayfarers, and not without good results. Mr. W. Stevens is the secretary.

IRELAND.

In the Open-air.

In the last year's report of the work of the Open-air Mission for Ireland there are some remarkable contrasts drawn between the state of things a few years ago and that which prevails now. A few extracts will vividly illustrate this happy change for the better. The annual meeting of the society, held lately in Dublin, gave the opportunity for further and equally cheering accounts of the development of this agency, and the growing acceptance that its labours meet with among the people. Surely there are happy days in store in the near future for this hitherto distressful country.

ATHLONE.

The historic town of Athlone seemed a veritable Bedlam. Between two and three thousand people surged about the streets. They were mad with unreasoning hate. The preachers had come to the town, and they wanted to murder them. When the preachers appeared in the Market-place the scene became dreadful, and death faced them. This was in August, 1894.

Contrast in 1897: The great annual horse fair is going on. The town is greatly crowded. Right in the centre of the town stand the preachers. Hundreds listen attentively to them. There is no opposition. The preaching is continued every day for about three hours so long as the fair lasts, as well as being steadily maintained winter and summer.

KILDARE.

Kildare is the first important town on the Dublin and Cork Railway. A former resident says: "I remember Gideon Ouseley trying to preach. The people were stoning him, and his face was streaming with blood."

Contrast a recent fair day there. One writes: "Had you been with us in Kildare last week you would have been delighted. The people gathered round us in hundreds. It was wonderful. We preached for about two hours, and they seemed as if they could not hear enough."

GALWAY.

The ancient city of Galway, on Sunday, the 19th August, 1894, was the scene of a riot, which the county inspector said was the worst he had ever seen. For nearly two hours a large crowd, mad with frenzy, chased and stoned the preachers along the streets. At last, covered with blood and fainting, they obtained shelter in one of the local churches. But for God's protecting hand they must have been killed.

Contrast August, 1897: "Eh, sir, are we to hear the Blessed Story to-day?" The speaker is one of an eager crowd of Claddagh fishermen. They are waiting in the Market Square for the preachers to appear, and great is their pleasure when they hear that they are coming. Soon some 200 people are assembled, and listen with close attention to the speakers. A band of workers stand round a small organ, and sing Gospel hymns. Such is the picture Galway now presents every Sunday afternoon. Sometimes the attendance reaches 400, and at other times less than 100; but the attention, as well as the interest, is always perfect.

A clergyman from a Midland county writes: "Only yesterday one of my parishioners told me that his son-in-law had been brought to the Lord Jesus by hearing one of your mission preachers in 'The City of the Tribes.'" The open-air service started by the Irish Church Mission workers at Taylor's Hill is a further proof of the pleasant change in public feeling in this city toward outdoor preaching.

The very latest scene of disturbance appears to be Queenstown, but one cannot doubt that with patient perseverance in the exercise of their undoubted rights the brave preachers will overcome and live down the opposition here also. Our readers will be gratified to know that Rev. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow, who has been very seriously ill, is now restored to health.

Colportage Work.

The annual public meeting of the Dublin Branch of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was lately held in the Metropolitan Hall. There was a good attendance. Colonel Bredin, who presided, said the Society, as well as every other Christian Society in Ireland, had sustained a great loss in the deaths of Mr. Askin and Mr. Fowler. The great panacea for Ireland's ills was the grace of Christ, and among all the societies labouring in this direction there was no institution and no machinery of the day better equipped, better prepared, and better calculated to do the work than this society.

Rev. J. O. G. Dougherty, hon. sec., read the report, which stated that the committee had been obliged to reduce the number of agents. As a result of a special appeal to enable them to carry on the work their financial position was somewhat improved, and they were able to close the year with a deficit of only £12. There was an open and ever-widening door of entrance into the homes of Roman Catholics, they were delighted to see the colporteurs and to listen to them, there was a greater toleration in the land at present than had ever existed before, and now was the time to support the Bible and Colportage Society.

Rev. Samuel Prenter said the society had been forty years in existence. It was undenominational, and on that ground he asked that they should give it their support. There was nothing the country needed so much as the Word of God, and it was the object of the Society to circulate and spread the Word of God in Ireland. Rev. Dr. Clarke spoke in similar terms; and Mr. Walker, one of the colporteurs of the society, gave an account of work in the south of Co. Cork.

Elliott Home for Little Children.

Great improvement, writes Miss Annie D. Smyly, hon. sec., has been made in the Home. Much of the house, which was very old and even dilapidated, has now been renewed, and better bath-rooms and new drains have been constructed, so that the workers commence another year of rescue effort with appliances adapted to the needs, and calculated to ensure good health among entrusted to their loving sympathy and care.

The improvements have been made with money specially provided for the purpose, so that funds which may now be sent go directly for the support of the children. Many friends have united this year in trying to keep the Home free from debt, and although they have not quite succeeded it has been a step in the right direction.

One little boy came to us lately, and his clothing had the appearance of never having been made for him. No tailor or dressmaker took his measure, but what with the valuable aid of a few pins and cutting off the ends of the sleeves, and in the same way shortening the coat, it made a roomy covering. Indeed, it was the only article of his attire worth calling a garment.

The Home and its inmates were quite a source of wonderment to him, and when he got the usual amount of clothing, he said to me, "Would you call this a suit of clothes, for if it is I need not be afraid to go out in the street." Great was his pleasure and when he saw the shelves they are kept on he asked me, "Where did you get them boots from?" I tried to explain to him how God sent everything to the Home. Yes, he said, he had heard of God, "but sure He does not black them" (the boots).

He is a motherless boy, and his father had been out of employment for some months, so he and his brother had known what it was to want both for food, fire, and bedding. His description of his home was, "We have a straw mattress and an old sheet. The legs of the bed and the quilt went to the pawn. We have a press in the room, and we sits on the two drawers of it, for my father broke up the stools to make a fire."

The address is 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

Soldiers' Homes.

Among the philanthropic institutions of the city of Waterford, perhaps none is of more importance than the Soldiers' Home, Adelphi-terrace. During the four years of its existence its bright rooms, comfortable accommodation, and good cheap meals, with a welcome from the lady in charge have been warmly appreciated by men stationed in Waterford, and by men and families en route for other places.

Last week the visit of Miss Sandes was of special interest. She addressed three meetings in the Home. At one of these she read a letter from Lord Roberts, Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, in which he said: "I have visited your two principal 'Homes' in Dublin and Cork, and can testify to the many advantages which soldiers and their families derive from them. They are admirably managed, and are much appreciated by the men. Your 'Homes' are of the greatest assistance to the soldier, as enabling him to spend his leisure evenings in rational, agreeable recreation, far removed from the temptations which usually assail him when seeking relaxation and amusement. I have read with great interest your account of the 'Soldiers' Home' you have lately started in India."

Miss Sandes proceeded to give some interesting information about the Homes in India, quoting a letter from Sir William Lockhart full of appreciation of them.

The report of the Waterford Home was read by Mr. Ridgway, the hon. treasurer, £3000 a year is needed to maintain the twelve Soldiers' Homes in Ireland and India for which Miss Sandes is responsible. Donations are needed for furnishing and extension. The hon. treasurer, Mr. G. R. Ridgway, Waterford, would be glad of the fellowship of our readers in reducing the exacting debt.

Loved into Loving.

Tune 636, "Sacred Songs and Solos."

"Thou hast loved my soul from the pit of corruption, for Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back."—Isa. xxxviii. 17. (R.V. mar.)

Looking back to other years,
Oh, how glad the time appears
When Thou, by Thy love to me,
Loved me into loving Thee!

Later, learning day by day
As thy servant to obey,
Constant love enfolding me
Loved me into serving Thee.

When there came in angry crowd
Thunder cloud on thunder cloud,
Wise the love which, shielding me,
Loved me into trusting Thee.

If past mercies I survey,
Or the sunlight of to-day,
Still Thy kindness sweet and free
Loves me into praising Thee.

When I see Thee face to face
I shall understand the grace
Which as yet I dimly see
Loves me into loving Thee.

Portsmouth.—A four days' convention has been held at the Welcome Mission, Portsmouth, Dr. White presiding. The speakers were Mr. W. Baker, of Dulwich; Revs. C. G. Moore and J. G. Mantle, W. Darlow Sergeant, and the chairman. The addresses were at once helpful and searching.

Poor Folk's "Dinner Table." — The children's, adults' and invalids' dinner table and soup kitchen, which has for thirty years done good work amongst the deserving poor of Marylebone, is asking for help for the work in the impending winter. Soup, meat dinners, rice milk, and beef tea, will be provided. A penny ticket will procure a basin of soup and a slice of bread, which can be eaten on the premises; or a quart of soup can be taken away. A twopenny ticket will purchase a pint of rice milk; and a fourpenny one a plate of meat, potatoes, and bread, or a pint of beef tea. The work has the valuable oversight of Canon and Mrs. Barker, and also of Lady Thomson, the treasurer of the fund, who writes from 35, Wimpole-street, W. Visitors are welcome at any time during the dinner hour, when they can see for themselves the way in which the work is carried on.

Day by Day.

"In all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself."

SUNDAY, October 30.
Genesis vii.

We are following the footsteps of our blessed Lord in these sacred olden records, and everywhere we find that his person and advent impart their chief interest and meaning to the events they detail.

"As were the days of Noah, so shall be the coming of the Son of Man," (Matt. xxiv. 38-42). The awful suddenness and utter destruction of the Flood betokens the fate of the ungodly, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, in flaming fire rendering vengeance to them that know not God, and to them that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ (2 Thess. i. 7, 8). For the earth that now is, by the same word is kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and the destruction of ungodly men (2 Pet. iii. 7).

The ark in which Noah and his family passed from the old sin-cursed world to the new world of resurrection beauty is a fruitful image of that cross of wood, that grave of humiliation, that precious death, resurrection, and ascension, through which we too pass into the new heavens and the new earth of the eternal life. The world is worn and weary; she longs for regeneration and renewal; she is on the brink of the most startling events that have ever transpired upon her face. Are you sure of your inclusion in the ark of salvation, which alone shall ride out the storm?

MONDAY, October 31.
Genesis viii.

In this chapter we have many references to Jesus. In the dove, that found no rest for the sole of her foot till she winged her flight back to the ark, we are reminded of the Holy Spirit, who, like a dove, weary of the restlessness of the world, abode on his person at the baptism. In the hand that was reached forth to bring her in, as though she were too weary and spent to enter, we are reminded of the pierced hand that has been reached out after us many a time. In the stepping forth of Noah on the soil of the renewed earth we are reminded of the emergence of our Lord from the grave of Joseph's garden, bringing with Him the Resurrection and the Life. But specially the altar, here mentioned for the first time, recalls Him.

The altar is, of course, the cross. Here, by the retreating waters of the Deluge, the cross stands in miniature, and we hear God's blessed promise that He will not again curse the ground. The waters of destruction cannot hold sway where the cross is reared, and the curse must remove when He was made a curse for us. Yet it is not the cross alone that thus blesses us, but He who died there. Never look to the cross apart from Jesus, who gives it all its significance and value.

"Jehovah smelled the sweet savour." "Even so Christ also loved you, and gave Himself up for you, an offering and a sacrifice to God for an odour of a sweet smell."

TUESDAY, November 1.
Genesis ix.

Faith, as it has been well said, is ever intent to catch the image of its beloved Lord. It has learned the sound principle that the whole field of nature reflects the beauties and glories of Jesus. It has read the testimony, that He is the "true Light," and "the true Bread," and "the true Vine." Hence it is not slow to inquire, "Is He not the truth beneath the rainbow, the faithful witness in heaven?"

The rainbow is unravelled light; it is the disclosure of the beauteous hues hidden in light. Jesus reveals the perfections of God who is light, but whom no man hath seen or can see. The rainbow is caused by a shaft of light smiting the folds of a retreating storm, and we should never have known what Jesus could be if human sin had not afforded the background and reason for his manifestation. But the rainbow is above all the token of the covenant into which God has entered with us in Christ.

Look on Jesus, poor trembling soul, at the right hand of the Father, a Prince and a Saviour; and as you behold Him be sure that neither sin, nor Satan, nor the floods of ungodly men, can ever prevail against you. Though from the throne proceed thunder and voices, the rainbow is round about, in sight like unto an emerald.

WEDNESDAY, November 2.
Genesis x.

And is Jesus here? We have found Him in Eden and the Wilderness, in the ark and the altar, in type and emblem; but is He here in this list of names? The Holy Ghost, through the Evangelist Luke, answers the question conclusively: "Jesus being the son of...Peleg, of Eber, of Shelah, of Cainan, of Arphaxad, of Shem."

Our Lord does not stand alone. The roots of his human nature are interlaced with the whole previous history of mankind. He is one with the whole race, the Son of Man. He is not like ordinary men, who can understand but one type, suit one kind of disposition, speak one language. No; He came through all sorts of people, that He might understand, and teach, and help all sorts.

What an infinite variety of circumstances, nature, and disposition is represented in this list; but, somehow, they all contributed to the making up of the human nature of Jesus, who became the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, and ever liveth to represent and intercede for all kinds of men at the right hand of God. You can go to Him, Gentile woman, Ruth the Moabitess was his ancestress; and you, holy man, for Enoch was in his line; and you, mighty men of valour, for such were Asshur and his brethren; and you, far-travelled pilgrims, for Eber's name indicates that he was such. Here we stand at the base of the pyramid of human life, of which the manhood of Jesus is apex and crown.

THURSDAY, November 3.
Genesis xi.

The contrasts of Scripture enable us to see the truth more clearly than if it were simply stated from one aspect. This story of Babel, or confusion, is the beginning of Babylon, and Babylon the Great. This record of the migration of Abram's family is the beginning of Jerusalem, which is the mother of us all. To the end of the Bible there is discord and collision between these twain. The one antagonistic to, the other the spouse of, the Lamb.

The centre of unity, on which man vaunts himself, is a city, a tower, and a name. By his ingenious plans and substantial erections he hopes to secure himself against another flood. One purpose, one language, one people, and therefore unity, stability, and safety. It is a dream of the truth, and a vague reaching forth after the reality. We are reminded of the suggestion of Satan that all the kingdoms of the world should be Christ's if He would but fall down and worship him.

But how different is the unity of Christ's creating. It is not founded on great buildings or combinations. He does not summon men together to propose to them an irresistible confederation. He offers Himself as the centre of unity, and Himself crucified. "I, if I be lifted up from the earth (on the cross), will draw all men unto Me." This He said, signifying by what death He should die. Then from his heavenly throne He draws men to Himself through the Holy Spirit, and gives them the one language of love.

FRIDAY, November 4.
Genesis xii.

The Scripture, we have been taught, is framed by the hand of love to set forth the glories of our Lord. Each page adds new tints to the glowing picture. Almost each person is a herald preceding and proclaiming Jesus with a clearer note. In the words spoken to Abram we have the proclamation of blessing to us all. "In thee," God said, "shall all the families of the earth be blessed." And the Apostle, led by the Spirit of God, adds, "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law...that upon the Gentiles might come the blessing of Abraham in Christ Jesus, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."

"To Abraham were the promises spoken, and to his seed. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." If then we are in Christ by a living faith, we may lay claim to all that God promised to his faithful servant. He will show us the way into the unknown; will make nations of converts out of our lives: will make us a blessing: blessing them that bless us, cursing them that curse us.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." What a treasure-house is here! How rich! how full! And the believer may say, "This heritage is all my own." Our Lord Jesus is like the firmament of the midnight sky, studded with glittering stars, which exceed all computation; and each star represents a world of blessing. In Him we are made full. From Him we receive grace upon grace.

SATURDAY, November 5.
Genesis xiii.

When God said to Abram, "I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth, so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered," He did not mean Jews only, but Gentiles also, for Abram's seed is Christ, and therefore includes all who belong to Him by a living faith.

The words were addressed apparently to Abram, but really to Christ, who was, according to natural generation, already present in his ancestor. It is as though we were permitted to overhear a Divine colloquy between the Father and the Son, in the council chamber of eternity, and the Father promises that He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. To our Lord, in Abram, the promise was made that he should be the heir of the world and the father of many nations. "Wherefore also there sprang of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the seashore innumerable" (See Rev. vii. 9, etc., and Isa. liii. 12).

A Miracle of Grace.

SOME time ago I was asked to see a man named W——, of whom I then learned nothing but his address, and that he had been seriously injured by an accident, and was willing to see me. The accident occurred some eight miles out of the city. W—— and his son, with two other friends, had been out shooting. When returning home the pony became restive and unmanageable, and while going at a breakneck pace down hill the trap was completely overturned. Two of the company were thrown out, and escaped uninjured, but W—— was seriously hurt, and rendered for a time perfectly unconscious.

It was no new experience for W—— to be face to face with death. He was an engine-driver, and had once been buried under his engine when it was upset through a cow having got on to the line. Twice he had been thrown from his engine through mistakes made by the pointsman. Once, as he leaned forward to discover the cause of a shaking noise he heard about his engine his head caught on a bridge, and he was knocked almost lifeless to the ground. Three times he has been nearly drowned. But the remarkable fact is that in all these experiences he never had the slightest dread of death and the thought of judgment after death never caused him even a tremor of fear!

Yet his life had been such as to give him cause for fear. He had not been a drunkard, nor had he neglected his home. But not much beside this could be said in his favour. He was practically an infidel. His children went to Sunday-school, for, as he has explained to me since, I knew "it 'ud do them no harm." He would accompany his wife and family to the church door, but never went in with them. "No," he said, "if anyone asked me to go to church, or to read my Bible, or pray, I said, 'Me! Not likely. It's all rot!'"

His tastes went in quite a different direction. He was a great boxer, and gave lessons in "the noble art" to others, and displayed his own skill against all comers. He was a gambler, too, and

A FAITHFUL WORSHIPPER OF THE TURF.

He owned several ponies, which ran at the various races which are so popular and frequent in this colony.

But his language is described by those who worked with him, and who were not over choice themselves, as being of the most awful character. About twelve months ago he had a serious illness, and when his sufferings were exceptionally severe his blasphemies against God were horrible to hear. His wife shuddered with terror, and even his workmates who visited him said "it made their hair stand on end to listen to him."

Such was the man I was asked to visit when I was perfectly ignorant of what his previous life and character had been.

"When I came to my senses, after being taken from under the cart," he said as I sat by his bedside, "I thought I should never get over it, and for the first time in my life I was afraid of death. I never cried to God before, but I did then." But the chief burden of his cry seemed to be that God would spare him to get home to his wife and children.

"But," he said, "the good woman in the house where they took me was a Christian, and she talked to me about the death of her child a year before, and how that trouble had brought her to God, and changed her life." This seemed to have impressed him, so that he was more disposed to listen to my message, and permit me to pray with him.

On my second visit he was still suffering, but he listened with eager interest to the Gospel story. "Why not," I said, "respond to God's call now? Our Lord is here; speak to Him for yourself." "Well," he replied, "it's no use saying one thing and meaning another" (a very frequent phrase of his), "and by the help of God I do mean to make a new start." "Then tell Him so," I said, as I knelt by him and prayed. No sooner had I done than he

BURST OUT INTO PRAYER FOR HIMSELF

—earnest, definite, fervent, and intelligent. He had never been accustomed to go even through the form of prayer, and it touched me deeply to hear him give himself over with childlike confidence to the keeping power of God. And as soon as he had said "Amen," I was about to speak when he broke out again with, "Yes, and bless God, I feel He has heard me"; and his joyous exclamation became another prayer, offered with tears of penitence and of joy!

"Where is your Bible?" I asked when I saw him a few days later. There were many books on the table, but the Bible was not one of them. "The missis has one," he said, "and the children use it at Sunday-school." I went in search of the "missis," and soon obtained a small copy of the Bible. "You must read this," I said, "for you cannot grow strong if you do not eat. This is your food." I read him a few verses, and marked the place for him to read more.

"Have you been reading the Bible?" I asked, at my next visit. "Yes," he said, "I read that chapter you marked, and went on past that. I never knew how interesting it was!" Pointing to an open book turned with its face on the table, he said, "Before you came last time I was reading that book. It's about engines, and that's in my line, you know. But I have never touched it since. The Bible is better than that."

I asked him to read about the new birth, and said, "You know that a birth is the beginning of a life; and the new birth is the beginning of a new life, like you have just had." "Aye, bless God," he said, "and

I KNOW IT'S A NEW LIFE.

I've never been so happy and contented in all my life as I have this last week or two. If a man was to come in and put a handful of banknotes on the table, and say, 'There, W., take them and enjoy yourself,' I'd say, 'No, thank you, I've got something better nor money, and that money can't buy." And he added, "My wife knows its a new life, and my children too. I tell you," he said, "I felt very queer when my wife said, the other day, that she'd never been so happy with me in all her life before. 'Why,' I said, 'haven't I been a good husband to you? Have I ever denied you anything you needed? Have I ever come home drunk, or spent the money that I ought to bring home to you?'—'Oh, but,' she said, 'it's so different now. You never get cross, like you used to do. Where's your temper gone to? Then you don't talk to the children in the same way now. They never hear a hard word from you. And you never swear. Why, I used to tremble to hear you.' That touched me," he said, his face red with weeping, and his voice choking. "When a man hears his wife talk like that to him, it makes him see that his former life has not been so good as he thought it to be." And his influence tells upon others.

THE NEIGHBOURS NOTE THE CHANGE,

and have no doubt concerning what the grace of God can do. Since he returned to his work the fireman on the engine has noted the change, and is much more careful about his own language, while he gets many an earnest message of warning for himself. Other sick men whom I visit have reason to thank God for the change. A rabbit, or a bag of oranges, or something else the sick man has desired has been procured for him by W——, who has not failed to give the message of life at the same time.

"The Christian" Almanac.

A YEAR has passed since we issued our calendar for 1898, and with this number we send forth "The Christian" Almanac for 1899. Letters received from many lands assure us that in thousands of homes our wall-sheet performs a helpful ministry all the year through. Its illustration strikes the eye; its postal and other information invests it with a practical utility; while its daily watchwords, gathered from Holy Scripture, are a source of comfort and a means of spiritual direction to many weary souls. As our older readers know, the Almanac is issued thus early, in order that it may reach far-off lands in good time for the new year.

During recent years the engravings displayed by the Almanac have been illustrative of the life of some great Bible character—men as varied in temperament and experience as Elijah and Jeremiah, John the Baptist and the Apostle Paul. This year we present one engraving only—a bold reproduction of a peculiarly interesting Oriental scene. Here we have a glimpse of the renowned "Street called Straight," in the ancient city of Damascus. The old Roman Gateway is an admirable background for the animated group of burdened camels and leisurely attendants.

Beneath the engraving some information is given as to its origin. Mr. James Clark has for some years been engaged in the production of drawings for use in illustrating the portions of God's Word published by the Scripture Gift Mission. For this purpose he has visited Egypt and Palestine, and into his very responsible work he has thrown Christian conscience and much enthusiasm. The same may be said of Mr. Henry A. Harper, who has also made valued contributions to the same great work. He is at once a distinguished artist and an authority on Oriental customs and antiquities.

Needless to say, illustrations like this, being true to life and of a high order from an artistic point of view, greatly enrich Scripture portions, and make them specially serviceable for general distribution. They do more; they help ordinary readers to gather the correct meaning of passages which they might otherwise completely misunderstand. Mr. Walters, the secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, has from the first jealously avoided any representation of Christ or of Gospel incidents. He has confined his endeavours to the illumination of Scripture by the artist's pencil; not to the fanciful reproduction of its sacred story.

It is a pleasure thus to be able to call attention to a good piece of work, in the initiation and advancement of which Mr. Walters has shown his faith in God's Word and an earnest desire to promote its world-wide circulation. The Mission has issued the whole of the New Testament in English, in eleven portions (post free 1s. 3d. from the office, 15, Strand, W.C.). Then there are portions in French, Italian, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Modern Greek, and Arabic. Again, there are large-type Gospels, with many illustrations, specially suited for the aged, or for use in hospitals and other institutions.

Being now combined with the historic Crystal Palace Bible-stand, the Scripture Gift Mission is looking forward to the Paris Exposition of 1900. A space has already been secured, and Scripture portions in many languages will be given away to the multitudes who visit the gay city during the exciting season. Friends who would like to have a share in this great undertaking should communicate their desire without delay.

We conclude by expressing the desire that the Almanac, compiled with prayer as well as care, may be a blessing in many homes in many lands.

The Stratford Mizpah Band is praising God for great blessing that has attended their work in the open air during the past six months. Thousands have listened to the Gospel with an attentiveness that showed a longing desire to know more about salvation. Not a few have made an open profession of the Lord Jesus, while many have been led to sign the total abstinence pledge.

Mrs. Eleanor Fisher.

A MISSION TO CITY WORKWOMEN.

No one who has passed through the purlieus of London City proper in the middle of the week-day can have failed to notice the throngs of young people, especially of young women, who fill the thoroughfares during the dinner hour. Confined closely to factory or workroom during the working hours, the meal interval gives them a welcome opportunity of change, which they gladly seize. While this short period of unbending from toil is good in itself, the leisure it implies has in it an element of danger, if the time be not properly utilised, and the aggregation of so many youthful minds released from the strain of work complicates the situation. Here is a great opportunity for Christian ladies, with the requisite tact and sympathy, to influence for good their toiling sisters.

Twenty years ago, or thereabouts, little or nothing seems to have been done to reach them, but about that time God raised up a true friend to these working women in the person of Mrs. Eleanor Fisher, whose portrait appears on this page. During all the intervening years she has been fully devoted to this admirable home mission work, and with the assistance of many other Christian ladies great things have been accomplished in bringing these women-workers of the City under Christian influences. Some particulars relating to Mrs. Fisher's share in the movement will, we hope, be of interest to the reader.

Miss Eleanor Lowther was born near Grantham, Lincolnshire, and at an early age went to reside in the beautiful home of a widowed uncle, a clergyman, where she received a strict religious training. After his death she went for some years to a finishing ladies' school in Grantham. When about twenty-one years of age she was brought to Christian decision, through the influence of a lady friend, and the Evangelical ministry she then attended was a means of great spiritual blessing to her.

From a photograph by Messrs. E. and F. Stoneham, Cheapside, E.C.

Miss Lowther's footsteps were shortly afterwards directed to London. Here she met with Mr. Fisher, to whom she was married in 1854. A contemplated appointment in India fell through, and soon after Mrs. Fisher was led to think of Christian effort among ladies in connection with a ladies' prayer meeting then held at Albion Hall, Moorgate-street. This meeting was moved later on to Shaftesbury Hall, Aldersgate-street. It was the sight of hundreds of young women engaged in City workrooms in the dinner interval, without any place of safe and comfortable resort, that aroused her sympathy and incited her to helpful action. She discovered that many of these girls were excluded from their workrooms at dinner time, and had to eat a cold luncheon in the streets and open spaces. Chiefly through the generosity of Sir George Williams, who recognised the need, a basement room in the premises of the Aldersgate-street Y. M. C. A. was cleaned, papered, and constituted a place of resort for these hungry and homeless sisters. The room was speedily filled day by day with some two hundred young women and girls, and in that simple fashion there began the interesting mission to City workwomen, which has since then greatly developed, and is still in full operation.

AIMLESSLY THRONGING THE STREETS

By-and-by Mrs. Fisher suggested to the Y.M.C.A. authorities that the use of the lecture-hall should be granted for a short mid-day service for the girls at the close of the usual noonday prayer-meeting. This arrangement was carried out, and the service has continued ever since, with very happy and fruitful results. It has been a channel of spiritual profit and blessing to many, and a source of strength to the Christian girls in their daily work and warfare among careless companions.

An interesting outcome of the work was the founding of "The Welcome" in Jewin-street, near by, where similar efforts for the comfort and well-being of working young women are carried on. One of the early lady helpers of Mrs. Fisher was Miss Seton Karr, who was led after a time to open this new centre of effort in Jewin-street. It is maintained on entirely independent lines from the parent work in Aldersgate-street, but in full sympathy with it. For the restaurant section of the work at the latter centre Mrs. Fisher has no responsibility, as it is kept going by a caterer on a commercial basis. A week-evening service for the girls is held in one of the rooms by Mrs. Fisher and her helpers, and this, too, is much appreciated, especially by the Christians.

One of the most important and valued features of the mission is the regular visitation of the girls in workrooms throughout the City. In these workrooms there are probably 20,000 young women engaged in making neckties, collars, dresses, mantles, in cigar factories, bookbinders' establishments, etc. Gradually, and as the result of much patient, persistent effort on the part of the workers, most of these rooms are now open to the visits of Bible women and lady visitors, who are permitted to converse with the girls, as the demands of business will permit, to hold little services in the dinner and tea intervals, and so forth. Most of the employers are and the work is done now under encouraging conditions. It is impossible to go into details, but in the past years there have been seen many blessed fruits of all this patient Christian endeavour. Many have received Christ into their lives, and are now witnessing for Him either at their work or in their own homes where they have married, while others have passed away to glory.

There have been some interesting developments in specific efforts undertaken by the girls themselves. One of these is the Snowdrop Band, which has done much in past times for the discouragement of loose language in workrooms, and the advancement in every way of purity of life. Another effort worthy of special mention is the King's Messengers' Band, which visits Smithfield Market and other places distributing tracts. The members of this band are able to report good results from their labour of love.

All this work continued year after year has involved a great strain on Mrs. Fisher, and the loss of her husband, two years ago, was a heavy sorrow. She is, however, wonderfully sustained in health and vigour, and was able to stick to her post during the recent hot months when most of her lady helpers were recruiting on holiday. Fresh helpers are greatly needed to replace blanks that inevitably occur, and we can think of no finer sphere of Christian effort for earnest-minded ladies who have a certain period of leisure during the day. Any who can render service in this way should place themselves in communication with Mrs. Fisher, 189, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Financial help would also be welcome.

New Mission Hall for Blackgang, I.W.

The need of a more commodious and convenient building, which should eventually be the property of the Blackgang Mission, has been felt for a considerable time. After much prayerful effort, a suitable site was obtained, on which has been erected an iron building capable of accommodating about 300 people, with rooms and out-buildings adapted to the requirements of the work. The structure is both substantial and handsome, and is well situated.

At the opening services the hall was crowded. Rev. Herbert Crouch presided at the public meeting, supported by Mrs. Smith and other friends, including the builder, Mr. Hayden, of Ryde, who is one of the fruits of the good work carried on by the Mission.

Amongst many cheering words from those who had been converted at the old hall, was a characteristic testimony from a member of the audience, who spoke gratefully of the Mission, which had been the means of his serving God for twenty-five years. Prior to that time he could not read at all. Now, through the kindness of the workers, he could read the Bible for himself.

East London Poverty.

THOUGH workers come and go in East London, poverty remains. It is not seen on the high road; its existence in anything like an acute degree would hardly impress the ordinary visitor confining his movements to social or business circles. But anyone bent upon getting from the roads to the people, by way of side streets, courts, and alleys, would soon find out distressful facts regarding East End poverty and dirt, with its misery and sorrow. Let a Christian worker be your guide, and you will soon see sights for tears, and wants that appeal to God and man.

The streets that surround the East London Tabernacle in the Burdett-road have long been recognised as typical in this particular. In the cheerless rows of houses, with their occasional courts and yards, there is a dense population, amongst whom, for many years, a grand piece of Gospel work was done under the direction of Pastor Archibald G. Brown, late minister of the Tabernacle church. With a large-hearted purpose, the pastor took young and old under his loving care, and became at length the local almoner of many of God's people. At length Mr. Brown relinquished the work; but it is pleasing to know that the church officers, who realised its importance and value, determined that the outside effort should not go out of existence altogether when its esteemed organiser went away. They could not save all, but they saved some; and the orphanages, mission-halls, and other agencies which were thus retained are now being recognised as the nucleus of philanthropic operations sorely needed in the district, and for the fostering of which the poor and their friends quite reasonably look to the new pastor of the Tabernacle church.

PASTOR SYDNEY J. JONES

entered upon the work in April last. A comparatively young man, with ample vigour of body and mind, Mr. Jones has had to feel his way somewhat. To succeed Mr. Brown in the pastorate was much; to follow him in outside undertakings was more. But Mr. Brown made a beginning, and the time has come for Mr. Jones to do the same. And as the work grew around the former minister, so, doubtless, it will grow around his successor, and God will repeat the blessings of his servant Brown in the experience of his servant Jones.

Understanding that Mr. Jones felt himself impelled to go forward in the direction indicated, a representative of The Christian waited upon him a few days ago, and found him firm in resolve and hopeful in spirit. Mr. Jones explained that the needs of the district were substantially the same as when Pastor Brown set up the many organisations associated with his name; and he hoped that those who helped in years past to evangelise the people, and to extend Christian kindness to them, would again come forward with help. "Let it be distinctly understood," remarked Mr. Jones, "that I am going to start nothing for the sake of the thing; but we must take up work that we feel needs to be done."

Proceeding, Mr. Jones said that the Tabernacle church had taken the responsibility of the Boys' and Girls' Orphanages, the expense of which is about £1000 a year. Also, that there are still missionaries at work; a house-to-house visitation is going on, also sick visitation by a mission nurse. Mr. Jones added: "I am specially hopeful that friends of home-mission work will come to our aid, for inside the Tabernacle I am drawing direct attention to the claims of foreign missions. While the congregation will have a part in the outside work, it cannot do everything.

THE PEOPLE ARE RESPONDING ADMIRABLY."

In some further conversation Mr. Jones said that in the course of his work he had been going over the ground. He was convinced that there are whole districts but a short distance from Bow-road which could never be touched except by some such efforts as he desired to organise. The visitation must be, not from house to house, but from room to room. The "Christian" Buildings, he was happy to say, were still a great blessing, its residents being Christian people; it is an object-lesson and a testimony in the neighbourhood. Then there are the Mission Halls, and also the soup kitchens, which have been so useful for years, and will soon serve winter needs among the poor.

As showing the conditions in which many of the people live, Mr. Jones says in a circular to his friends: "In one room on Bow Common I found a family—a respectable man and wife with four children. All were in rags and very thin. The husband was out of work, and the wife making match boxes at 2¾d. a gross. A good day's work would bring in 7d. to 9d. All through six streets around there I could have gone and found much the same. Here and there are Christian people."

Mr. Jones tells how 5s. was laid out by one of his lady workers. Here is the account:—A cobbler ill in bed with influenza and poisoned thumb, too poor to buy any nourishing food, or have a doctor at home; wife delicate; his only son out of work; they live in one room and the shop; gave them 2s. Visited widow, nearly eighty years old, living in a back room; sometimes has only 9d. to live on all the week; gave her 1s. A similar case; too ill to do her usual work, shirt finishing, for which she gets 4d. a dozen, earning from 4d. to 6d. a day; gave her 1s. Another woman, ill from want of food; has had nothing to eat all day; husband ill and out of work; family of five children; gave her 1s.

No one pretends that Bow is a very hollow of poverty. It is on the fringe of the old residential neighbourhood that the helpless poor have herded in such depressing numbers. After being in the district but a few months Mr. Jones has heard the cry of sadness and sorrow, and determined upon a good bit of work. His opportunities are great, but, of course, the good work done will largely depend upon the assistance rendered him by those who can furnish the means wherewith to support the messenger of God's grace and supply the comforts of Christian sympathy. Communications may be addressed to Pastor Jones, at Kent House, Bow-road, E. T.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

IN a circular letter on the Barbican Mission to the Jews, of which he is the president, Prebendary Webb-Peploe writes: "For the past seven years the headquarters have been at 33, Finsbury-square, the rent of which (£250 a year) has been entirely defrayed by 'A Lover of Israel.' The lease, however, has just expired, and we are now endeavouring to find a fresh home for the Mission, which should, if possible, be of a permanent character. In the meantime we have acquired temporary premises at 262, Commercial-road, E.

"It is proposed to make the new Mission House a memorial of the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, the first president of the Mission, to whose efforts and influence the work owes more than we can express. We have a little more than £1000 in hand, but we need another £3000 to carry our plans into effect.

"At the invitation of the committee I have lately accepted the office of president of the Mission, and I am most desirous that the new Mission House should be provided as early as possible, in order that our efforts may be concentrated on the evangelistic operations of the Mission. The work will bear the closest investigation, and I believe it to be in every way worthy of support. Our secretary, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, will gladly supply papers relating to the work, and any further information you may desire."

Home of Industry.

WE gladly welcomed our friends at the monthly gathering for Christian workers last week. The weather was unfavourable and there were fewer with us than we hoped for, but the meeting was intensely interesting and stimulating. The occasion commemorated the purchasing of the lease of the old home in Commercial-street, Spitalfields, and the receiving of the first band of twenty-one homeless boys, both fatherless and motherless, thirty years ago. The children from the training home filled their corner of the hall, repeated Scriptures they had committed to memory, and sang several sweet hymns.

The address was given by Mr. R. C. Morgan, who gave some helpful thoughts from Revelation x., refreshing the Bible Flower Mission workers who had been hard at work in the neighbouring East-end hospitals during the afternoon. Nurses, too, came from their daily routine for spiritual enjoyment; missionaries on furlough, and others shortly sailing for distant climes, took farewell. Seasons of prayer were interwoven during the two hours.

Mr. H. A. Maude closed the meeting (after the three C.I.M. missionaries had spoken) with prayer, remembering the absent missionary brethren and sisters toiling in the far-off fields. F. A. W.

Our Village Children.

THE annual meeting of the Caravan to Village-Children Mission, which is conducted under the auspices of the Children's Special Service Mission, was held on Saturday last, at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, Mr. T. B. Bishop presiding.

The work of this mission is to carry the Gospel to the children of the outlying villages by means of caravans and tents. Several workers gave instances showing the need for such a work. The workers had the joy of seeing in most of the villages visited many little ones receiving the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Several students now in training for the foreign mission field have been assisting in the caravan work this summer, and testified that the experience thus gained would be useful in their future work.

Four vans have been at work during the past summer, a fifth has just been built, and a friend has offered to build a sixth, but the mission waits for the necessary workers to be raised up. Workers are also needed to correspond with the children in the villages. Christian friends willing to help in any way are invited to communicate with the hon. treasurer, Mr. Sydney Spiers, "Meran," Polwarth-road, Streatham, S.W.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A FORTNIGHT'S tour in the West of England has been made by Rev. W. J. Mayers on behalf of these Homes. Twenty-nine meetings were held. The Sunday services in Penzance and Plymouth were greatly appreciated and the offertories liberal. The week-day meetings in the nine other towns were also largely attended, and much interest was shown in Mr. Mayers' lectures on "From Acorn to Oak: The Story of the Thirty-two Years' Growth of Dr. Barnardo's Homes," illustrated as they were by a splendid series of limelight pictures. The musical boys from the Homes did their part, to the lively satisfaction of the audiences, their music and drill being much appreciated as giving evidence of careful training.

Mr. Mayers will be glad to hear from any friends of the Homes in the West, South, or East of England who may be willing to assist him in arranging Sunday services or week-day meetings in their behalf.

Brighton Servants' Home.—This useful institution, situated at 9, St. Peter's-place (near the railway terminus), proves a convenient and helpful temporary habitation for domestics. It is named "Chichester House," after the Countess of Chichester, who has evinced keen interest in its prosperity. The recently-issued report mentions that a registry office is being worked in connection, and expresses the hope that the number of annual subscribers may be increased, in order to assure the necessary income. The hon. sec. is Miss A. Meyer, 33, Clarendon-villas, Brighton.

Good Work at Callander, N.B.

ABOUT this time last year there appeared in these columns, under the above title, a very interesting account of work carried on in that lovely Highland village by two ladies, Mrs. Colonel Robertson and Miss Chenevix-French, assisted by Mr. Bissett, their missionary. One outcome of that story was that many new friends were made, and increasing numbers turned their steps towards this beautiful spot, with its exceptional spiritual privileges.

Some further details may now be given of the work, so that the many interested friends, now living far away and scattered, some of whom received eternal life in the meetings, may be kept assured that the same Lord is still working in the hearts of many.

Some true incidents will best illustrate its character, though, on account of the sensitiveness of many gentle, retiring souls, it must be quite understood that nothing can be said which would hurt their feelings or reveal their identity.

A young lady, a summer visitor, is invited to the Bible-readings; an amused curiosity brings her, for she would like to see how a lady can speak and pray—to her a decidedly novel experience. She is very pretty, and her dress and whole deportment plainly indicate that she belongs to fashionable society—alas! one of many who live, like butterflies, only to amuse themselves with some fresh so-called pleasure each day; or seek some new scene of worldly gaiety in order to drown the immortal cravings within, which God, in mercy, has created in everyone, and which He only can satisfy. She feels compelled to listen; a strange, new power works within her; she leaves the meeting awakened, distressed. The Holy Spirit is moving her, though she knows it not. One of the mission ladies calls on her, finds a roomful, and speaks about the things that belong to God. An awed silence follows; the Spirit comes in power into that little company, with the glorious result that the whole household is truly converted to God, and have continued

BRIGHT WITNESSES FOR THE MASTER.

A young working man comes to the place, is spoken to about his soul, gets converted, and witnesses in the open-air meeting to the reality of the change within. It transpires that he had been prayed for for fourteen years by a godly friend! Thus one sows, another reaps!

A working man, a desperate character, the terror of the neighbours, with a broken-hearted wife and family, starved and ill-treated, is lovingly dealt with, creeps after dark to the meetings, is brought to the Lord; and words cannot adequately describe the change wrought in that once wretched home, and continuing to this day.

Two ladies who, by the Holy Spirit's working in them, experience the blessedness of those who "hunger and thirst after righteousness," make a long journey to Keswick, seeking and hoping to find what they desire so ardently in the Convention there, always fragrant with continued manifestations of the Lord's power, not only to save, but to sanctify. They leave much disappointed, having attended most of the gatherings, yet not meeting with the One whom their soul yearned after. Sad at heart, with their longings increased and deepened, they wend their steps to Callander, where they meet Himself at their first coming to the hall; and again no words can describe their thankfulness to the saving Providence who had guided their footsteps to an unexpected place for blessing.

The above are incidents in connection with this Christian work characteristic of what is going on all the year round, and uninterruptedly. Yet, are the workers satisfied and resting on their oars? Emphatically no! Their spiritual appetites are but whetted more and more; and, being made painfully conscious of the much land that is yet to be possessed everywhere, they seek for the prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that they may be increasingly emptied, and filled with the Holy Ghost, for more abundant service.

Stirling Tract Enterprise.

A PUBLIC meeting in connection with the jubilee of the Stirling Tract Enterprise, founded by the late Mr. Peter Drummond, in 1848, was held in the Albert Hall, Stirling. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. Rev. P. C. Purves, Edinburgh, chairman of the trustees, presided. Mr. John Macfarlane, manager, intimated apologies for absence from Sir George Williams, Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, and many others. Mr. David Drummond, Dublin, brother of the founder of the Enterprise, wrote that owing to his great age, being now in his eighty-fifth year, it would be impossible for him to attend the meeting. He trusted that such interest would be taken in the Enterprise that many would give a wholesome impetus to the good work begun by his late brother. It may have been about 1860 that his brother wrote to him to say he wished to give up devoting much time to the business, as he felt that God had put upon him a work of another kind, and that he intended to devote himself more to the sowing of seed which would bring a rich harvest in the heavenly kingdom. Mr. Macfarlane stated that Mr. Drummond had sent a draft for £100.

After a speech from the chairman, full of interesting reminiscences of helpers who had passed away, Mr. MACFARLANE gave a report embodying the history of the Tract Enterprise. Originated by a busy seedsman, who sought, by the issue of tracts, to counteract the Sabbath desecration prevalent in his time, it grew in his hands to such dimensions that, following what appeared to be the leadings of Providence, Mr. Drummond relinquished the management of the seed business in order to devote himself entirely to the promotion of Evangelical truth through the Press. Beginning with a dozen pigeon-holes, it has risen to such an extent as to require for its accommodation the floor space of six flats, each about 60 by 40 feet. The first tract, which had for its subject "The Sabbath," has been supplemented till now there are fifty bearing upon different aspects of the Lord's Day. Other subjects, such as temperance, horse-racing, the theatre, gambling, swearing, impurity, Popery, etc., have been added. Special issues are addressed to children, to young men and women, to soldiers and sailors, to railway men and policemen, cabmen, navvies and miners, etc., while there are many for anxious inquirers and young Christians. But by far the larger number are evangelistic in their aim.

At the period of Mr. Drummond's death, in 1877, the quantity printed had

AMOUNTED TO 124 MILLIONS.

At that time many thought the Enterprise would be wound up, but, instead, it entered upon a new lease of life. The foundation had been so well laid that the after-results far exceeded the most sanguine expectations. Besides the ordinary publications in English, through the kindness of the late Mr. Cheyne Brady, Mr. H. K. Wood, and others, a large variety of tracts and leaflets in other languages have been added. It was to accommodate these extensive additions to the publications that the premises were enlarged and a debt of £1750 was contracted.

Lord KINNAIRD proposed a resolution, expressing gratitude to God for the many tokens of his favour and blessing graciously vouchsafed to the Stirling Tract Enterprise during the fifty years of its existence. The pioneers of this work had, and those who were now carrying it on, put God first in their work, and that was just what they should have expected. If one had time one could tell from personal knowledge of the great influence of books and tracts. He rejoiced in the colporteur's work. The world believed in the power of the Press, but the Christian world was not one-quarter awake to the power of it. He hoped debt would be quickly cleared off, and that the good example set by Mr. Drummond, of Dublin, would be followed by many others. Rev. Thomas Crerar, of Leith, in seconding the resolution, gave instances from his own experience of how people had been arrested in heart and conscience by tracts from this Enterprise.

Lord OVERTOUN moved another resolution, resolving by watchful interest, earnest prayer, and material aid to encourage and strengthen the Trustees of the Enterprise in their work. One felt the need of turning great literary talents into the service of Jesus Christ. It was thought to be an easy task to write a clear statement of living Gospel truth. He asked them to try to do it themselves. They knew the tons of trash that went out into the world, and they must rejoice that counteracting efforts were being made by the Drummond Tract Enterprise. He trusted there was a greater future before them than even what the past had seen.

Rev. Dr. ELDER CUMMING, Glasgow, seconded the resolution. Of all things to write he did not know of anything more difficult than a good tract. It called for as great skill as any writing of the present day, and there were very few really efficient tract writers.

WHY SHOULD PEOPLE DESPISE TRACTS?

Was not the Bible mostly a collection of tracts and leaflets? The writing and issuing of a tract might seem a little thing to do, but nothing was too small or unimportant in the sight of the Lord, and the great issues of the future depended on the small actions of the present.

After an address by Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, Rev. Dr. JOHN SMITH, Edinburgh, said the spirit in which the managers of the enterprise came before that jubilee gathering did not indicate that they considered it was time to halt because they had done enough. Rather were they desirous of extending their good work to the ever-growing needs of the times, and he heartily endorsed the appeal to deliver them from the incubus of debt. Very often it was the duty of an institution, if it could but see it, to decently die in order that some other agency might take up the work in another way. But this advice could not be tendered with propriety to the Stirling Tract Enterprise. Not on the grounds of sentiment at all, but on the merits of the case, it had not only a claim to live, but a strong demand upon their sympathy and support. He thought that really one of the best works that could be done in our time was to publish a series of tracts that would bring home to Christian people the need of living on the right plane in the power of the Holy Ghost. He did not object to stories, but, with Carlyle, he believed it was the thinnest pipe through which nourishment ever passed to the human soul. A story was the creation of a man, a Christian life was the creation of the Holy Ghost.

The Chairman intimated that Lord Overtoun had given a subscription of £100 toward the clearing off the debt, and another gentleman who did not wish his name stated had given £50. He concluded by referring to the appointment of Rev. Mr. Agnew, Kirkcaldy, as the new editor of the Tract Enterprise.

Navvies in Scotland.

IN a letter with reference to the condition of navvies engaged in railway construction in Perthshire, Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, hon. secretary of the Scottish Navvy Mission Society, writes:—

"The Free Church minister at Blair Athole has had a missionary, specially engaged for the purpose, working for some months among the navvies, and I am informed that his work has not been without good results. The missionary is not one of our own staff, but it was partly in consequence of our action that he was appointed, and I have been informed that he is to be maintained so long as the railway works are in progress.

"Should any of your readers be disposed to send gifts of literature, or otherwise help these poor navvies, we shall be glad to hear from them at our business address, 49, Castle-street, Edinburgh."

Valedictory Missionary Meeting.—A valedictory missionary meeting in connection with the departure of a large number of U.P. missionaries to Jamaica, Old Calabar, and Rajputana was held in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh. Mr. Duncan M'Laren, chairman of the Foreign Mission Board, occupied the chair, and there was a crowded attendance. Brief addresses were delivered by Rev. John Trail and Rev. Dr. Macalister, Rajputana; Rev. W. Steven Smith, Jamaica; and Miss Slessor and Messrs. Shiels and Kerr, Old Calabar. Rev. James Stephenson, Rev. Thos. Anderson, and Rev. J. W. Dunbar also took part in the proceedings.

Aberdeen Forward Movement.

LAST week a public meeting was held in the Free West Church in connection with the East End scheme of the Aberdeen Free Presbytery. Sir William Henderson, who presided, said the meeting had been called for the purpose of advancing the movement which had been commenced in reference to the spiritual needs of their fellow-citizens who resided in the eastern and densely peopled parts of the city, and to show the necessity for rendering help to the congregations located there. In consequence of the recent growth of the population and extended area of building in the city, great changes have taken place. Many had migrated from older houses in the eastern parts to newer houses elsewhere, while a great many of those who had taken up their abode in those localities were virtually churchless; they were surrounded by temptation and vice, and were dying in darkness. It was evident that the congregations were unable of themselves to provide the buildings required for the efficient carrying on of their proper work and of aggressive work around them, as they were almost entirely composed of the classes who depended on small wages. The Presbytery appealed to all who had the good of their fellow-citizens at heart to join in the effort. The amount aimed at was £10,000—for the purpose of forming a fund, to be managed by a committee of the Presbytery.

Dr. Whyte, Edinburgh, after giving some very interesting recollections of his student life in Aberdeen, said:—Why were they convened at this time of day in this country of all countries and churches on the face of the earth? Why were they there wrestling with the tremendous problem not only in the East End of Aberdeen, but in the East End of other towns as well? The East End here and elsewhere did not arise in a day—it did not sink down all at once to its darkness, and poverty, and vice, and sin, and misery. How did they account for it? It was due to

of families, neglect of ministers, neglect of magistrates, in not attending to the public morality and family life of the people under their care. Dr. Whyte referred to the great part which young men could take in this work of helping the dwellers in the East End. Young men should resolve to lay aside some time in the week to form a class, say among the working lads. If they had never tried it they did not know the manly Christian joy that would enter into their hearts as these young lads began to know them on the street, to salute them, and be proud to see them. Let these things be done, and they would remove a scandal from the East End of the city. Lord Overtoun said the

was to deal with the indifference to religion that was being manifested throughout the country. Many from the country districts were being drafted into the towns and cities of their land, and were proving a blessing, but, alas! too many had the opposite effect. The problem of the great cities was a growing and difficult one, and what was to be done with the heathenism at home that wrung their hearts and crippled their efforts? It was a good thing to hold the fort, but he thought the time had come when the Church of God should do a good deal more. They must be aggressive. If a Church was not aggressive, then it would die. Not ministers and not office-bearers, but the rank and file of the Christian Church, were required for this work, and it was high time they were beginning to awaken to the glorious call. The Christian Church was wrangling while men and women were being trampled to death. They should close up their ranks and move into action. They should go to some personal trouble in the matter. The problem of the East End could not be solved by people from the West End going to the people in the East End in a patronising sort of way. They should go to them in a spirit of brotherly love, and lay themselves alongside of them.

Other addresses followed.

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THIS Institute, which occupies the easternmost portion of the fine pile of buildings in Bothwell-street, Glasgow, was opened last week. The Institute has been erected and equipped at a cost of about £50,000, all of which, except a sum of £6680, publicly subscribed, was contributed by the late Mrs. J. E. Somerville and her brother, Lord Overtoun.

The inaugural ceremony was attended by a large gathering. After an opportunity had been given of inspecting the building, a meeting was held in the principal hall. Lord Overtoun, who presided, said that in Scotland, more than in any other place, there was a thorough equipment of theological training for men who were to be ministers and pastors. For long years, however, it had been felt that there was a lack of training for the rank and file of Christian workers, particularly in respect to the systematic study of the Bible and its application. The three great sections of the Church in this country had for years been considering the advisability of training of this kind for young men and young women to serve in the home and foreign mission fields. In view of that desire, it was a great thing that the institution in connection with which they were met was thoroughly unsectarian.

Lord Overtoun reviewed the steps which had led up to the erection of the Institute in connection with the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association. The work of the Institute, he also explained, had been going on for six years in premises in Blythswood-square, and, from having seven students the first year, there were now seventy-four, of whom sixty were men and fourteen women. These students were residential; and, in addition, there were day and evening classes. The cost of training and boarding each student was £45, of which the student was asked to pay £20, the management trusting to the public to provide the remainder. Excellent addresses in furtherance of the work of the Institute were made by Rev. J. E. Somerville, Dr. Stalker, the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Sir Wm. Henderson (of Aberdeen), Principal Rainy, Dr. Alexander Whyte, and others.

Brief Jottings.

THE annual meetings of the Baptist Union of Scotland were held in Glasgow last week. Practical subjects bearing on the Christian life were considered, and the question of missions at home and abroad were not overlooked.

Meetings were held in Edinburgh last week on behalf of the South American Missionary Society and the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. Rev. P. R. Mackay, of Prestonpans, is about to proceed to India for three years, to work in connection with the latter agency.

The Free Church colleges have commenced their winter session. At the opening lecture in Edinburgh Principal Rainy dealt with the Romanising tendencies at work in the Church of England, and said that no community of Christians could be indifferent to the issues at stake. At Glasgow College Professor Lindsay enlarged on the same theme. A memorial window to the late Professors Candlish and Drummond was unveiled. At the opening of the Aberdeen College cordial greetings were given to the new principal, Dr. Salmond.

At the annual meeting of the Grove Street Institute, Glasgow, it was stated that a large measure of success had attended the evangelistic department; in the missions department Bible class the attendances had been larger than for many years past; the women's Bible class and mothers' meeting had an enrolled membership of 250; the work among children continued most encouraging, altogether 1200 boys and girls being reached each week. There were 5921 consultations in the medical mission, and 4705 visits made by the students of the Lady Missionaries' Training Home and of the Medical Training Home.

At the opening of the U.P. Theological Hall, Edinburgh, Principal Hutton lectured on preaching. In the course of his address he said the fashion of the world was too much with the pulpits of their time. Amid much that was thoughtful and cultivated, earnest and attractive, there was lack of proportion, of system, of evangelical substance. There was a tendency to the abeyance of the mysteries, and the pungencies, and the dreadness, aye, and the sweetness, of Christian truth. Preaching concerned itself too much with the so-called interesting, the literary, the realistic or natural, the artificially fresh and original, the egotism rather than the experience of the preacher. They should find, if faithful, what was possible to them by the help of God, but while they might not hope to reach the mastery of some, they ought not to set down as impossible an ultimate good success in preaching without manuscript. He could not think that the millions were to be pricked in their hearts, and roused to the voice of heaven, or heathen lands conquered to Christ, by an evangelism that could only pray by the book or preach from the written page.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE first Sunday in term was marked by the usual service for Freshmen, held in St. Peter-le-Bailey Church. Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, vicar of Tunbridge Wells, the preacher, took as his text, "What then shall I do with Jesus, who is called Christ?" He based on them an appeal which proved most searching to all present.

Mansfield College is seeking in a special way to help the Free Churches in Oxford. A series of Bible readings have been arranged to meet the needs of church workers. The subject chosen is "An Introduction to the Epistles of Paul." The lectures are a part of the Christian Endeavour Union's programme for the winter.

Mr. E. W. Franks, of Mansfield, was ordained last week to missionary work in Calcutta. The service, at which the Principal (Dr. Fairbairn) presided, was a most impressive one.

At a conference of the college secretaries and officers of the Intercollegiate Christian Union, held at Wycliffe Hall, the duties of college secretaries was discussed. Mr. Gairdner, B.C.C.U. travelling secretary, urged that more use should be made of the "Divine quorum" of two in prayer.

Missionary Loan Exhibition. — For some days St. George's Hall, Liverpool, was occupied by a remarkable display of objects from different parts of the world in which missionary work is carried on. The interest which the exhibition excited in the neighbourhood was amply justified by its variety and the care with which it had been organised. The great hall was divided into courts representing Africa, India, Japan, China, Asia Minor, Australia, New Zealand, the Pacific Islands, and North and South America. In each court were products of the special country, the exhibits to some extent, though not entirely, having reference to religious observances. The exhibition was extremely interesting, presenting as it did at a glance an epitome of the chief industries and manufactures of different countries, and school children could hardly receive a more instructive geography lesson than would be provided by a turn round the hall under the guidance of their teachers.

Dr. Parker on Ritualism.

BRIGHTON Dome was crowded on Monday night on the occasion of a meeting of the Federation of Evangelical Free Churches. Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P., who presided, said there was no doubt that the Evangelical party in the Church of England was losing ground, and was no longer in a position to make its influence dominant. In face of the increasing sacerdotalism, it devolved on the Free Churches to maintain a witness to Evangelical Christianity, and for this there must be common action. Free Churches ought to create for themselves a parochial system as certain and effective as that of the Church of England.

Dr. Parker said he was there in distinct hostility to sacerdotalism, which was mischievous, pestilent, a helper of infidelity. Popery was the vilest blasphemy out of hell — the enemy of liberty, of intelligence, of individuality, and of responsibility; the supreme wickedness of the world, the worst effort of the devil. They were told the Church of England was a Protestant Church. He used to think so, but it had not been left for an enemy to charge the Church of England with Romanism. The charge came from within the Church of England herself. The Archbishop of Canterbury had said that some of the rubrics admitted of ambiguity of expression, but there ought to be no ambiguity in Protestantism, and to have such rubrics was running great risks. There was a base kind of Protestantism which sought to hobnob with Rome; but Rome never sought to hobnob with Protestantism. Anglican sacerdotalists worked hard and eagerly devoted themselves to the education of the young and to influencing impressionable minds, and therein they set examples which Protestants should follow.

Having quoted from manuals of confession, Dr. Parker said they were told people who wrote like that were in a minority in the Church of England; but he denied it, and quoted statistics showing the contrary. Anyhow, if they went on at that rate the minority would soon be the majority, and Protestants had to look to that. There was a movement towards disestablishment, and they must increase and hasten it. They would not mind if Ritualists went to Rome, but so long as they remained in the Protestant Church and accepted Protestant pay he said "shame" upon them. They were immoral, dishonest, and their prayers were vanity. The Protestantism of England would have to be roused, as it had been centuries ago, in the face of encroachments so disastrous, terrible, and overwhelming.

A Historic Church.

THE memory and work of one of the great evangelists of last century have been preserved in the Whitefield Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, which is now being rebuilt after a somewhat chequered history in its more recent years. Last Friday afternoon the "foundation stones" of the new structure were laid, Dr. Joseph Parker re-laying as one of them the original stone laid by Whitefield in 1756. There was a very large and thoroughly representative gathering, in which most sections of the Church took a share, not excluding the Church of England.

The present pastor of the church, Rev. George A. Suttle, spoke earnestly of the Evangelical basis on which the work is still being carried on. Mr. H. E. Gaze, one of the officers of the church, read a deeply interesting statement of the troubles through which the congregation had passed owing to the failure of the old building. Dr. Parker delivered an admirable address, full of reminiscences and appreciations of Whitefield and his work as a pastor-evangelist. Sir George Williams, Mr. A. Bywaters, and Mr. G. F. Welch laid additional foundation stones, and the first named contributed 100 guineas to the building fund. Altogether about £1000 were subscribed at the gathering towards the £7000 yet needed for the cost of the new Tabernacle and a lecture-hall beneath, which is to be named after Augustus Toplady (the author of "Rock of Ages"), whose body is interred within the building.

Addresses full of hearty sympathy were also given by various leading ministers of different denominations, and it is hoped that a new and long career of usefulness is before this historic church and congregation.

Letters to the Editor.

The Breaking of Bread and New Year's Prayer Meetings. The writer of two of the letters of August 11 and October 6 has printed them, together with a few additional remarks. Copies for distribution may be obtained freely on application by letter to "S.," Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.

"General Servant."

Sir,—I asked my general servant (who has been with me more than six years) why so few girls are willing to go as general servants. She answered, "Because they can't get out so much of an evening, and go to amusements and lark about with young men as if they worked at a factory or laundry." As she has three sisters who have left service for laundry work, she knows something about the matter. She added, too: "They have to work much harder, too, than a 'general' does—my sisters are at work before I get up; and they have to keep on at it, which I don't—but they like the company, and the gossip, and the dress, and not having to be over particular in their talk."

I asked her if she thought many girls in service worked fourteen hours a day, and she quite laughed at the idea. "Oh, no!" she said; "they may begin early and leave off late, but they are not at work all the time; there's a little chat with the tradesmen at the door; there's changing your dress, and doing up your hair; there's trying on or trimming a hat, tidying one's clothes, sewing, mending, reading letters, and writing them, reading books, etc.; and then there's errands to be done, that's amusement."

I asked her why so few were qualified to be "general," and she said, "Well, ma'am, by the time a girl's qualified to be a good general she's got a home of her own to go to!" (She is to be married herself soon.) I asked her why, when she is as good a cook as she is a housemaid, she preferred being a "general," and she said, "Because I could always be sure of a good mistress; my trials came from my fellow servants. I could not lend myself to their deceits and idle ways."

I may add I gave her as wages £12 to commence, and have raised her £1 a year since; we have never had a misunderstanding, much less a quarrel; we consider each other, and she goes out four times a week. —Yours truly, A Medical Man's Wife.

A Temperance Crusade.

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting of temperance workers was held at Exeter Hall, Strand, on Monday evening to welcome Rev. Leonard M. Isitt, of New Zealand, who is visiting London for the purpose of conducting a fortnight's "temperance crusade," organised by the London Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance. Mr. Thomas Smith, president of the London Auxiliary, who occupied the chair, said that Mr. Isitt had rendered valuable service to the temperance cause in New Zealand, and his object in visiting this country was to revive interest in the movement here.

Mr. J. Kempster said the object of the mission was to arouse London to a due sense of the enormity of the evil of the drink traffic and the necessity for removing that evil. Dr. Dawson Burns expressed the belief that under Mr. Isitt's guidance the ensuing crusade would be an unprecedented and continuous success. Mr. John Hilton and Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., also spoke.

Rev. L. M. Isitt, in reply, said that he and his friends were fighting the vilest, the most unscrupulous, the most cruel, and the most gigantic evil that had ever cursed a Christian and civilised country, and they were determined that sooner or later that evil should be removed. The people of this country should have the right to say whether they wanted liquor bars in their midst or not. As to compensation, he came from a country where the question was dead and buried, and, whatever difficulties might be raised in their path, the question could never again be revived.

Danzig.—On Wednesday, October 19, a Seamen's Institute was opened here, being the first of a number proposed by the South-East Baltic Harbour Mission. The institute comprises four well-lighted, cheerful rooms, close by the river side, plainly furnished, and will be open regularly to all seamen. Religious services will be held on Sundays and at other times. Books, music, newspapers, and help towards general expenses will be gladly received by the missioner at the Institute, per E. F. Scofield, British Chaplain, Memel, Germany.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS GOSS.

By the death of Rev. Thomas Goss, vicar St. Mary Magdalene's, Peckham, a much-loved and earnest worker is removed from the midst of a people whose affection had readily been won by his simple goodness. The funeral was very largely attended. His memory, says a writer in The Record, will long live in the hearts of the many who had learnt to love him as a pastor and friend. Firmly attached to distinctly Evangelical principles, he fully preached the Gospel of God, and had great gifts as a preacher and expositor.

MRS. GORDON, DINGWALL.

We regret to have to record the death of Mrs. Gordon, wife of Mr. James Gordon, ex-Chief-Constable of Ross and Cromarty. The deceased lady was foremost in every effort that tended to advance temperance and missionary work, her husband being himself an enthusiast in both directions. She was one of the principal supporters and workers in connection with the local zenana working parties of the town branch of the Dingwall Presbyterian Auxiliary of the Free Church Zenana Missions. Her death will be deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends throughout the country.

REV. W. THOMSON, GLASGOW.

We regret to announce the sudden death of Rev. William Thomson, minister of Plantation U.P. Church, Glasgow. The circumstances attending his demise were of a peculiarly pathetic nature. Special services were held in Plantation U.P. Church on Sunday in connection with the semi-jubilee of the minister. Mr. Thomson preached at the forenoon diet, and in the evening exchanged pulpits with Dr. Corbett, of Camphill. He did not then exhibit symptoms of illness, and he made no complaint when he returned home after the evening service. He retired to his bedroom at the usual hour, and apparently in good health; but next morning he was found in an unconscious condition, and soon thereafter passed peacefully away. He was seventy years of age. Mr. Thomson was appointed to the charge at Plantation twenty-five years ago. A conversazione was to have been held in the church, and presentations made by his congregation, who held him in high esteem.

MR. J. F. FAWCKNER, NEWPORT, MON.

With sorrow we record the departure of our dear friend Mr. J. F. Fawckner, of the firm of Messrs. Habershon and Fawckner, architects, of High-street, Newport. For the last two years he had been in failing health. The cause of death is believed to be heart disease. Naturally of a retiring disposition, he did not seek public honours, neither did he take part in politics. He, however, interested himself in spiritual and philanthropic movements, and was a warm friend of young men. He was the founder of the Newport Y.M.C.A. Through Mr. Fawckner's instrumentality the present premises of the Association in Commercial-street were built, at a cost of £4000. The deceased, who leaves a widow, two sons, and two daughters, was 70 years of age.

The front ranks are being thinned. Three prominent and invaluable witnesses of Christ, who, like their Lord, went about doing good, have been called home during the past twelve months—Mr. J. R. Hall, Rev. Mr. Ayliffe, and now Mr. Fawckner, fellow workers in the same town. Three more useful men could not have been taken from the midst of the kindred spirits with whom they had long laboured. May their mantles fall on others.

Grapeshot for False Gods.—The King of Nepaul, an independent state to the north of Bengal, recently lost his wife. Having been frightfully disfigured by smallpox, the queen committed suicide. Furious at his loss, the king avenged himself upon the native doctors. They were beaten unmercifully, their right ears being also cut off, and their noses mutilated. Not satisfied with this, the king directed his wrath against the gods. He had cannons ranged in front of the images and ordered soldiers to fire. Fearing consequences arising from the vengeance of the gods, the troops refused. Thereupon the king had several of them executed. Others submitted to the will of the king, and in the twinkling of an eye the entire pantheon was destroyed!

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Mission Work at Gibraltar.

AMONGST the mission needs at home and abroad little is thought of Gibraltar, our nearest colony, and our own Spanish-speaking fellow-subjects. Among its dense population about seven years ago Miss Squire, who had gone out through Mrs. Hannington to start English Y.W.C.A. work, began to do what she could. We, who knew "The Rock" at that time, can perhaps appreciate better than most the quiet growth of seed planted in such arid soil.

Both inside and outside the gates there is much cause for thankfulness and hope. Those who help forward this handful of workers are in some small measure helping to remove the reproach to our country for long neglect. Yearly reports of the work can be had from Miss Squire, 90. Huntingdon-road, E. Finchley, London, N.

The little mission has now reached a stage when the need is felt for an ordained minister. Rev. J. L. M. Murray, who has already been among the Spanish people, has lately had the matter under prayerful consideration, and at the same time very suitable premises have been offered which would combine a mission building and a dwelling-house for the workers. These have been engaged by Miss Squire, who now writes that Mr. and Mrs. Murray "are going to Gibraltar shortly, and will join our mission, living with us and paying the cost of their board." This step involves greater expense. Perhaps some readers may be moved to help.

A Working Girl's Gift.

WE recently inserted an appeal on behalf of the sufferers from the West Indian hurricane. The following touching lettter will, we trust, stimulate many to have a share in relieving the distress of those whose claim upon such sympathy is great, although they live beyond the seas.

Mr. G. Sutherland, 84, Longbridge-road, Barking, will forward help given.

"I read your appeal in The Christian for the sufferers from the terrible hurricane, and wondered if I could help, but did not see that I could much, being only 'a working girl,' when I remembered a half-sovereign with which I was this week going to buy a new jacket, so I concluded, after praying about it, to make the old one do and send you the money. A friend has given me 2s. 6d., so with gladness I am able to send you 12s. 6d. In acknowledging put it down as 'Gold and Incense,' for it was reading that little book by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse that helped me to decide my sending."

A Cheerful Note from Spain.—At two o'clock in the early morning of a recent October day a party of some twenty people, all evangelical workers, met on the platform of the busy Cordova junction, coming from Malaga, Seville, Granada, Rio Tinto, Huelva, and other centres, and eleven off to Biarritz, nine of whom, Andalusian young women, were proceeding to the International Institute of the American Board, owing to Dr. Gulick's kind consideration as to terms. We trust the people of England will consider this interesting fact, and do yet more for Spain. Already God's ravens have brought help from Chester, and I am looking upwards confidently for more to come.

A Bishop on Tramp.—The Bishop of Delaware has (says The New York World) just gone through numerous and extraordinary adventures on country roads in the garb of a tramp. Unknown and in coarse apparel, he walked a distance of 235 miles recently in the mountains of West Virginia, stopping where night overtook him, and frequently doing hard labour for his food and lodging. Sometimes he went hungry, and slept in barns or under the friendly cover of some tree. Once, late at night, having been denied shelter in a sparsely settled region, he climbed into the window of a deserted school-house and found his rest on the hard floor. This was the bishop's idea of taking a novel holiday and gaining new insights into life.

Missions in India.

UNDER the auspices of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, a meeting was held on Thursday at Exeter Hall, Strand, to take farewell of a number of missionaries about to leave for Western India, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab. Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, said the outgoing missionaries numbered thirteen, of whom eight were returning after furlough, and five were going out for the first time.

Lord Kinnaird, one of the treasurers of the mission, who has lately returned from a six months' stay in India, delivered an address, in the course of which he pointed to the great progress made in that country during the past twenty-five years. The thing which struck him most in India, on returning after a quarter of a century's absence, was the great increase in the educational work among girls. Many doors had been opened for Christian workers, and with regard to many of them the Church was slowly waking up to some of its responsibilities. He did not think, however, that enough was done for the comfort and health of the missionaries who went there. It was a time of great responsibility. The people of India were stretching out their hands for help, and God was speaking to them in a way that He had never spoken before.

Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird formally introduced the outgoing missionaries. She said that owing to the difficulties which had been experienced in raising funds the mission was only able to send out a few new missionaries to occupy places which were vacant through the sickness of others who had had to come home on furlough; and all idea of opening up new districts, where requests for missionaries had been numerous, had had to be abandoned for the present. Miss Kimmins (who is about to return to Bombay to take charge of the Girgaum Girls' High School) and several of the other outgoing missionaries afterwards addressed the meeting. A valedictory address to the outgoing missionaries was delivered by Rev. F. S. Webster, who took for his text the words, "Looking unto Jesus" (Hebrews xii. 2).

Among the Gonds.

SOME four years ago Mr. John Lampard commenced working, unsupported by any society, in a district where but few Europeans had ever been seen, amongst the primitive tribes of the Gonds and Baigas, in the province of Balaghat, in the Central Provinces of India. His work has been signally blessed of the Lord, and he now has a little church of about fifty adult members, all of them the fruit of his personal labours. In addition to this, he has twenty orphans who were left on his hands after the late famine, all of whom he has to maintain.

Mr. Lampard has from time to time obtained co-labourers; some of them stayed for a time, and then, unable to put up with the privations and isolation of the position, left to labour elsewhere. Two workers have, however, remained steadfast, and are greatly assisting him: he has also married a lady of much experience in aggressive missionary work. Another worker is very much needed, having the true missionary spirit of devotion and courage.

The private gifts which have heretofore been sent to Mr. Lampard by his friends are insufficient to provide for the increased establishment, and funds are needed to help forward the mission, which is highly recommended by Colonel Bloomfield (late of Balaghat), Mr. W. S. Caine, Mr. A. H. L. Fraser, C.S.I., late Commissioner of Nagpore, C.P., India, and others. Communications may be addressed to Miss Lampard, 114, Clapton-common, N.E.

Upper Assam.—In a letter from Ledo, by Margherita, Upper Assam, India, Mr. T. Miller Johnson says:—"The work of the Lord is progressing steadily in this remote corner. A friend and I are working here under the Arthington Aborigines Mission. We are really working amongst an aboriginal tribe known as the Singphoes, but we are compelled to live here as we cannot get permission to live amongst the Singphoes. Ledo is a needy field. Here are some 7000 Coolies, and no Christian missionary. We have opened a day school and Sunday school, and have indoor and outdoor preaching among the Coolies; but we cannot do much, as the Singpho work takes nearly all our time."

On the Confines of Tibet.

MR. JAI BHAI, of the Indian Christian Realm Mission, writes that the north-eastern village of Ghoom, where sickness has compelled him to seek a brief rest, is close to the frontiers of three great lands, Nepaul, Tibet, and Bhutan, closed to the Gospel—probably the only three countries whence European missionaries are excluded.

The Nepalese strike one as a specially teachable people. Among those who have settled in the British territory, the Scottish Mission has a large and successful work. The people of Bhutan appear less susceptible than some splendid Tibetans who have been met. A revival of western so-called Buddhism has delayed the spread of Christianity among them.

The chief outward signs of Buddhism in the district are the "prayer flags," long strips of cloth twenty feet by two, inscribed with prayers and religious sayings. Each flap of the flag is supposed to waft a prayer to heaven. Even in this out-of-the-way part of the world the Lord has been drawing the Hindoos and others to Himself. In small cottage gatherings many have sought salvation. Three Tibetan Buddhists were kneeling in prayer on a recent Sunday night.

Mrs. Jai Bhai has established an interesting Sunday-school. Adults attend as well as children, and several women have sought the Lord. The little bazaar has been heard ringing with Christian hymns, and native women—for the first time, it is believed, in Ghoom—have spoken for the Lord. The converts have undertaken to subscribe towards the support of a worker in an unmissioned district near by. Much of the amount will represent money saved from drink and tobacco.

Will friends pray for blessing on the work, and that the three dark lands referred to may be speedily opened up to the Gospel? Communications may be addressed to the Mission's London secretary, Mr. H. Page, 35, Tollington-road, N.

A Good Word for Missionaries.

THE British Consul at Fu-chow (Mr. Carles) concludes his last report on the trade of his district by a reference to missionary work there. He says that the direct result of the Hwasang massacre was a large increase in the staff of the Church Missionary Society and of the Zenana Mission, which together now number about 100 missionaries. Simultaneously the number of Chinese who professed to be anxious to embrace Christianity was largely increased, and, although the number of would-be converts has since decreased, the stimulus imparted did not entirely die away, and the missionary body has not failed to utilise it. How far the policy of opening stations in remote parts of the province may be prudent is, he observes, an open question, but undoubtedly our commercial interests are advanced by their presence in districts never visited by merchants. It is not only that English goods required to supply the missionaries' wants are thus brought to the notice of the natives in inland districts, but that Chinese are gradually becoming accustomed to the sight of Europeans, and with custom their hostility decreases.

Very valuable work is being done by the American missions, which more especially devote their attention towards education in the English language and Western matters. In Fu-chow alone some 500 boys are being trained by their means, and those who go through the course of six years' training are fitted for work, and in wider fields of usefulness.

The McAll Mission.—Gospel work on the Riviera is carried on by many Christian agencies. Visitors to Cannes are asked to communicate with Monsieur Bethune, 11, Boulevard Carnot, of the McAll Mission, who will be very thankful for helpers during this winter. Ladies will find an interesting sphere of service in the meetings and schools. Helpers will also be welcomed at Grasse and at Nice. For details and addresses of the mission halls, please write to the office in Paris, 36, Rue Godot de Mauroy. W. Soltau.

Poona and Indian Village Mission.—A party of six ladies—Miss Sharp and Miss Burder, from Mrs. Menzies' Training Home, Liverpool; Miss Weir, from the Ladies' Training Home, Glasgow; Miss Knights, from Mildmay; Nurse Bostrup, from Denmark; Miss Binns, Bethesda, Sunderland—are going out with Mr. Reeve, the director of the Poona and Indian Village Mission, to India, to work in connection with that Mission. On arriving at Colombo they hope to join another party from Australia, also going out to join the Mission in Poona.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. J. A. Faithfull, of St. Mary Magdalene's, Islington, is appointed rector of Whitechapel.

The Bishop of London gave an address on "Reverence" on Sunday last at the Polytechnic Institution.

The Archbishop of York has issued in his diocese a letter appealing for £10,000, or £2000 in each of the next five years, for the work of church extension.

The new mission building in the parish of St. Mark, Dalston, to be opened on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 5, will comprise accommodation for mission services, mothers' meetings, Bands of Hope, working men's club-rooms, Church Lads' Brigade-room, gymnasium, and soup kitchen.

With only about five exceptions the whole of the deans of the English cathedrals arrived in Canterbury on Thursday, in response to the invitations issued by Dean Farrar for an autumn gathering similar to that held last year in London. They attended divine service at the cathedral, and a meeting was subsequently held in the library for the interchange of views on cathedral matters.

In the parish church of New Mill, near Tring, a Sunday morning service has been started for young people, at which, says the parish magazine, "elder persons will be welcome, especially fathers, who are not wanted at home any more than the children during the cooking of the Sunday dinner, and who could thus spend the hours of God's day more profitably than lying in bed or lounging about the roads."

The Bishop of Liverpool has forbidden Mr. Wilkins, curate of St. Thomas's, Toxteth Park, to hear confession except in the special case of "sick persons" who "of their own free will desire to unburden themselves of any weighty matter on their conscience." The vicar (Rev. Ernest Underhill) has also undertaken to cease circulating the catechism and other books of which complaint has been made, and to avoid the use of "holy water."

Mrs. Everard Milman finds at the North London Ladies' Settlement that numbers of lady parochial workers could be obtained if free board and lodging could be offered. Mrs. Milman urges that many unable themselves to do active Church work might give to their more able-bodied sisters the means of obtaining such board and lodging. Several very poor, hard-worked parishes in North London are waiting for workers. Letters on the subject should be addressed Governor's House, Camden-road, N.

Congregational.

Rev. Dr. Fairbairn sails for India to-day (27th), and will probably be away till near the end of the next Oxford term. During Dr. Fairbairn's absence, Professor Massie will act as head of Mansfield College.

Mr. F. Higgins, who for eight years has been labouring as resident evangelist in connection with Reigate Church, has been ordained assistant minister in charge of the South Park branch. Rev. G. Currie Martin (pastor) presided.

A residence of Sir Isaac Newton is now the property of Orange-street Church, Leicester-square. The lower part of the house is used for school and mission purposes, such as French services, Sunday-school, mothers' meetings, poor children's dinners, pleasant hours for young people, social gatherings for theatrical employés, etc.

At Cavendish Chapel, Manchester, the Wednesday evening service, which has been held in an upper room in the school buildings, has been transferred to the chapel. The organist and choir attend, and the pastor, Rev. Dr. Leach, conducts the service from his pulpit. The service is made a quiet hour of rest, devotion, and Bible exposition.

At a special meeting last week Miss Annie Grierson was set apart for foreign mission work in South India by the church at Mount View, Stroud-green, N., which has been her spiritual home under the ministry of Rev. E. Griffith-Jones, now of Balham. Miss Grierson has been engaged in varied forms of Christian service both before and since her decision to become a missionary under the L.M.S.

At the half-yearly meeting of the London Congregational Union, held in the Queen's Hall, Dr. Horton, the chairman, said the Church of Rome and Churches which walked in her footsteps forbade their adherents to think, lest their allegiance should be lost. Their Church, on the other hand, entreated their adherents to think. It was founded on the New Testament; and the task they set themselves from that foundation was to save London, to co-operate in cordial sympathy and appreciation with every other Church of Jesus Christ.

Baptist.

Rev. A. H. Patrick (Redhill) has declined an invitation to the pastorate of the Wellington-street Church, Luton.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon was recently presented with £454 as a help in the rebuilding of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, by six Sunday-school teachers on behalf of their classes and schools.

In connection with Circus-street Church, Nottingham, it has been decided to hold Sunday services in the Albert Hall, which holds 2,500 persons. The committee hope in this way to induce the attendance of some of the non-church-going multitude.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare closed his ministry at St. Mary's, Norwich, on Sunday evening, preaching from the text from which he preached when he commenced his work in that church more than fifteen years before—1 Cor. iii. 11, "For other foundation can no man lay," etc.

Rev. H. E. Stone has, for the fourth year in succession, invited several village pastors and their wives to three days' conference at Abbey-road Church, London. A numerous company assembled, representing Bucks, Beds, Herts, and Norfolk. The Abbey-road congregation met the entire expenses of the conference.

Methodist.

Warrington Primitive Methodist Church is asking the General Missionary Committee to open a mission in a new and rapidly growing part of the town.

The anniversary of the South London Wesleyan Mission has been held with success. Revs. J. H. Hopkins, H. T. Meakin, and G. Campbell Morgan took part.

The work at the Glasgow North-west Wesleyan Mission is flourishing. A regular Sunday evening overflow meeting in the Masonic Hall has become a necessity.

Thursday, November 10, has been fixed for the festival in connection with the opening of Wesley's House as a Methodist Museum and Residence for Christian Workers.

The new Wesleyan Home Mission car for Beds, Bucks, and Northants has been dedicated by Rev. H. E. Thompson. The car is the gift of Sir Frederick Howard, Bedford.

At St. Albans Wesleyan Church special sermons have been preached in connection with "Children's Sunday." At the communion-rail and in the minister's vestry inquirers were led to Christ.

At the jubilee services held in connection with the Wesleyan Mission at New North-road Chapel, London, under the direction of Rev. Arthur Wood, there were large attendances, and the sum of £800 was raised.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., in a recent address, in which he referred to the "Million" scheme, read a letter, which ran: "You will be interested to know that the first subscriber in our town to the Century Fund is an old man over eighty who lives in an almshouse, and has an income of about 6s. per week. He has paid his guinea, and desires his name to be entered on the roll as 'A Friend.'"

Presbyterian.

Rev. H. C. Wilson, who has been pastor of Eastbourne Presbyterian Church for about twenty years, has announced his intention to resign.

Miss Mary Brodie has left Edinburgh as a medical missionary to India in connection with the Free Church of Scotland Women's Foreign Missionary Society.

Rev. T. R. Mackray, pastor of Victor-street Church, Grimsby, has just completed seven years of ministry, and the anniversary of his induction has been celebrated by special services.

The funeral of Dr. John Hall, in New York, was preceded by a service in the Fifth Avenue Church. The New York Observer states that the tributes were tender, dignified, and truthful, and in every way worthy of the greatest preacher in the Presbyterian Church.

Lord Balfour of Burleigh laid the memorial-stone of a new church, to be called St. Ninian's, in the Mile-end district of Aberdeen. The building is to cost £6000, and is one of the three new churches included in the scheme of the Church Extension Association.

Rev. W. M. Roger, of Montreal, a deputy from the Canadian Presbyterian Church, has addressed gatherings in London in support of the work among the Catholic French Canadians. Mr. Roger explains that the times are critical. Under the influence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the French Canadians are breaking loose from the domination of their priests.

Chalmers Free Church has been opened by Rev. Dr. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh. In the solemn dedication the following impressive words occurred: "I pronounce this building to be nothing else but the house of God, and I pronounce it open to the service and glory of God, for the conversion of sinners and the edification and comfort of God's people."

For the fourth time in its history of less than a quarter of a century the congregation at Wood Green has been called upon to increase its accommodation. A new aisle and gallery have been added to the church, and will provide 180 more sittings. The service at the memorial-stone laying was presided over by Rev. D. Macrae, moderator of the Presbytery and minister of the church.

Hop-pickers in Herefordshire.—Miss Rose Moore writes:—"For several years I have had a mission amongst the people who swarm into this district (King's Pyon, Herefordshire) during the hop-picking time. This year I was enabled to go further afield, as I spoke in five different parishes. There were Welsh, Irish, and Frenchmen, ex-soldiers, and several who knew what terms of imprisonment meant. I had some specially good meetings amongst gipsies and caravan people, who were most appreciative. On the whole I never met with greater readiness to hear, or such a thirst for the Word of Life. Some of the men shed tears, and all pressed forward to receive books. The farmers were most kind. I was told that I could do little in such a short time, but God has blessed the work in former years, and some of my hop-pickers are now living surrendered lives, so I went on in faith and hopefulness."

It has been suggested that the tercentenary of the birth of Oliver Cromwell, which falls next April, should be made the occasion of a national demonstration. The National Free Church Council will probably take the initiative.

£20,000 is already collected for the Gladstone Memorial.—The late Rev. E. J. Foreign.

Under the rule of Tammany, New York is reported to be "wide open" to municipal corruption.

Persistent rain in Canada for the last four weeks has ruined from one-third to one-half of the wheat crop.

Great activity prevails in French naval and military depôts. It is supposed to relate to the Fashoda difficulty.

In Constantinople the German Emperor and Empress have been accorded a warm welcome by the Sultan and his people.

£22,500 have been collected at two meetings held in the Gospel Tabernacle, New York, when Rev. A. B. Simpson pleaded for the evangelisation of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. Great enthusiasm prevailed.

"Massage" and Immorality.—Remarking on a recent prosecution, The Hospital says:—"The advertisements which appear in certain papers and disgrace the streets in which strangers and the wealthy idle mostly congregate, do infinite harm in every way. To those of vicious tendencies, but ignorant of vice's ways, they serve as an introduction to a downward course, while to the well-to-do and respectable malade imaginaire they are mere traps set by the blackmailer. Why they should have been permitted for so long, and why, under the name of 'massage,' disreputable persons masquerading as 'nurses' should have been allowed so openly to ply such a trade, is a mystery. English liberty, however, is a cloak for much that is evil."

"The Catacombs of Rome" is the subject of a deeply interesting lecture which Mr. H. M. Barnett, B.A., has delivered before several audiences, with lantern illustrations. A few days ago a goodly gathering of members and friends of the Christian Community had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Barnett's description of the wonderful city of the dead, and listened with sustained attention to the story of Christian fidelity amidst severe persecution. The sculptured portrayal of Bible incidents shows the high esteem in which God's Word was held, and the symbols of faith and hope have much to teach us of the people and their attitude towards Christ. Mr. Barnett made frequent reference to the book on the Catacombs written by the late Mr. Benjamin Scott, City Chamberlain, and published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ON a subsequent page we give the detailed programme of the Convention on Home Missions convened in Exeter Hall for Nov. 16-18 by the Central Y.M.C.A. We hope many readers will keep the dates free of other engagements, in order to be present at some of these interesting gatherings.

No sadder sight is seen on the thoroughfares of any city than in Piccadilly and Regent-street by night. These lost sisters of ours—some beautiful and sprightly, some quiet and modest-looking, some painted to look young some rude and boisterous, English, French, German, Belgian—are they all victims of, betrayed affection or of their own vicious behaviour? By no means. They are the goods, the merchandise of a secret but organised traffic, not as difficult or dangerous as it ought to be, carried on by the agents of Satan. The perpetual supply creates the demand, and the unceasing demand produces the supply. And the cruel conspiracy of silence plays into the hands of barbarous women and savage men who hunt for the precious life. We commend to all parents and guardians and friends of girls the information given in the article on 'White Slaves" (p. 16).

We are glad to note that some, at any rate of the Free Church Councils are insisting that their work lies along distinctively spiritual and evangelistic lines. The organ of the Council in the Midlands says :—

> Our mission as councils is constructive; we seek to proclaim "the truth as it is in Jesus," to win men from sin to the service of Christ. We believe that strength and effort expended in promotion of right views and right living is far more fruitful than that spent in opposing any excessive development of wrong views. It is simply a question of common sense—are we likely sooner to win the masses of those outside by attacking the worship of those from whom we differ, or by presenting the simple Gospel truths as we hold them?

Let all the councils adopt the same view and fall into line. Then they will become a power indeed.

In Dr. Parker's eloquent appreciation of George Whitefield as a preacher, delivered at the laying of the foundation-stone of the new tabernacle in Tottenham-court-road, he laid much stress on the fact that he was "a great catcher of souls." He called his tabernacles "soul-traps." His one burning, over-mastering ideal was to bring conviction to the heart of men by preaching the message of the Gospel. Probably there never was a great pulpit orator who turned the whole of his magnificent gifts so entirely into the one channel of appeal and persuasion as Whitefield. His motto was, "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." It would be a mighty addition to the effective force of the pulpit if modern preachers dealt less with subjects and more with souls. The "peroration" is, mercifully, a thing of the past. Is there not some danger lest the same be true of the "appeal"?

The one weakness in Whitefield's methods—it has often been pointed out—was that he could deal successfully only with individuals, and that he had no gift for organisation. Here he was certainly vastly inferior to his friend and colleague Wesley. But it is scarcely fair, on this ground, to draw a contrast between the two men unfavourable to Whitefield. Their work was complementary: what one could not do the other could; and together they were the chief means used by God for starting one of the most remarkable and most beneficent movements of modern times—the great Methodist revival, which has done so much to uplift and purify the world during the last century, and whose glorious effects are felt far beyond the limits of the Church which derived its existence from their united labours. The Gospel needs many forms of service, many types of servants. The evangelist, the minister, the pastor, the organiser—they all have their place, and if they were ranged in order of importance, the evangelist would certainly not hold the lowest place.

It is a secular paper, The Daily News, which, in speaking of some street outrages, says :—

> The contrast between the thoughtlessness at one end of the scale and the bestial brutality and vice at the other is an awfully serious sign of the times.

Thoughtlessness implies a selfishness, a self-conceit, a heartlessness which is more inaccessible to Christian influence than even the degraded animalism of the slums. Would that for these times we had someone with the moral power of Savonarola and the evangelistic fervour of Whitefield. Our need reminds us of the Master's instructions: "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into the harvest."

The Conference of Women Workers at Norwich merits a word of hearty commendation. The purpose of the congress is the betterment of their sex in every human relationship, and through that the improvement of the condition of the people. Such leaders as Lady Battersea and Mrs. Booth wield considerable influence for good, and the interest they have manifested in all the proceedings of the convention has been most valuable. The practical nature of the subjects debated gave the conference a distinctly progressive character. There was much in Lady Battersea's treatment of the "Amenities of Life" that may be made to affect the carrying out of useful work.

The greater part of the sittings dealt with improvement in the position of children. This alone is of high moral and religious importance. The children of any community are open to influences that will either make or mar their future. Any help rendered, therefore, to those responsible for the training of the young in any department of usefulness is of supreme concern.

The need of securing the attendance of children at elementary schools is seen in the fact that nearly all the "hooligan" gangs that strike terror into the population of South London are drawn from the great unschooled class, i.e., those who were habitual truants during their school days. It is time the magistrates grappled with this problem, for, according to evidence laid before the London School Board, it is almost impossible to get many of them to convict in cases where parents are brought before them by attendance officers. The result is, as Mr. Macnamara showed, that those who need the schools most see least of them. It is surely little less than a disgrace that there are between 150,000 and 200,000 children who ought to be at school, but are not there, and that in spite of the fact that £50,000 is spent by the London School Board alone in trying to secure attendance.

The more light is thrown on the customs of the early Christians as regards the Lord's Supper, the more clearly is the sacerdotal doctrine as to its nature shown to be a late perversion of its real meaning. Prof. Drew, of Jena, has just published a learned article on the subject, in which he shows (1) that Christ did not institute the ordinance as a ritual law; (2) the Supper was at first attached to the Jewish Sabbath meal, "which included the blessing of bread and wine"; (3) till the second century the Eucharist was partaken of in the evening. It was the latter change which made the idolatrous doctrine of the Mass possible. What is spoken of by Ritualists as the "heresy of evening Communion" is thus only a return to the simplicity of primitive Christian times, when the exact "mind of the Lord" on the question would be in the unmistakable possession of the Church. A little clear grasp of history sweeps away many a cobweb of superstition and error.

If it is true, as Dr. Leach, of Manchester said at a recent gathering, that there are 500 Congregational ministers who are anxious for a change of pastorate, it is clear that there is something thoroughly wrong in the relations of pastors and churches. Such widespread unrest is incompatible with the proper performance of pastoral and pulpit duties. It suggests a wrong attitude towards the work of the ministry, which is the saving of souls, and not the securing of a "comfortable" sphere of labour. The evil is accentuated by the temper of many vacant churches, who will not look at the claims of such men as are anxious to change their pastorates, but endeavour to secure the services of such as are happy and useful where they are. No mere official device for securing the easier removal of ministers from one church to another is likely to meet the situation. What is wanted is a truer realisation of the opportunities of service anywhere on the one side, and a more earnest spirit of co-operation on the other.

We are told that three-fourths of the energy in coal is lost during the process of transformation into electricity, and that experiments are being made with a view to remedy this defect, and to turn the latent heat directly into electric force. There is in the spiritual world a great deal of similar waste going on. Charitable institutions are obliged to fritter away a considerable proportion of their income in the mere process of collecting it. The overlapping of Christian agencies and denominations absorbs a vast amount of effort and service which is simply lost for all practical purposes. All this goes on in face of the crying calls of the world for spiritual work and generosity. Is there no way of obviating this waste?

The remedy for this widespread hindrance to effective Christian work is in a clearer realisation of the law of Christian responsibility on the part of believers. There should be enough active love and desire to serve our Lord and Master to urge us to something better than a passive mood which waits to be stirred up before it will put forth its latent energy, and asks for all kinds of incidental incentives and motives to be brought to bear on the heart before its generous impulses will act. "The love of Christ constraineth us," says the Apostle, in whom it awoke a response that made him withhold nothing and give all. He bore all his sufferings, and gave his untiring service because the love of God had been shed abroad in his heart through the Holy Ghost which was given him (Rom. v. 5). We need to realise this mighty force in our own hearts more abundantly nowadays. Then there would be little of this lamentable "waste" ere the fires of devotion could be kindled and the streams of all beneficent activity begin to flow.

God said, "Let light be," and light was. He could have created everything in the same way. Our railways and telegraphs and telephones, all the applications of advanced science that have been or shall be made, could have been created by a word from God. On the contrary, how patiently and how wisely He has waited, educating his human creature from the reed-pipe to the organ, from the packhorse to the railway train, from the Stone Age to the nineteenth century!

Is there no lesson here for men of gift and age and experience? It is more like God to teach others than to do everything yourself; to reproduce in them your own capacity and skill; not merely to leave footprints on the sands of time, but to sow living seed which will bring forth fruit in men of like passions and like powers with yourself.

And if this be true in material things, how far more important is it in regard to spiritual and eternal things. The idea of providing one man to do all the spiritual work of a church, and much outside work beside, is surely not of God. The angel, the bishop, the overseer of a church should find his most important work in studying its members, young and old—their gifts, their capacities, their characters; directing, counselling, encouraging, employing them, so that everyone should feel that he is a minister called, qualified, and empowered to exercise and to minister the gift that God has given him.

The secret of success in all spiritual work is whole-hearted consecration. Men and women who touch the sacred ark of service must be entirely devoted. Power in service is the direct outgrowth of a hidden life with the risen Lord. The hunger of every true worker is for power—not noise, not excitement, not mere enthusiasm—but the power that comes from the secret fire of God's silent, indwelling Spirit.

A pertinent question is asked in the pages of The Congregationalist (Boston): "Does modern piety lack sufficient personal consecration?" This is how the question is summed up:—

She (the Church) is a long way from appreciating her full powers and from doing her whole possible work. She is not as permeated by deep and vital piety as she should be. Self-sacrifice still more often is a burden reluctantly borne than a recognised opportunity of special service for Christ. The progress of missions abroad, and of many needed reforms at home, lags for lack of money, which she could easily spare. Nevertheless, he who would condemn the piety of our day as superficial would be in grave error. It is not sufficiently consecrated, but, as a whole, it is truly and largely consecrated.

Piety depends upon a personal relationship to Him, and "abiding" in Him is the secret of consecration and the power which ensures usefulness.

There are many so-called secrets of living to a green old age, and those who attain very long life generally put their longevity down to some particular habit or quality. Do we give its true place to cheerfulness as a conservator of the vital forces? Here is the testimony of an old Frenchman, who is 111 years of age, and who is still hale and hearty:—

What did he think was the chief cause of his happy old age? I asked at last. "Oh, I know exactly," he answered with a bright twinkle in his eye. "I never worried and I never grieved. I worked until I was tired, and then slept in unbroken rest until it was time to work again. It is those who sit brooding over their misfortunes who grow old before their time, and a whole night's sorrowing has never put a copper in any man's pocket or made a misfortune lighter to bear."

There are so many gloomy Christians in the world, that it would be well if this living witness to the happy effects of a cheerful spirit were taken widely to heart. Truly, a "merry heart is a good medicine; but a broken spirit drieth up the bones" (Prov. xvii. 22). It is like "the quality of mercy," which "blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

It is good to hear, on the authority of the Commander-in-Chief, that the standard of conduct is steadily rising among the rank and file of the Army, and that, taking it as a whole, there are among these men "the most sober, best behaved, and most moral of any people he knew in Great Britain." Lord Wolseley put this down largely to the increased interest taken in the wearers of the Queen's uniform, and the provisions made for their healthful recreation and welfare during their hours of leisure. Considering the many temptations of a soldier's life, this is valuable testimony, and should give encouragement to all who have the opportunity to bring high and holy influence to bear on our brave soldiers.

The sympathy of all good men must be with those few men in France who, against the power of a great Department, and in the face of a passionate feeling in the nation, are trying to get justice done. Their risks are many and serious, as is proved by the imprisonment of Colonel Picquart. The victory of wrong was like a summons to duty, which they bravely obeyed. If they succeed, and they have so far done wonderfully well, they will achieve for their country a result which will be worth more than territories or military victories. It will aid in enthroning truth and justice, and in quickening the country with a new life.

The Fashoda difficulty continues to excite intense feeling at home, though in France it is said to be quite secondary to the Dreyfus affair. The Sirdar has perhaps spoken as sensibly about it as anyone, and his words ought to have all the more effect as they were spoken in France to the representative of a French paper:—

That the situation is most critical cannot be gainsaid, but I cannot approve the conduct of those who have exaggerated the present position of affairs by announcing that war alone could solve the problem. Calm and courteous discussion will give us a solution acceptable to the two nations. Frenchmen and Englishmen do not feel the need of cutting each other's throats. I have the most entire confidence in diplomacy, and perhaps my opinion of the feat of arms accomplished by Major Marchand will contribute towards the desired result.

One of the happiest cartoons the Press has produced on the subject appeared in The Morning Leader last week. "Johnny Bull," as a schoolboy, says to "La Belle France," as a little girl with a hoop, "You sha'n't play in our yard!" To which the small damsel replies tearfully, "I don't want to; only—my dolly's in there!" This is a generous view of the situation, compared to the bellicose utterances to which we have had to listen.

An interesting piece of information as to the Papacy is given in Mr. Stillman's book "The Union of Italy, 1815-1895." It appears that an excellent opportunity of getting rid of the Papacy was lost in 1878:—

On the death of Pius IX., which took place in February, 1878, the election of his successor presented manifold and great difficulties. Intrigues from without, in a question as to which no one could deny the right of foreign Powers to interest themselves, were set on foot, and great efforts were made to induce the Conclave to remove to some other country for the election, under the pretext that, in a condition of political imprisonment a free election to the Papacy was impossible. These intrigues were so far successful that the College of Cardinals, by a preliminary vote, actually decided to go abroad.

Unfortunately, Crispi assured the Conclave that its freedom was absolute, that it would be safeguarded to the frontier if it decided to leave, or protected if it decided to remain; but if once the Sacred College left the Vatican the Government would occupy the place, and the new Pope would not be allowed to reside there. "The meeting next day revoked the vote of the day before, and the Conclave was held in Rome." What would Italy give for such a chance again!

Things are frequently happening in India which show how imperfect is our hold on the native mind, and how invaluable is the influence of our missionaries. Mrs. James, wife of Rev. W. R. James, Baptist missionary, of Jessore, near Calcutta, says that some evil-disposed persons spread the tale that the Queen, desiring to thin out her Indian subjects, had given orders that they are to be inoculated with plague poison. It was alleged that the people who were removed to the hospitals were quietly killed by the Government officials. During the panic some of the people ran to the Christians to be reassured, and the latter did good service in this way. Mrs. James went from house to house to quiet the fear, yet some would fly from her as if she were plague stricken. Then they would say, "We believe it, if you say so, for we know you are religious, and will not lie." It will be found some day that the native Christian community is a stronger defence than thousands of soldiers.

Brentwood Conference. — In August last, Mr. A. H. Carter conducted a Gospel Mission in this martyr town of Essex. Much blessing attended the effort, with the result that the work has since been continued uninterruptedly, and is now established on a definite unsectarian basis. Opportunities for preaching the Gospel present themselves not only in Brentwood, but in the surrounding villages. Revs. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., E. W. Bullinger, D.D., W. Fuller Gooch, and others, have expressed their hearty sympathy with the movement. The attendances at the Sunday evening services are of a specially cheering character, and already funds are needed to provide additional seating accommodation. Mr. G. H. Baverstock, Worley-road, Brentwood, Essex is secretary of the work.

Reality.

"Let us walk honestly."—Rom. xiii. 13.

THE characteristic of the age is superficiality. Everywhere one finds a lurking suspicion that one is about to be taken in, that things are not what they seem. And not without reason. The passion for bargain-hunting is met by the corresponding desire to outwit, to deceive by fair appearances without the reality. Imitation is the order of the day. Hollowness and insincerity abound.

And this is true not only of business transactions, but of other things as well. Our intercourse, our language, our friendship (so-called), yea, our very worship—all are tainted with the same thing. Conversation is burdened with superlatives; the most exaggerated descriptions are given when the thing to be described is ordinary enough; our intimacies are too often made to minister to our personal ends and aggrandisements; our religious worship may become (and does it not sometimes become?) a mere dramatic display, rather than the homage of a contrite heart.

One has come to feel that the thing above all others to be valued in a friend is sincerity, that integrity lifts the business man far higher than any other quality he may possess, and that we can forgive anything to those who will tell us the simple truth. Weary of mere ceremony, many have come back with unsatisfied, weary hearts to accept the Saviour's definition of acceptable worship. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. The Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John iv. 23, 24).

Thank God there are, in regard to every one of the things touched upon, many and beautiful exceptions, but it will surely be admitted that the general tendency of the day is in the direction indicated. In striking contrast with it all come the inspired words, "Let us walk honestly"; which merely means that, disregarding alike the maxims of the world and the usages of society, we should in everything and at all times have what we seem to have, and utter words which are the direct expression of our thoughts. It means that the Christian may not represent either his circumstances or his feelings to be other than they are; that he may not, for the sake of gain, act a part, drive a hard bargain, issue a misleading placard or advertisement, or do any of those things by which the worldling may think it justifiable to mislead, if he can.

Does it shock us to think of a Christian deliberately doing either the one or the other? How much more painful to hear actions of the kind defended as indispensable, as being "absolutely necessary in order to keep pace with the times."

It is no part of the Christian's obligations to keep pace with the times; but it is absolutely binding upon him that he should please the Lord Jesus. If our blessed Lord had kept pace with the times it would have led Him to a human kingdom, but never to the cross. Gethsemane and Golgotha would have found no place in the programme of a worldly policy.

Moses, keeping pace with the times, would have seen how desirable it was that he should have the influence and prestige which would belong to "the son of Pharaoh's daughter." Paul would have formed a very different estimate of those things which he counted "loss" for Christ. Martyrs might, many a time, have escaped the edge of the sword, and the fires of Smithfield might have smouldered long ere they did had the maxims of the present day been carried to their legitimate end by those who, in olden times, "counted not their lives dear unto them," but accounted the truth to be above all price.

Let the simple rallying-cry, "Let us walk honestly," be plainly heard once more through rank and file of the King's army, and let the world's approving smile (which is in reality a covert sneer after all!) no more reward the soldier of Christ who has succeeded in acting as nearly as possible like the soldier of the devil.

"Let us walk honestly." Whatever others may do, let it be unmistakably clear and plain that we are purposed, by the grace of God, at any cost to follow the steps of Him who "left us an example." Let our lips, like his, be free from guile; let our aim be to say with Him, "I do alway the things that please Him."

"Let us walk honestly." The full force of the words is only seen when we consider the whole context, and remember that they were addressed to believers, to "children of the day," and that the Apostle includes himself in the "us." Does it not speak loudly to our treacherous hearts of the depths of depravity to which they are capable apart from the keeping grace of God?

"Rioting, drunkenness, chambering, wantonness, strife, envying"—these are the things to which even the regenerate heart may turn if left to itself, if it fail to abide in Christ, if it forsake the shelter of the shed and sprinkled blood.

Humbling indeed is the reflection, and yet there is a bright side to it. Knowing all this, the Lord Jesus has espoused our case, and has Himself undertaken that sin shall not have dominion over us. (Rom. vi. 11.) It is not only that He loved us and died for us "while we were yet sinners," but he understands still, and provides for our momentary need and weakness.

I bless Thee; there can never come the day
When Thou wilt turn thy heart away;
Because thy holy eyes detect in me
Some secret, unsuspected need of Thee.

I thank Thee Thou didst see me at my worst;
Yet, wondrous mercy! chose me from the first.
Such knowledge were too wonderful, unless
Thou hads't revealed its utter tenderness.

But "we have known and believed the love that God hath to us" (1 John iv. 16). Therefore "let us walk honestly."

We have spoken of the individual walk, but is there no need to consider our national responsibility to "walk honestly" in the eyes of those who regard England as a Christian country? Must not our political and commercial dealings with other nations be above suspicion? Can we connive at that which makes a heathen scoff at and despise our religion, because of those whom they regard as its representatives? Do we take sufficient care that our foreign visitors are made acquainted with the secret of England's prosperity—her open Bible? A painful story was told a few years ago of some foreign ambassadors whom we had welcomed to our shores and entertained with due hospitality. Returning to their native land, their Queen—who sympathised with Christianity, and was, we may hope, herself a Christian—listened with interest but with some little impatience to the details of their journey. They told of magnificent entertainments in their honour, of sumptuous feasts, of wondrous sights and sounds, but she was not satisfied. "Tell me," she said, "what you heard in England about the Lord Jesus Christ."

"We never heard his name mentioned."

Allowing for misconceptions, for accidents, and for many another thing which may have contributed to such a result, we must still feel that the story, if it be correctly reported, is a blot on our character as a Christian people.

Let us come closer still. Are there any of our own acquaintances, relations, or employees who, as far as we ourselves are concerned, would have to give a similar account of their intercourse and association with us?

Can we be said to be walking honestly if we are hiding under a bushel the light which God has given us for a very different purpose?

Christian Endeavour.

THE fourth Australasian C.E. Convention extended from September 14 to 21, and has been a time of unusual blessing. Very large numbers have attended. No less than 6,000 persons were at the welcome meetings on the first night of the Convention. All the colonies, including Queensland and Western Australia, have been represented.

Among the most helpful meetings were the Bible readings, given by Rev. D. O'Donnell at the beginning of each day. All felt that God was giving to his word a living voice, and many a life has received a distinct lift heavenward through these readings.

Christian citizenship is becoming a very important feature of Christian Endeavour work. The large gathering in the Exhibition Building, when, perhaps, 12,000 people were present, was a most memorable occasion. The speeches dealt with the principles of Christian citizenship, and the application of these principles to the gambling evil and the drink traffic. Speaking as a magistrate who had had special opportunity of forming a true conclusion, Mr. Justice Hodges said deliberately, and with emphasis, that drink is not only the cause of more crime than anything else, but it leads to more crime than all other causes put together. With such a number of young men and women dead in earnest in opposing these evils, it may be expected that something will be accomplished before long. The missionary spirit also found abundant expression during these gatherings.

Among the specially interesting utterances was that of Rev. M. E. Brownlow, of New Guinea, who told of the Fijian students invited to help in mission work in New Britain. All were ready to go. They were found to be suffering and ill while there, and a free passage home was offered to them. Not one would return. "We come here," they said, "for Christ's sake to witness for Him. We will live here as long as we can, but we would rather die here than return!"

A Song in the Night.

I know, O Lord, tho' all around be dark,
I need not fear.
Rough are the waves that toss my little bark,
But Thou art near.
These stormy winds thy word alone fulfils,
Their rage shall cease.
And when thy voice shall give the word, "Be still,"
All shall be peace.

Yes, I shall prove, soon as this storm has passed
Across my soul,
That He who slumbers not held every blast
In his control.
And though, o'ershadowed by this present woe,
My heart may quail,
Strong in the strength Thou surely wilt bestow
I shall prevail.

Thou precious Saviour, by whose life I live,
Lighten mine eyes,
Let me not miss the lessons Thou dost give,
Oh, make me wise.
To the desir'd haven let me come,
In thine own way,
There shall be no more clouds in that blest home,
But perfect day.

The Lord's Return.*

WHATEVER we of to-day may say in our creeds of Christ's Divine Person and present offices and authority, our disregard of his commands and promises testifies against us. This is strikingly shown in the neglect of his utterances respecting his return. To watch continually for the returning Lord, that they may have their high calling ever before them, and so be kept from the love of this present world, is his command; but what has been the attitude of the Church toward his return? For many weary centuries the successive generations have been groaning and weeping under famine, and pestilence, and war have made the earth a great graveyard; crime and oppression have filled it with prisons and dungeons; yet only from a feeble few in all the centuries has the cry been heard, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

And to-day, when crowded cities are full of vice and misery, when nations are beating plough-shares into swords and pruning-hooks into spears, when famine and pestilence mock at the skill of statesmen and physicians, when the roaring of the discontented and restless peoples is like the roaring of the sea, and men's hearts are failing them for fear; do we hear prayers and supplications addressed to Him that He would come and save us? Papal encyclicals, pastoral epistles of bishops, missives of the clergy to their flocks, missionary reports and addresses, are either wholly silent, or of his return—as an article of faith indeed, but as something that does not practically concern us, and not to be prayed for or desired. We hear not the voice of the poor widow crying, "Avenge me of my adversary," but the voice of one proud and lifted up, saying in her heart, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow."

The words of the Lord respecting his return are more than a command to watch; they are a promise of the new and heavenly order which He will then establish. It seems scarcely credible that with any true belief in the Lord's present existence in glorified humanity—the Man in whom manhood is raised to the head of all created beings—and that He waits with earnest longing to give to his children this and to make all things new, He yet has been unable to awaken in their hearts any real and earnest response. How are the thoughts of all to-day set upon the improvement of the world, the progress of the race, the development of humanity.†

With what interest is every scientific discovery heralded, every invention that makes human life more endurable; but with what chilling indifference are all words received that tell of the heavenly order which He is to establish. To be made like Him at his coming, and so to share in his glory and blessedness, seems to have no attraction for most who hear his name. Deliverance from the law of sin and death through seems too much for faith to grasp; the disembodied state, or the natural and gradual evolution of humanity in the course of the ages, is all that can be believed.

All the tendencies and movements of the time are toward the denial of the need of any Saviour from sin, of any living Lord, and of any coming Judge. Can the Church offer any effectual resistance to these tendencies and movements? She cannot, unless she first makes the existence of her Head a great reality to herself, and be so filled with the Spirit of truth and of unity that she can bear witness of Him unto the world in the fulness of faith.

* From CHRISTIANITY AND ANTI-CHRISTIANITY: In their Final Conflict. By Samuel J. Andrews. (9s. G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

† In the true sense of the term "humanitarian," the Christian Church is the highest of all humanitarian institutions, for in it should be shown the love to men of the Father and of the Son. But as the term is now currently used it means the good of humanity without reference to God and to his purpose in man. Humanitarianism has become a synonym for the philanthropy which looks only to the present life and the welfare of men on the earth, and therefore occupies itself with the improvement of present moral and social conditions. A life after death, and preparation for it, is not within its province.

Life in a City Warehouse.

IN an article in The Young Man for November Rev. Alfred Rowland, the chairman of the Congregational Union, gives us his experiences of life in a City warehouse. He says:—

"When I was leaving school my father asked me if I had made any choice as to the trade or profession I would follow. Like most other lads, I could only answer 'No,' except that I never intended to be a minister. He therefore asked an old friend to make room for me in his warehouse, where at least I should have a chance of acquiring business habits. And to the training I received there, during four years of hard work, I owe very much. With all its temptations and dangers, life in a warehouse has about it great possibilities. Habits of promptitude and diligence are almost necessarily acquired; while the variety of characters met with in that little world, where close relationship with each other is constant, affords a knowledge of men helpful in any sphere.

"Probably the heads of departments fail to recognise the enormous power they wield for good or evil. On them, far more than on the members of the firm, the moral tone of the younger men depends. The principals are sometimes scarcely known, and seldom seen, by the employees of a large establishment; but the buyer or first salesman in a department, or the head man in an entering room or counting-house, is listened to and imitated daily. One man occupying such a position I well remember whose prurient gossip and unwholesome tales were greedily listened to, and proved a source of moral corruption and ruin to many a lad. His tongue was 'set on fire of hell,' if ever a tongue was. Another was a bully of the most offensive sort, whose savage temper required only the smallest provocation to rise like a tornado and sweep from his mind all sense of justice and truth. He was dreaded by all whose positions depended on his nod; and duplicity, sycophancy, anger, and revenge were among the evils which flourished under his rule, and for these in God's sight he was largely responsible.

"Happily most of the leading men were not of these types. Many of them had won their positions by true worth. Shrewd, prompt, punctual, and diligent, they set an example to the lads around them; and, while quick to rebuke indolence or carelessness, they did not grudge a kindly word of encouragement, which came like a gleam of sunshine to some brave boy who was honestly doing his best. Christian men who fill such positions need not go outside the circle of daily duty in order to do a work angels might envy."

Christian Union in China.—A large number of Protestant missionaries from various countries and of different denominations assembled at Kuling, Central China, last August. At the suggestion of Pastor Paul Kranz, of Shanghai, they all prayerfully and heartily joined in a declaration of unity as believers in and workers for the Lord Jesus Christ. The declaration was signed by representatives of Episcopal, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist Churches. Dr. Griffith John was the first to sign the declaration, and he was followed by Dr. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission. It is a pleasure to record that a spirit of communion and fraternal helpfulness is being more and more discovered among our brethren and sisters in China.

Free Church Work in the Midlands.

THE half-yearly meeting of the West Midland Federation of Evangelical Free Churches was held last Thursday at Wolverhampton, in Dr. Berry's church. This (the largest) federation embraces four counties, and includes more than 1,000 churches in 400 towns and villages, grouped into 56 councils. Alderman W. H. Hart, J.P. (of Birmingham), this year's president, was supported by Rev. Dr. Clifford (the National President), Mr. George Cadbury, and a goodly number of ministers and delegates from all the federation area.

The report of the executive, read by the secretary (Mr. J. Rutherford), referred in detail to the growth of the councils in their varied work and influence.

Inter alia, a calendar and greeting is being prepared for house-to-house distribution next January throughout the entire area; nearly 400,000 houses will thus be visited at a given time, with invitations to attend the house of God. Arrangements are also being made for a great series of simultaneous united missions next autumn all over the four counties, for which more than twenty well-known evangelists are already booked, the whole being a basis of appeal that 1899 may be a year of consecrated enthusiasm for the extension of the Lord's kingdom in the West Midlands.

Dr. CLIFFORD, in supporting the adoption of the report, referred with hearty commendation to the example set by the Federation to the whole of the kingdom. Rev. J. M. GWYNNE OWEN, of Edgbaston, was elected president for 1899-1900. Mr. F. F. BELSEY, of London, then gave an interesting description of the relation of "The Home Department to House-to-House Visitation," and answered a number of questions.

Mr. GEORGE CADBURY moved, "That the Federation earnestly commends to the consideration of every Church the important suggestions now made for promoting Bible reading in the homes, especially by those unable to attend public worship." He said if the people would not go to the church, the church must go to the people. Our Saviour was not content with speaking in the synagogue, but He sought out the people wherever they were to be found. Mere protests will not fill our churches; but we must do the hard, difficult, and self-denying work of visiting non-church-goers at their homes. If we are to counteract sacerdotalism, it will only be by hard work of this kind.

Rev. W. H. MUNCASTER (West Bromwich) seconded, and referred in very feeling terms to the position of young married women, who were deprived of most of the advantages of public worship and Bible-classes to which they had belonged, and who might still be kept in touch by this "Home Department."

After tea, a conference was held on "How best to maintain the enthusiasm of our councils." This was opened by Rev. J. HYDE BOLTON (Coventry), who claimed that only in proportion to the "evangelistic aim" would enthusiasm be maintained. This aim would be realised by (1) visitation, (2) missions, and (3) education in Free Church principles by means of lectures and literature. A number of ministers took part in the discussion, and at the later public meeting addresses were given by Dr. Clifford, Alderman Hart, and others.

City of London Bible-class Union.—The Union will hold a series of Gospel services for City men at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Sunday evenings, commencing Nov. 6, at 7 o'clock. This is a special effort to reach the many young men in the various City warehouses who are non-church-goers.

The "Millionaire" Disease.—A striking article on the love of money, by Mr. William Clarke, appears in The Young Man for November. A short time ago (says Mr. Clarke) one of the wealthy South African parvenus was dining at a London house, when he was asked by one of the company what was his real ambition in life. Promptly came the reply, "My chief ambition is to leave a million to each of my children." In that reply, uttered with the candour which privacy encourages, one detects the expression of the terrible disease of the modern world, especially of its English-speaking section. The love of money is the dry-rot which is spreading so rapidly and threatening so much that we hold, or ought to hold, priceless in our lives.

"Ye Are My Witnesses."

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.*

"And we are his witnesses of these things: and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him."—Acts v. 32.

THE speaker is the Apostle Peter; the occasion is a memorable and interesting one; and I think we shall be helped to understand all the force of the words if we remind ourselves of the conditions under which they were spoken.

The little band of apostles had been teaching in the name of Jesus at Jerusalem, until they had filled the whole city with that teaching. They had been miraculously delivered from prison by the angel, and when on the morning of the following day the whole council of the people of Israel and the senate was assembled together, in order that these men might be arraigned before them, the officers who were sent to bring them from the prison came back with the message that the prison doors were shut, but that the apostles were not found within. As they were discussing the question and wondering what had become of the men, the message was brought to them that they were in the Temple teaching the people the words of life. They are then brought before the council.

Let us try to realise the picture. The priests, the rulers, the most august men in the whole Hebrew nation, are gathered together strangely perplexed; arraigned before these are Peter and other of the apostles—the representatives of all that is old and effete, and passing away, face to face with the representatives of that which is new and full of power. The rulers said to the apostles, "Why are you teaching in the name of Jesus? Did we not straitly command you that you should not teach in this name?" And Peter answers, "We ought to obey God rather than man." Then he gives the rulers, the council, and the senate the four great articles of his Gospel, in brief sentences. He said, "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins."

Immediately following that declaration of the Gospel, the Apostle makes use of the words of our text. I want to suggest to you that this statement of the Apostle declares, first of all, the function of discipleship, the definite mission of all believers in the world. In the second place, it contains a statement of the method by which believers are to fulfil the function of discipleship; and in the last place, it declares the power in which this function is to be realised.

THE WORK OF THE DISCIPLE.

I would like to suggest to you at once that a great deal of the lack of power in our services for God to-day comes from the fact that we have lost the true conception of what we are really in the world for. I submit to you that the only reason why those of us who are God's children are left in the world to-day is for the fulfilment of this one thing, "Witnessing to these things." Those of you who are familiar with Paul's letter to the Ephesians will remember that in that letter he explains what is the vocation of the Church of Christ, the vocation, not of a local church, but of the whole catholic Church of Jesus. The supreme vocation of the Church of Christ lies not in the present age, not under present circumstances. We are to manifest the wisdom, and the grace, and the love of God to principalities and powers in the heavenlies. Some of us have been taunted by being called other-worldly. The moment the Church of God ceases to be other-worldly she loses all her power to teach and influence the present world.

Why is it that we are left here at all? It is that in the little while that intervenes between the present moment and the coming of the Master "we are witnesses to these things," not for the making of money, not for the making of a name are we here. We are here that we may be "witnesses to these things." The Apostle said, "We are his witnesses of these things." What things? There is the preceding declaration of them: "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." These are the things that you and I are to witness to the world—we have no other business in the world.

THE METHOD OF DISCIPLESHIP.

Let me remind you that the word here "witnesses" means "martyrs." "We are his martyrs of these things." We have come to associate the word "martyr" with persons who suffer persecution for the truth. There is one sense in which that is wrong. A martyr is one who is convinced of the truth, and who manifests the truth in his life. Not merely did the Apostle announce the truths of God; he stood in the presence of that senate and council and said, in effect, "You would know of the meaning of the Gospel we declare. Examine us. We are witnesses of the things we declare. We make the announcement, and lay ourselves open for examination as the supreme evidence of the truth." This is the method in which the Church has always to witness to the fact of the resurrection, the crucifixion, the exaltation, and the power of Jesus. With what force Peter might have said to these people, "Christ is risen, as is proved by my life and character, if you will but understand it and read it aright"—the man who prior to Pentecost loved his Master passionately, and yet was always trying to get out of his love for his Lord something for his own aggrandisement and benefit. There is nothing sadder in the last days of our Lord upon earth than that the disciples did not go into loving communion with Him in his suffering. He called them into fellowship with Him, and they never came. He began to tell them of his cross, nearly the moment after Peter had said, "Thou art the Messiah." When He began to tell them of the time He must suffer, they drew back from Him, and were amazed and afraid to ask Him any question—Peter and the rest of them. If you trace carefully the last days of our Lord, you will find that on every occasion when He spoke to them of his coming cross, they broke in by asking which among them was the greatest man.

When Jesus instituted that last Supper He said to them, "One of you shall betray Me," and there arose among them the question as to which of them should be counted the greatest. They were always seeking for personal aggrandisement.

But now in their changed lives there is the most wonderful proof that Jesus is not dead—that He has risen, and is at work. The final proof of Christianity is not documentary, the evidence of the Scriptures—I am not undervaluing them, I value them every one—but the final proof is in the lives of men and women regenerated, transformed, transfigured, men and women of whom it may be said, as truly as of the Apostle of old, "Old things have passed away, behold all things have become new." There is no power for working these miracles and transforming character, save the power of the risen and ascended Christ. "We are his witnesses." The world is waiting to know whether Jesus is risen or not. That is the one supreme question of Christianity. If He be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Is He risen? The answer can only come when the Church can say, "We are his martyrs," his witnesses; and the proof of his resurrection is to be seen in our transformed lives, in characters that have been changed by the touch of his loving hand and indwelling Spirit.

WHAT ARE WE TO DO?

I feel my own weakness. It is a most appalling view of my responsibility as a Christian man, and for every man. In my conduct with men and women everywhere and in my church I am only a witness of the resurrection and the cross in proportion as my life tells the story of the transforming power of the Gospel. How can I realise this great ideal of service? "We are his witnesses, and so is the Holy Spirit."

I can only suggest to you that the function of discipleship is fulfilled when we discover the law by which we pass into partnership with, and have definite and positive co-operation with, the Holy Spirit.

Let me give you two sentences which reveal the main facts concerning the ministry of the Spirit.

First.—The Holy Spirit witnesses to Jesus only. The Holy Ghost has nothing to say to you about Himself. The whole message He has given is a message concerning Christ. The whole mission of the Spirit to-day is to reveal Jesus. People are waiting for the Holy Spirit. They expect He will come as a manifestation to them of Himself. He never so comes. When the Spirit takes full possession of any man or woman He does not make Himself a real personality—He makes Christ a real personality. He will ever come to reveal the face of the Son of God, and to make Jesus a "living bright reality." That is his work.

Now for my second sentence.—Only the Holy Spirit witnesses to Jesus. Everything you know about the Saviour you know as the result of the illumination of the Holy Spirit. No man can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Spirit. He is the Revealer of the Revealer. Jesus came to reveal the Father. In proportion as you and I know the Master, in that proportion the Holy Spirit has been busy in our lives revealing Christ to us. We are his witnesses only as we come into co-operation with the Spirit. We cannot speak with Jesus until the Holy Spirit reveals Him to our hearts, consciences, and understandings. We are absolutely dependent upon the Holy Spirit of God, and in that way we are to fulfil the functions of discipleship. I am only a disciple of Jesus. I am only human, and can only carry out the work of my discipleship as the Holy Spirit that gave me new birth shall energise me, and reveal to me all the glory of the risen Christ. How does the Spirit do this work?

He reveals Christ to my consciousness. I have then a new sense of Jesus, and I respond to the revelation and am transformed thereby into increased likeness to Christ. This new development of character is also increased capacity for revelation. To that increased capacity the Spirit makes some still more glorious revelation, which again increases capacity, and so on, and ever on. Thus in a perpetually increasing ratio my life is manifesting the glory of the Master, and so I am witnessing for Him.

What the world waits for to-day is the witnessing of transformed and transfigured lives. I believe that what humanity needs to-day in this sobbing, sighing, and weary world is the manifestation of the sons and daughters of the King; and if you are living a life which is being transformed into the likeness of Jesus Christ, by so much are you his witnesses. Every testimony must be backed by transformed lives. We can only bear this testimony as we are in direct and actual co-operation with the Holy Spirit, and God gives the Holy Spirit to them that obey Him.

Day by Day.

"In all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself."

SUNDAY, November 6.

Genesis xiv.

WE have the authority of inspiration for finding in Melchizedek a notable type of our Lord. Indeed, a most remarkable expression is made use of. It is not said that Christ was made like him, but that he was made like Christ, as though he were modelled in conformity with the archetype of our Lord's eternal ministry for man.

Made like unto the Son of God, he abideth a priest continually.

The sun of Christ's being never rises; He is without beginning of days. It never sets; He has no end of life. He has no lineage to account for his glorious being, because He is without father and mother. He abides a priest continually, never slackening his intercessory and mediatorial work. On his priesthood is built his royal supremacy: first a Priest, then King; King of Righteousness, then also King of Salem, which is, King of Peace.

Consider how great He is, and let us rejoice that He meets us still with bread and wine, to refresh us when, wayworn and faint, we come from some distant expedition, undertaken for his service, and to fit us for further conflict with the insidious temptation of the king of Sodom. We are told, and we know it, that the way of the believer is a fight of faith, and the journey often seems long; but at every step a banquet-house is open, and there is refreshment and recruitment. There is the Word of God, the provision of promise, the Holy Supper. And as we draw nigh to feast, we hear his voice as He blesses us in the name of the Most High God.

Abram gave him tithes of all. O, my soul, what wilt thou give him? "Lord, I am thine; in time, I would yield Thee not a tenth, but all; and in eternity I will for ever magnify and adore Thee."

MONDAY, November 7.

Genesis xv.

Jesus is our shield. We are exposed to assaults from earth and hell. Every victory that Abram won made him more dreaded and hated, and he had every reason to fear a combination of the surrounding nations. But no hatred that man entertains towards his fellows is comparable to that which Satan has towards us as soon as we bestir ourselves against him. But Jesus interposes the might of his intercession, and defence against the fiery darts of the wicked.

Jesus is our exceeding great reward. Abram was no loser when he left his home and country at the Divine bidding. In the present world he received manifold more. And when he refused the tempting offer of the king of Sodom, an assurance, richer than all the wealth of the world, was borne in on his heart. "I am thy wealth." Our Saviour is our reward Not what He gives, but what He is. Not what He says or promises merely, but the fellowship, communion, and oneness to which He invites.

The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup. I have a goodly heritage.

Jesus is Abram's seed. Referring to this chapter, the Apostle says:

He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.

If, then, we be one with Him by faith, we may dare to claim the spiritual fulfilment of all these solemn engagements into which God had entered with his servant beneath the burning constellations of an Eastern night.

TUESDAY, November 8.

Genesis xvi.

Who was this Angel of the Lord? We notice the peculiar expression of the Hebrew, which might be rendered, "the Angel Jehovah." And again we ask, Who is this great Unknown? When we take the attitude of lowly reverence, He will, doubtless, make Himself known.

In the economy of grace the Father is evermore the sender, while the Son is sent. It must, therefore, have been none other than Jesus who appeared to men, with whom were his delights, before He became the Virgin's child. The term angel is not so much a designation of race as of office. It means an envoy, a messenger, one who is sent. Any heavenly being who is sent on an errand of love to this earth is for the time an angel; but One there is who, above all others, deserves that name, sent not only from heaven, but out from the very heart of God, sent to reveal God's heart; sent to make fellowship with God possible; sent after every poor wandering Hagar to find, to advise, to enable her to submit to the almost intolerable conditions of her lot; sent to assure of the all-seeing eye and providence of God. Jesus has been called "the Envoy extraordinary," the Evangelist supreme, the Angel whom all other angels worship, and round whose supreme throne the thunder of Heaven's adoration breaks.

Let Him come to thee, O helpless, outcast soul! He sees, He loves, He finds, He adores. Thou mayest well trust Him, when He says, Return, submit. Learn of Him; He is meek and lowly. Take his yoke upon thee, and follow his counsel.

WEDNESDAY, November 9.

Genesis xvii.

Writing on this chapter, a thoughtful student of God's Word directs our attention to Isa. xlii. 6, and xlix. 8, and reminds us that Jesus is Himself the Covenant. "I will give Thee for a covenant of the people." It has no being, no continuance, no power, but in Him. He may well be called its essence, its reality, its fulness, its all. It is founded, erected, consummated in Him. No Christ, no covenant. Receive Him, and it is yours in all its truth and riches. Reject Him, and you perish; because you have not the shadow of a plea. On God's side He is the ratification and pledge of the covenant. On man's side He fulfils the covenant in and through all who believe.

In Mal. iii. 1 He is described as the Messenger of the covenant, coming from Heaven with the tidings of what God offers in the plentitude of his grace, and returning thither with the tidings of an acceptance.

In Heb. vii. 22 we are told that He is the Surety of the covenant. He is God's pledge to us that not one jot or tittle of his promise should fail; and on our part that we shall be kept believing and obedient.

In Heb. ix. 15 He is the Mediator of the new covenant, by whose blood it was sealed. Hence we speak of the blood of the everlasting covenant.

Are we parties in this covenant? If we believe in Jesus, we most certainly are included in its provisions, and God will certainly see that not one good thing shall fail. But on our part there is an inevitable condition. We must be circumcised with the circumcision of Christ. We must put off the body of the flesh, and cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit.

THURSDAY, November 10.

Genesis xviii.

Can we doubt that the Son of God was the central figure in this mysterious group? It has ever been his wont to visit thus the hearts and homes of men. Though his abode is in the high and holy place, it is also with the humble and contrite ones. "If a man love me," He said, "he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and We will come and make our abode with him." Wilt thou not ask that He should come to thee, to be refreshed by thy hospitality and entertainment? Oh, be quick to give Him welcome!

Throughout the interview One emerges as the prominent actor and speaker. Not again they, but for the most part He; because where Jesus is, angels drop into comparative insignificance, and the disciple is drawn into close colloquy and fellowship with the Lord. He gives the promise of the child. Nothing is too hard or wonderful for Him, who is the Wonderful. No lie or want of transparency escapes his notice or rebuke.

When the angels went on to Sodom, and only the two arrived there, the Lord seems to have lingered still to exchange confidences with his faithful servant, "Shall I hide from Abraham that which I do?" It was thus He spoke in the days of his flesh: "No longer do I call you servants, but friends; for all things that I heard from my Father I have made known unto you."

The holy purity of Jesus, outraged by the abominable sin of Sodom; his unfailing justice, "I will go down now and see"; his pitying compassion, that gladly yielded all that his servant asked, and more—all remind us of the tears He shed on the Mount of Olives, where He saw impending over Jerusalem a doom He could not avert. "If thou hadst known."

FRIDAY, November 11.

Genesis xix.

Two references in the Gospel to this scene show how carefully it was watched by the Son of Man, as all its horror unfolded. In Matt. xi. 23, 24, He tells us that if the mighty works which were done in thee [Capernaum] had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

It was as though He had a vision of passing through the streets of Sodom, healing the sick, and raising the dead, and filling it with the message of the Gospel. And He goes on to say that it should be more tolerable in the Day of Judgment for those who sinned so abominably, than for his obdurate and disbelieving contemporaries. Herein He speaks with the authority of the Judge, to whom, as the Son of Man, the Father has committed all judgment.

In Luke xvii. 28, He adds some details to the particulars of this chapter, as from his personal observation:—

They did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but in the same day that Lot went out from Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven.

Who that knows the love of Jesus can doubt that it grieved Him sorely to cut down the tree which was poisoning the whole atmosphere of the world, and would have spread blight and disease everywhere? But how like Him to save all He could, bringing them out of the overthrow; and only permitting Lot's wife to be overwhelmed with the falling scoriæ when it was evident that her heart turned back to Sodom!

SATURDAY, November 12.

Genesis xx.

From the frailty and sin of the best men, we turn naturally to our incomparable Lord. There never was a child of Adam yet who did not betray his fallen origin by some fault or flaw. Never a flower, however fair, without its freckle; never a stone, however white, without its veins; never a jewel, however rich, without its discoloration. Abram gave serious signs of moral cowardice; Moses of irritation; Job of impatience. But Jesus could bare his heart to the most searching scrutiny—

Which of you convinceth Me of sin?

When was He ever ashamed of one of the meanest and unworthiest of his children? When did He ever disavow his relationship to his bride, chosen from among the sons of men? When did He ever ask of us a behaviour which was not perfectly honourable and straightforward? As Judas cried, in the agony of his remorse, "I have betrayed innocent blood," and as Pilate repeatedly testified, "This man hath done nothing amiss"; so has the verdict of history also summed up the beauty of Christ's moral character.

We have seen, says Horace Bushnell, many pictures of the sacred person of Jesus by the first masters; but not one among them all that did not rebuke the weakness which could dare attempt an impossible subject. So of the character of Jesus. It is necessary that we should explore it as we are able; but what are human thoughts and conceptions on a subject that dwarfs all thought, and outgrows whatever is conceived!

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Famine Orphans in India.

THE many readers of The Christian who have taken a warm and practical interest in the efforts of Mrs. Carrie P. Bruere for the succour of famine orphans will be interested in hearing of some of the results from an eye-witness.

Mrs. Bruere's Orphanage is healthily situated at Talegaon, on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, between Bombay and Poona. At first only boys were brought from famine districts to Talegaon, the rescued girls being passed on to missionaries at other places. But Mrs. Bruere's Orphanage is now exclusively for girls, the hundred or so boys having been removed to Poona, where they are in charge of two experienced and devoted missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Fox.

Between June and September of last year about one hundred famine girls, in several parties, were received at Talegaon. The transformation that has taken place in them in twelve to fifteen months is marvellous. When rescued most had reached the lowest depths of human misery, and in appearance seemed like animated skeletons with little but skin stretched over their bones. So forlorn was their condition that the casual observer could not distinguish their sex. In contrast to this, I am sending to you herewith a photograph of a small group recently taken at my desire. (See Young People's Page.)

But the greatest transformation of all has been moral and spiritual. A great spiritual work went on amongst them in the early part of this year, with the result that all the elder girls made a public profession, by baptism, of their faith in Christ. I believe I have never seen a greater marvel than the beautiful characters of some of these girls, only a year out from the darkness of heathenism.

Both the girls' and the boys' orphanages have been greatly helped by the opportune sympathy of the Zenana, Bible, and Medical Mission, in lending them respectively, for about twelve months, the self-sacrificing aid of Miss Annie Thompson and Miss Esther McGrotty. Pathetic in the extreme were many of their experiences in nursing the poor children in the first months after their arrival.

The recently published letter of the noble Pundita Ramabai, in part concerning the evangelisation of India by its own sons and daughters, has stirred many hearts in this country. She calls for Indian men and women who will give their lives to this work without being a burden upon foreign missionary societies—"indigenous missions, started and supported by the Christian natives of India." Let prayer be offered continually that many from the orphanages to which I have referred, and from others like them, may in due time become apostolic messengers of the Gospel to their country people. Alfred S. Dyer, of Bombay.

Talegaon, Dadhada, near Poona.

In a recent article in The Bombay Guardian, descriptive of life and work in Poona, Mrs. Dyer says:—

"By reason of its healthy climate Poona is a favourite educational resort, and all its missions pay particular attention to the youth of the community. The Free Church Mission has a flourishing orphanage for both boys and girls, with a Mission Press as its industrial department. The Church of Scotland Mission is famed for its girls' schools in the city. Mrs. Sorabji has a variety of schools in connection with the Z. B. and M. M. for boys and girls, both European and native.

"A day spent at Pundita Ramabai's Sharada Sadan introduced us to a nice company of earnest students chiefly between twelve and sixteen years of age; with a half-dozen little tots of four or five summers. The former are the most promising, from an educational point of view, of the famine widows added to the girls who were already studying in the Sadan. Miss Powar seemed to have the whole family well in hand, and was evidently accustomed to the loyal obedience of the community. Several Hindu widows have recently applied for admission from Poona city. There must be many left in this unhappy condition by the plague.

"Another institution which calls forth one's warmest sympathies must be mentioned. This is Mrs. Hutchings' Home and School for Anglo-Indian and Eurasian children. It is a real home, where many orphans, and some worse off than orphans, of European parentage are received and trained for a good and useful life. Mrs. Hutchings deserves the support of all Christians in Western India. The school is beautifully managed, the children are sufficiently fed on wholesome food, as their appearance amply testifies. They are nicely dressed in neat and varied clothing, no 'charity uniform' to depress their spirits; while proper educational arrangements and moral and spiritual oversight are ungrudgingly given. The result will be seen in the near future of Christian young women trained for the Lord's service in this needy land. Some are already out in the field. The boys' department is newer, but has made a good foundation. The whole is without endowment or settled income save as the Lord's stewards remember it in their prayerful distribution of funds with which He entrusts them."

Tidings from France.

THE thoughts of many are turned towards France, and we trust that prayer is ascending daily to God for her people, that peace and order may reign, and that strife and tumult may be suppressed.

After the intense heat of the summer, workers are once more at their posts to resume their tasks, and to endeavour to proclaim his name who is the Prince of Peace. A few words about the mission boat will be of use to show again the great encouragement the Lord has been giving us during the summer. In an article written to Le Témoignage, Paston Charles Schmidt tells of a visit paid to the boat at Etigny, near Sens, on the Yonne, one Sunday evening. Arriving exactly at the time appointed, he found the boat filled, the gangway crowded; even on the bank there were clusters of persons sitting on the grass, trying to catch at least some words that fell from the preachers' lips.

"Looking over the heads of the people, we saw that the salle was crowded, every seat filled, passages also, and many standing at the entrance. It was fearfully hot inside, and now and again some woman or child was forced to squeeze their way out to try and breathe a little fresh air. The people listened with great attention, and their faces showed that they were deeply interested in what were, to them, such new ideas. As one crowd departs another prepares to come on board. The seats fill up again, and they beg for a second meeting, for they have come far to be present, driving in carts and gigs, many of them several miles, and they have heard nothing. So, for those who could not get in a second meeting is held, with over 100 persons there; but it is not a long one, for the speakers are exhausted with the intense heat."

The Bon Messager is now at Sens, and we shall continue the work all winter if the weather permits, as has been the case these two or three winters past.

This week I received a note from M. Villeger, of Auxerre, in which he says: "I should greatly like to go again to the boat, where I have had so much pleasure in labouring since last October; but really I have no time, for I have so much to do that I cannot leave. I am opening meetings in different localities, and all my evenings are filled up. Monday I am at Gurgy, Tuesday at Bassou, Wednesday at Joigny, Thursday at Auxerre, Friday at Laroche, and Sunday at Auxerre, Joigny, and Avallon." With the exception of Avallon, these meetings have all been opened as the result of the visits of the boat. We rejoice in this excellent result, and wish that the work could be thus followed up everywhere.

There is more good news to tell. At the first committee meeting we were able to give instructions to our architect to begin the construction of a second mission boat. Enough has been given and promised to enable us to do this, the sum of nearly £1400 being assured. This will pay for the construction of the boat, which has to be very well made, while we shall still need between £200 and £300 to furnish the cabins, fit up the kitchen, warming apparatus, seats, etc. The new boat will have better cabin accommodation, and about the same seating room. It will be slightly narrower, so as to allow it to pass through all the locks on the canal system. W. Soltau.

The McCall Mission, Paris.

Missionary Conference in New York.

MR. HENRY VARLEY writes:—"Many of your readers will be glad to hear what a remarkable missionary conference has just been held in this city. The meetings extended over ten days, and took place in Rev. A. B. Simpson's Tabernacle, in Eighth Avenue, and the Carnegie Hall, one of the finest public buildings in the world. Its acoustics are perfect, and it is a splendid sight to see it full.

"The most interesting feature has been the desire to spread the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ to the ends of the earth. Three hundred missionaries are in the great harvest-fields of China, India, Japan, Africa, and South America.

"It is a cause for profound gratitude that the Lord of the harvest has so greatly honoured our beloved brother. In about six years this work has grown indefinitely, and promises much larger efforts to evangelise some of the many millions still sitting in darkness.

"Our souls were stirred with the cheering recitals of work done, and of the many, many open doors. I seldom remember such a series of imposing addresses as those given by the missionaries themselves. Last Lord's Day will not soon be forgotten. About 10 a.m. the stream of life poured into the Gospel Tabernacle. When Dr. Simpson rose to give his annual address the large building was packed. In simple and graphic testimony he showed the imperative need for 'redeeming the time.' These three words formed the basis for a striking and pointed appeal to go and carry the Gospel to the millions of heathendom.

"As he showed how by self-sacrifice much might be done, and that quickly, a coloured woman quietly stepped forward, and, putting twenty dollars into Dr. Simpson's hands, said: 'Yes, sir, bless the Lord; that is my offering from the wash-tub.' 'Then I may stop right here,' said our brother, 'for the Lord has done it.' It was an unceremonious break, but what an earnest of warm, generous, and zealous missionary liberality it proved to be! There were scarcely any wealthy people in that packed audience, and yet for one hour the tide of money given and promised rolled in. Just think of it. From twenty-five cents to 10,000 dollars, such were the gifts; and that morning service closed with a total of 97,000 dollars given for missionary effort for 'the highways and hedges.' Surely this is of God.

"The day closed with a total of 113,000 dollars given, probably one of the largest offerings ever received in money and promises for purely foreign missionary work. Thus nearly £22,000 were given in a single day, not for the United States, but for Africa, Mexico, China, India, Japan, etc. It will interest your readers to know that Manila, in the Philippine Islands, is to be at once visited by the Missionary Alliance.

"On Monday last we visited the new training college at Nyack Heights, on the Hudson, about 30 miles from New York. It is a noble building, beautifully situated. There is a band, numbering about 150 young men and women, who are in training to 'go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.'

"Meetings of a special character, in order to teach and preach the Lord Jesus Christ, I remain in New York to carry on. Already much interest exists, and there is more to follow. I am preaching in Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoons and evenings. Will your readers pray fervently for us in this special campaign?"

Mr. H. M. Barnett, whom we mentioned last week as a lecturer on the Catacombs of Rome, may be addressed at 91, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N.

Tunis.—Mr. A. V. Liley writes:—"It has been my privilege during September to baptize two more Italian women on the profession of their faith in Christ Jesus. It is very gratifying to know that a little church has been formed in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and that its members are consistently living for Him. I have taken a ride into the country in a direction I had not been before, and was a little surprised to find Arab encampments so near the town. These camps would make a splendid sphere of missionary enterprise; they are too far to reach on foot, but the possession of a bicycle would enable one to do a lot of visiting and bring a great number of people within reach of the Gospel." Communications to Mr. Liley should be addressed, 10, Rue de la Medersa, Es Slimunia, Tunis.

Conference of Women Workers.

THE annual Conference of Women Workers did excellent work at Norwich last week, in discussing questions affecting the poor, and suggesting the best means for alleviating the sin and misery in our midst. Mrs. Sheepshanks, wife of the Bishop of Norwich, in welcoming the members, struck the right note when she said that all were "endeavouring by philanthropic and charitable work to ameliorate the condition of the suffering and the helpless, and to raise the standard of morality, by doing what they could to elevate public opinion on the subject." She hoped they would regard the Conference, first of all, as the work of God; the true success of it should be made the subject of private and public intercession.

Mrs. Alfred Booth, the president, in her reply, remarked: "Right thinking in reference to the great questions of the day is what we women must strive after. May I beg you all to rise above the various local to the more national questions, to which in conference we devote ourselves; and in thought, at least, lay hold of those ideas of universal peace and brotherhood which should be the Ultima Thule of the Christian world."

To bear the burdens of others and to help the weak ones of the earth, was the guiding motive of those assembled. The case of mothers in rural and other poor places was considered, when Lady Laura Ridding read a paper advocating the founding of associations to provide properly

TRAINED MATERNITY NURSES.

As matters now stand any unqualified woman may attend a mother on one of the most critical occasions of her life—often with sad results to both mother and babe.

The change for the better in public opinion with regard to the treatment of the feeble minded, the epileptic, and deaf mutes was shown in papers read on the care and education of these afflicted members of the community. For epileptics there are now, at least, three homes on the "colony" system—that is to say, the inmates form the whole inhabitants of the place, with the exception of those in charge of them. Each case is studied separately, and specially treated. Pleasant occupation is found in the garden or house, and cheerfulness takes the place of that melancholy and moroseness too often seen in epileptic members of a family—either shunned or too much indulged on account of their affliction. The workhouse guardians are gradually coming to recognise that such establishments give epileptic children a chance that is impossible in a workhouse, and are paying for their maintenance in the same.

THE FEEBLE MINDED,

too, are sadly in need of continuous care. Like children, they have little or no self-control, and although many can be trained to earn a living, none should be left to go out unprotected in the world, or they are likely to become a great danger or expense to society. Kindly sheltered and encouraged, feeble-minded girls and boys may be made happy and useful citizens.

It was very appropriate that, at the conclusion of the consideration of these and cognate matters, Madame Antoinette Sterling should—unasked—mount the platform and sing to the large gathering of earnest women the beautiful verse, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently upon Him," which seemed to answer the doubt and despondency felt by so many present.

One of the growing dangers to the State is those children, termed in workhouse parlance "ins-and-outs," who are left in "the house" with their parents for short periods, to be taken out again to lead a dishonest and disgraceful life. It is proposed to promote a Bill in Parliament to enable Poor Law Guardians to take charge of such children, making the parents pay expenses if possible, but not allowing them to have the control of them until they can show that they have reformed.

A saddening picture of the miserable existence of women and children who do work at home was drawn in papers on that subject. That human beings should be compelled to slave all day, and sometimes through the night, for a mere pittance, is a disgrace in a nominally Christian country. But the remedy does not appear to lie in the abolition of home work, but in bringing pressure to bear upon those who pay such low wages, and upon those buyers who will insist upon having cheap articles, no matter at what cost to their fellow-creatures. The proposal that no women should work except in factories may be met with many objections. Delicate and elderly women cannot obtain work in such places. Those who have invalid members of the family, or young children, to attend to, are not justified in leaving home all day; and certainly the moral atmosphere of a factory is not desirable for young girls if by any possibility they can be saved from it.

Abject poverty—too rife in our land—does not come from the "hand of God," but from the sin of man, and the breaking or neglecting of God's laws. Were drunkenness, want of thrift, and over-population rooted out, the want and suffering consequent upon sickness, old age, or other natural causes could easily be alleviated by public or private charity. As it is, an intemperate father or mother with a numerous family brings want to that family, and any member of it able to earn ever so little must do so, no matter under what horrible conditions he or she may be driven to work. The remedy lies in the inculcation of truly religious principles among the lower classes, which the ministers of the various religious denominations in England are bravely trying to achieve.

On the whole, the Conference was far above several predecessors in the tone of piety which pervaded the discussions, and in the earnest endeavour made by women of different views to do all that is possible to fulfil the law of Christ and "bear one another's burdens."

The Doré Gallery.

MANY residents in London, as well as visitors from the Provinces, will learn with pleasure that the Doré Gallery of sacred pictures has been reopened at 35, New Bond-street, W. Countless pilgrimages have been made to the spot in past years, and impressions received that cannot fade while memory endures. Surely no better use was ever made of the artistic imagination than in these grand representations of some of the more tragic incidents in the earthly life of the Saviour.

It is quite needless to attempt any description of pictures so familiar as "Christ leaving the Prætorium," "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," "Ecce Homo," "The Ascension," and that most finely pathetic of them all, "The Vale of Tears." Any readers who have not had their hearts stirred by a quiet contemplation of such masterpieces of human skill ought to take the first opportunity of seeing them. The splendid representation, by Paul Philippoteaux, of Christ entering Jerusalem adds strength to a collection altogether unique.

"Lo, I am with You Alway."

As we wage the Christian warfare
For the right against the wrong,
Cheered by those who fought and conquered,
Guarded by the angel throng;
Though the foe may gather round us,
And the arrows thickly fall,
Led by Christ, our mighty Captain,
We shall triumph over all.

As we sail life's troubled waters,
And the fearsome night grows dark,
And the storm, in sudden fury,
Threatens to engulf our barque;
While the "fourth watch" darkness deepens,
And our hearts are sore dismayed,
We shall hear above the tempest—
"It is I, be not afraid."

As we tread our pilgrim journey,
Sick at heart with sense of dread,
And we speak in tearful accents
Of our hopes, now crushed and dead—
There shall join us One whose coming
Neither death nor hell can stay;
And our hearts shall "burn within us"
While He cheers us "by the way."

When the conflict shall have ended,
And our fighting days are o'er,
When our barque is safely anchored
On the calmer distant shore—
When our pilgrimage is finished,
And the "gates of pearl" unfold,
With our Captain, Pilot, Saviour,
We shall walk the streets of gold.

White Slaves.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION'S WORK.

A CEASELESS fight must be waged between the good the pure and the true and those grosser forms of evil that are fostered by our great and populous centres. Some kinds of social wrong-doing are so profitable to those who engage in them that their abettors take no temporary rebuffs. The only way to check and counter-work them is to exercise unsleeping vigilance, and meet persistency in evil with a holy and enthusiastic ingenuity on behalf of the right. In this warfare the National Vigilance Society has borne an honoured part in the past. We are glad to know that it has recently been stiffening and extending its operations with gratifying success.

We have not heard much of late about the "White Slave Traffic," by which so many innocent but unwary young women have been lured from home and country, on the pretence of getting more lucrative occupation on foreign shores. In numberless cases the results have been only too disastrous to the character and happiness of the victims; and a strange supineness on the part of Christian people has enabled these wrongs to flourish with a measure of impunity. We are glad to know that a fuller knowledge of the facts is creating much practical sympathy with the efforts of the Vigilance Society to stop these heartless, we might well say devilish, schemes.

FRIENDLY WARNING.

We wish to draw the attention of our readers, not only in Europe, but in other lands, to the "Friendly Warning" which the Society has published, addressed to young women leaving their own country. It is printed in the same pamphlet in four languages, English, French, German, and Dutch, and goes out with the imprimatur of the Duke of Westminster and of the Consul-Generals in London respectively of Germany, France, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland. The pamphlet also contains the names of nearly 170 persons resident in different parts of Europe and South Africa, who are willing to help as far as possible girls and young women who find themselves friendless in the places named. A similar arrangement is in force in Canada and in New York. Many sympathetic notices drawing attention to this warning have lately appeared in the Press at home and abroad.

MUCH-NEEDED AGENCIES.

The Vigilance Association is now taking the further step of organising agencies in every European capital, with the view of appointing a special officer in each chief city, whose duty it will be to open up correspondence with the towns and villages throughout these countries, and gather information in these rural parts as to the details of the white slave traffic. When the available facts are collected and collated an international conference will probably be held in London, attended by delegates from all these European centres, so as to focus the knowledge gained, and to endeavour to influence the various Governments in putting a stop to this vile trade by the firm and sure hand of international arrangement or law. We are informed by Mr. W. A. Coote, secretary of the Vigilance Association (who has long been the indefatigable spring of this truly Christian movement) that for the due carrying out of these plans £1000 at least will be needed. Surely in view of the great need, and of the splendid results that are certain to ensue, this sum will speedily be forthcoming. We hope all who can in any way help on these developments will not delay in communicating with Mr. Coote, at the office of the Association, 267, Strand, London.

Copies of the Warning we have mentioned, in a briefer form, and in the four languages, neatly framed and glazed, have been placed by permission of the authorities in conspicuous positions on board steamers leaving for Continental ports, and also on many of the boats sailing to South Africa. We hope this fact will be noted by the friends of all young women leaving our shores for situations abroad; and copies of the Warning in pamphlet form ought also to be placed in their hands, so that they may know where to apply in case of need. The Association has earned the gratitude of all friends of truth and purity by its labours in other directions. The Vagrancy Amendment Act, for example, which it helped to get passed, has already been found of much real service in dealing with the unscrupulous and cruel men who live on the proceeds of female vice.

Forward Movement at Surrey Chapel.

SITUATED in the heart of a vast population of work-a-day people, amid dingy streets and squalid alleys, Surrey Chapel commands, by its present aggressive work as well as its hallowed associations, the keen sympathy of all who have at heart the spiritual and moral welfare of the people.

The present Surrey is, of course, the outcome of Dr. Newman Hall's kindly action on leaving old Surrey for Christ Church, when he offered the use of the vacated building to the Primitive Methodist body for the term of five years which the lease had still to run.

It was accepted, and at the expiration of the period the services were continued in the Raglan Music Hall, but ultimately, and largely by the aid of influential trustees—now, alas! no more—the present capacious and comfortable building was erected, at a total cost of £14,000, and opened (during the ministry of Rev. B. Senior) by Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

At the request of Conference, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr undertook the charge five years since. His persistent effort has been, while maintaining the best traditions of Surrey, to build up a new congregation and form from the masses in the immediate neighbourhood an organised

BODY OF MISSION WORKERS.

Mr. Parr is the son of a Methodist minister, and was born at Oswestry, Salop, in March, 1855. Educated at a National school he, when fourteen years of age, became a junior clerk in a Liverpool shipping office. His commercial career only extended over four years, during which time he devoted his early mornings and evenings to self-culture, and while yet in his teens was admitted into the Primitive Methodist ministry. Fervency of spirit and sustained industry were the hallmarks of his work. In Rutland his efforts were blessed to the extension of Methodism among villages where the denomination had been ignored or regarded with doubt and suspicion. Ten sermons per week, and walks totalling 120 miles for the delivery thereof, constituted part of his regular labours, and thence he proceeded in turn to Leicester, Burton, Sheffield, Grantham, Leeds, and Nottingham, and ultimately to London.

"The old order changeth and giveth place to the new"; the movement of business people from the city to the residential suburbs, and the decease of older members might render the work difficult, but after all was there not a flowing tide of misery and vice lapping up to the very chapel doors; and was not the roar of the godless crowd, the shout of the reeling drunkard, the oath that babbled from the lips of childhood, a sufficient call to Surrey people to gird up their loins and make their fine building the fountain-head of a great home missionary effort?

Mr. Parr was, at any rate, prepared to make any personal sacrifice in order to bridge the gulf between religion and the masses; and a glance at the many useful agencies now in operation which render the mission such a profound blessing demonstrates with an eloquence greater than that of words how well the faith and works of a phalanx of toilers at Blackfriars has transformed or enlightened much of the prevailing

SORROW, AND SUFFERING, AND IRRELIGION.

Every effort leads up to the evangelistic service of Sunday night. That is to say, none of the undertakings exist save to point the way to Christ. That the people throng to Surrey is surely a tribute to the vital force of Evangelical religion. Every Sunday evening, for example, besides the congregation of adults filling the chapel, five hundred of the little children of one-roomed London are to be found thoroughly at home in the large hall below the chapel, their polished faces and well tidied clothes speaking even less specifically of their enjoyment than the verve and volume of their singing. Poor little tots! with toes oozing muddily 'tween soles and uppers—pert boys with bristly hair and a grin, bigger girls carrying babies or cripples, join in with a rousing force that threatens to split the roof.

From this special mission to children—quite distinct from the regular Sunday-school — have developed a girls' institute and a boys' brigade, the value of which in the midst of the haunt of the hooligans is all the greater since one condition of membership is attendance at the Bible-class; the young fellows and lassies become thereby knit into the church. As for the working man, the humble dosser, and other friends, the P.S.A., conducted on evangelistic lines, constitutes an unfailing attraction for them.

Turning to the social work, carried on in the premises next the chapel, we find it a quarrying ground; there the poor man is at home, and the doubtful joys of the public-house bar left far behind. The doors are "thrown wide open to one and all," the roughest are not only welcomed but made to feel thoroughly at home. Attractive rooms, books, magazines, and simple games, warmth, light, and interest are helpful to cordiality; but best of all is the touch of godly feeling which elevates social intercourse into

HEART TO HEART TALK.

Other times, other meetings. The women's medical club is as great a bulwark against pauperism as is the men's against alcoholism, for its financial arrangements are admirably arranged to sustain independence at times when resort to the Guardians seems inevitable. The women have rallied nobly to help themselves, under the special guidance of a Sister of the people. Her name is Sister Annie, and her labours amongst the poor are "familiar in their mouths as household words."

During the past year she has attended some three thousand cases of illness and distress. Attired in a neat and simple uniform, she alternately nurses, prays, and pleads in her noble mission of mercy; in and out the slums, in August heat or December snows, goes the good, unassuming sister, so well acquainted with the daily sorrows of those who live in chronic uncertainty as to whence their next meal shall come.

Follow her into a block of buildings, where in one of the garrets exists a distressed couple whom we will call the Jarvises.

The husband is blind, and the wife, in consequence, has been the bread winner. But Mrs. Jarvis is dying of consumption, and is, moreover anxious about her soul. Sister Annie comforts the poor creature by tidying up the room, preparing some warm food, and then reading from the Bible and praying by the bedside.

The poor old woman gets converted, and her husband, for twenty years a backslider, returns to the Lord.

But the scene must be painted in deeper tints when in the midnight watches by the bedside the woman's ashen grey face tells of imminent death. The Sister wipes away the death sweat, and whispers words that kindle the eye.

"When I'm gone—gone home, that is—you'll do what's wanted to me; don't let a crowd come in. I say, Sister, PRAY WITH ME."

And when the Sister has finished the simple petition she draws the sheet over the still waxen features. Mrs. Jarvis is dead. Such is an instance from the daily round of the social work at Surrey.

Another interesting work carried on by the mission is that at St. James'-road, Old Kent-road. For some years one of a couple of private houses standing together was the only premises available, the various gatherings therein being packed with people as closely as "herrings in a barrel." At length one of the houses was demolished, and a road made to the rear, where a capacious room was erected on the back gardens for school and Gospel services.

A large congregation has been formed, and a number of new members added. The scope of the workers is illustrated by the fact that within a half-mile radius there is a population of 20,000 working class people, the churches, if full, being able to accommodate but 3000. Unfortunately, £250 still remains to be raised for the building fund, to clear the cost of the new building; the members give nobly, but their means are scanty.

Surrey combines, too, in federation work with the Free Churches of the district. The greatest heartiness prevails, and an amount of good has been accomplished which amounts practically to a revolution. Hooliganism is but an expression of hatred to the powers that have dealt with abominations that had sapped the morality of this part of the metropolis.

One of the most satisfactory facts in connection with Mr. Parr's labours has been the success of the long and bitter struggle with the crushing debt of £6200. Such difficulties as the removal of converts to "fresh woods and pastures new," the "floating" character of the population, and the largely impecunious position of the district, have been overcome by incessant and trying exertion to the extent of paying off £3200; but even this cheering result has necessarily crippled many of the ordinary funds so that £300 is still needed to balance the current account. Surrey's financial resources are small, but the conspicuous success of the mission in all and each of its undertakings surely constitutes an admirable reason why the minister should be liberally supported, so as to free him to carry forward at greater speed his good work of evangelising the masses and building up still more the new, vigorous cause which is proving so great a blessing to the community. Mr. Parr's address is 62, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—During the past year the friends who are responsible for the circus services in this city report that services have been held in the Palace Theatre without a break, and the attendance has been very gratifying even through the summer months. The addresses have been simple, clear, and definite, and the only theme the glorious Gospel of the grace of God. A short prayer-meeting before and an inquiry meeting after the service are regularly held. God has blessed the work during the year, and, although great numbers of conversions cannot be recorded, a steady work of spiritual blessing has been going on. Some who recently decided for Christ confessed that they had attended the services for years and had often felt drawn by the Spirit to come to Christ. A number of the most faithful workers in the recently held open-air services in the streets were converted during the year. Byker, Arthur's Hill, Elswick, and Gateshead should each be supplied with similar services if the Christians of Newcastle would wake up to their responsibilities and privileges.

Home Missions.

The Christian Community.

It was aptly remarked a short time ago by Sir George Williams that some friends hardly knew what the Christian Community was, but he could assure them it was a live body. Certainly, few people form a proper conception of the magnitude of the society's operations, carried on as they are in a quiet but wonderfully thorough fashion.

From the central institution, the Memorial Hall, Bethnal-green, a multiplicity of enterprises, all aiming at raising the spiritual and social status of the poor, are sustained all the year round.

Especially interesting, perhaps, is the work among workhouse inmates. In the infirmaries, where the sick, aged, and infirm are located, the Sunday services, somewhat different to those amongst the able-bodied, consist in Bible-reading, a brief exposition, or a short, homely, suitable address with prayer; and if no serious sick case is in the ward, the singing of one or two hymns, which are greatly enjoyed and joined in by many inmates. At the close of this service bedside conversation is held with them.

Regular services are held for the able-bodied in their sitting-rooms and halls, and although their attendance is quite voluntary, very few absent themselves from the services, which are made cheerful by bands of ladies who sing, and in most cases a harmonium is provided.

Work in the lodging-houses, tract distribution, the employment of widows and aged unmarried women, who engage in plain needlework three afternoons per week, work in a warm, airy room, and receive, in addition to tea, 6d. each afternoon; free meals for poor children; a night refuge for deserving men; rescue operations for women. These and many other sound enterprises, skilfully carried out in the spirit of love to God and humanity, make this simply named organisation, whose timely blessing is extended to the suffering and sinful in many parts of the great metropolis, a source of satisfaction to all who have witnessed its operations.

All communications to be addressed to the secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, at the Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal Green, London, E.

Girls' Guild of Good Life.

Many of our readers are familiar with the excellent work carried on by this truly Christian guild since 1885. Its home is Hoxton Hall, where on Tuesday evening, October 25, its thirteenth anniversary was celebrated. The hall was crowded, as is always the case at the Guild anniversaries. The chair was taken by Mr. J. T. Rae. Seated in front of the platform were the gymnastic class and mandoline band, while at the back were the members of the "Social Circle." These various branches of the Guild ministered greatly to the joy of the gathering.

The report of the president (Mrs. Rae), read for her by the Chairman, was of a most encouraging nature. Especially to be noted is the fact recorded that a spirit of greater earnestness prevails among the members, and that they have tried more consistently to let the teaching given them be carried out in the home life and in the workroom. The usual classes have been fairly well attended, and new ones introduced during the year. A club has been formed for young men, which promises well. Great attention appears to have been given to the important work of visitation, between two and three thousand visits being recorded.

During the evening fifty prizes were presented to girls for needlework, wood carving, embroidery, bent ironwork, drilling, instrumental music, text painting, fretwork, writing, cookery, and good conduct.

Short addresses were also delivered, in which the speakers showed their great appreciation of the good work carried on among the girls. Any desiring to be more fully informed respecting this work should communicate with the hon. president, Mrs. J. T. Rae, 17, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N.

North London Gospel Samaritan Mission.—Writing from 63, Isledon-road, Holloway, Mr. Bird describes the work, which includes much labour in a very poor district. There have been definite cases of conversion as the result of the evangelistic and Christian Endeavour services.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

From the annual report of these highly useful institutions one gathers with satisfaction that continued prosperity attends their administration.

There are three hundred and twenty-three orphans living in happy homes that have been planned, built, and furnished for their use, while no less than thirteen hundred and seventy-one children have passed through since the commencement of the work in 1866.

The work is, of course, widely loved on account of the spiritual aims as well as the unceasing industry of the superintendent and her band of toilers, but it is to be regretted that, in spite of the large number of applications accepted, hundreds have been rejected owing to want of room.

The greater number of those who leave are placed in situations as domestic servants. The Home girls, as a rule, do thoroughly well, and the demand is so great that there would be no difficulty in finding places for twenty times the number sent out.

Many nimble fingers, too, are trained to needlework, not only on the little squares of specimen stitches that are prepared for the inspection of visitors and for examination days, but real garments made for use and for wear, orders for fine needlework, underclothing, and baby linen being gladly received.

Miss Sharman is to be congratulated on the good health of her little charges. Considering the nature of the institution, we might reasonably anticipate difficulty in rearing some of the weaker of the little ones, but there has not been a single death to record.

The weekly services held in the homes have, as usual, proved a source of high interest; and it is satisfactory to observe the stress laid on the importance of Bible instruction and study.

The homes at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells and the seaside establishment at Hastings, the educational branch at Stockwell, and the central institution at Austral-street, S.E., have one and all to tell of good work done for the little ones in the Master's name.

The adoption work has been equally blessed. As Miss Sharman rightly says:—"There would be no need for large orphanages, and very little use for pauper schools, if the Divine idea of setting the solitary in families were carried out. How many childless homes would be gladdened by the advent of a little desolate child, and how many families would be made all the richer by adding a little forsaken babe to the nursery group!"

The three old rules of the home are as firmly adhered to as ever—no begging, no voting, no debt. Management expenses are curtailed as much as possible, so that every contribution, large or small, goes direct to the maintenance of the orphans.

Communications for Miss Sharman may be sent to 20, West-square, London, S.E.

Howard-street Gospel Mission.—We have brought our open-air meetings to a close for this season, with thankfulness to God for success which has attended the services. A large number of meetings have been held and over 10,000 Gospel tracts distributed. Sinners have been aroused and backsliders reclaimed, drunkards have signed the pledge and are now attending the Mission. A good work is going on among the young. Special services are being commenced for the winter months.

Tired City Toilers.

A HOME for Tired Women and Girls—tired of making mantles, blouses, umbrellas, neckties, underlinen, artificial flowers, etc., tired of bookbinding, leather sewing, and sweet making. And not only tired, but often ill and weak and suffering, yet obliged to toil on, for if they fail to work, or work fails them, how are they to eat?

A Home for such I was introduced to on the borders of Epping Forest, a true home, so I give a capital letter, for as only ten can be taken at one time the homely feeling is maintained. Those who can pay 8s. a week, but of the 300 yearly visitors most can only pay a part, or have to be taken free of all charge.

Miss Helen Reynolds, who has this work in hand, writes of a sample case: "A young woman whom we have known for years, and who is a very earnest Christian, has too bad health to work in a workroom, or get her work direct from a warehouse' so has to take it through another. This summer she has been working at elaborate capes for ladies. For the making, lining, and putting on fancy collar she gets 2½d. each. These same capes, when finished with trimmings, sell for £2 2s. each. So the maker has a penny in the pound as her share of profit. To help such is the aim of "The Convalescent Home for City Workwomen," and it has helped some 4000 during the sixteen years it has been established. In that time over thirty of the original supporters have gone to the "Home Eternal," but though new friends have not fully taken the places of the old, God still lives, and can incline fresh helpers to come forward at the close of a most trying hot season to every busy city toiler.

Money, articles for the sale, vegetables, furniture, carpets, linen, and cast-off garments will greatly help this quiet but important work. Address Miss Helen Reynolds, Epping New-road, Buckhurst Hill, Essex.

A Wave of Blessing over Dublin.

I AM sure many readers of The Christian will join us in thanksgiving to our God for the great blessing He has given in this city. After four months' tent work in the villages of Herts, Kent, and Middlesex, I came here on September 2 for two months' meetings in Merrion Hall, and it was my joy to join dear Mr. David Rea in his tent, which I found pitched right in the midst of hundreds of poor Roman Catholics, and a mighty work of God going on.

Mr. Rea has been here ever since May, having two meetings every day—a large prayer meeting at twelve o'clock, and Gospel meetings at night. The tent seats 2000 people, and sometimes it was packed full.

A great number of poor Roman Catholics have been saved, and have come out very brightly for the Lord. They stood up before all the people and confessed their faith in Christ Jesus, and said they did not fear the priests, they had trusted Jesus. I have never before seen such a grand work of God.

Our last meeting in the tent was on Sunday, the 16th, when we were crowded out, and many souls were saved.

The tent was taken down on the 17th and sent to Liverpool, where Mr. Rea hopes (God willing) to begin work in the early spring of 1899.

We began meetings nightly in the Merrion Hall on the 17th, and the power of God came upon the meetings and many souls have been saved.

I shall never forget last Sunday night; we had two meetings, one at 7 to 8 o'clock, and the second at 8.15 to 9.30. The hall was crowded at 7 o'clock, and at 8 o'clock we had to get the seats from the lower hall, and the people stood all up the stairs. It was grand to see dear old Merrion Hall packed from bottom to top—many have said they have not seen anything like it since 1859. The power of God came down upon the people, and many dear souls passed from darkness into light. Praise our good God, to Him be all the glory!

Mr. Rea is now in Glasgow at the City Hall. I leave here on Monday, the 31st, for Greenwich. We both shall be very thankful for your prayers.—Yours in our quickly coming Lord, Dublin, October 29, 1898. John Brunton.

On Lord Mayor's Day a tea is to be given to 360 poor children at the Mission-hall, Ben Jonson-road, London, E. The workers will be pleased to welcome any friends at 6 p.m.

INTERNATIONAL S.S. LESSONS.

November 13.

"The Assyrian Invasion."—2 Kings xix. 20-22, 28-37.

Golden Text.—"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."

Invasion of Judah.

SENNACHERIB, King of Assyria, marched from Nineveh with a huge army to conquer Egypt, and he could not leave Judah in his rear, so he invaded it. Hezekiah tried to buy him off by giving the treasures of the Temple, but it is ill work making concessions to the devil.

One section of his army he sends on to the southern border of Judah, and the other he uses for the siege of Jerusalem (the Scripture account is confirmed by the record in the British Museum on the Taylor cylinder, where Sennacherib gives his own story of the invasion).

Siege of Jerusalem.

Teacher should describe the situation and surroundings of Jerusalem. These rendered it a difficult city to besiege. But it seemed that nothing could withstand the hurricane of Assyria's host (185,000 were slain later on, which gives us some notion of their number). Thrilling account in Isa. xxxvi., xxxvii., of the parley between the officer of Sennacherib and the officer of Hezekiah. Former demanding unconditional surrender. The other resting his hope upon God.

The horror of ancient sieges. People reduced to such starvation that parents ate their dead children. The people of Jerusalem knew they were subject to this.

Lesson.—The siege of the heart by sin and Satan. To keep that intact we must be prepared for great privation and suffering. As Judah depended on God for deliverance, so must we. Our foes are many and mighty, our strength is small, but "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Hold the fort for I am coming.

The King Prays.

Hezekiah was not a coward. He had done all he could, and committed the matter entirely to God.

Hope finds its strength in helplessness,
And gladly waits on Thee.

Lessons.—1. The greatest men need to pray. Christ was often in communion with God.

2. Prayer gives inspiration and courage, not to ourselves only, but to all who work under us and with us.

3. In all our battles against wrong and for the right, he only can succeed who is in touch with God by prayer.

God's Answer (20-22, 28-34).

The encouraging answer was sent through Isaiah. Jerusalem is compared to a virgin (21), as one who has never been violated by a conqueror. They who are on the side of God can afford to laugh at their enemies. Sennacherib had not merely ridiculed Judah, and boasted against the inhabitants of Jerusalem, but against God. It is true in this sense, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

"I will put my hook," etc. (28).—This was the common mode of dealing with captives in war. Not to be taken literally here, but that God would humble them, and prove that He had full control over them.

"The remnant" (30).—Many cities of Judah had already been taken.

The people were to be delivered not because they deserved, but "for my servant David's sake." A godly man is a blessing to his nation long after he is buried. "Their works do follow them."

Like the Leaves of the Forest (35-37).

"Angel" means any messenger of God. It may have been in this case a simoom. Note in the plagues of Egypt how God uses natural means for the punishment and destruction of the wicked.

Lesson 1. We have no need to fear when doing our duty.

2. God will protect his own. Compare the Christians of Damascus when Saul went to persecute them.

3. Prayer and faith are always rewarded in God's time and way.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered.
Her feet are firmly planted on the Rock of Ages;
Amid the wildest storm she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder crash.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, It shall be done—sometime! somewhere!

The Czar and Peace.

WHILE anxious fears on international relations were engaging thoughtful minds last week, friends of peace assembled in large numbers in Exeter Hall, Strand. The meeting was held on Wednesday evening, and presided over by the Bishop of London. The platform included representative men of various denominations, and the same may be said of the general audience. In opening the proceedings, Dr. Evans Darby, secretary of the Arbitration Alliance, by which the meeting was convened, read letters from persons of influence who regretted inability to attend, and from Continental organisations in sympathy with the peace movement.

The address of the Bishop of London was timely, and met with a hearty echo in the assembly. He held that the Czar's proposal would in the future be regarded as amongst the most valuable contributions to human welfare made in our generation. We are proud of our advance in material well-being. We should be still more proud of the growth of beneficent ideas, the history of which is always the same. At first they are the and then they are urged, perhaps with undue insistence, as a universal panacea by a small body of devoted adherents. Then they are reduced to due proportion by someone of practical sagacity, and so enter into the sphere of possibilities. When once they have reached this thorny region their real difficulties begin. We meet with many discouragements in endeavouring to bridge over the gulf between the ideal and the real. But nevertheless an enormous stride is taken when this process is begun. Such a stride has been taken in the great question of promoting peace by the proposals of the Czar. All honour to him for them. Whatever success they may meet with at present, they will stand for ever on record as the aspiration of a generous and high-minded ruler. European disarmament can never again be dismissed with a sneer as chimerical. It has been recognised by one who has exceptional means of judging as a possible object of practical endeavour.

Proceeding to give practical advice, the Bishop said: The first step towards peace is that we should each one of us try to acquire a pacific temper. I sometimes wonder if the English are quite successful in impressing other countries with the pacific disposition which we know they possess. True wisdom lies in stating opinions moderately, with due reserve, and strict attention to courtesy. Let other and less powerful nations bluster. We are great and strong enough to show them a more excellent way. I think we might cultivate a little more sympathy with other peoples, and show a little more generosity in connection with our criticism of them.

THE METHODS OF DIPLOMACY

seem unsatisfactory to impetuous minds, but any method must be slow which aims at reaching wisdom and justice. Excited feelings must be allowed to cool before there is room for right judgment.

Dr. Guinness Rogers moved a resolution welcoming the Czar's proposal, and urging the British Government to give cordial co-operation. He rejoiced that the meeting was representative of the Christian Churches. It struck him that they were making the best advance towards reunion by recognising the fact that the great work of Christianity in the world was really interesting alike to all the churches. He believed that the English people were essentially a peace-loving people. He knew they could talk loudly, but he did not believe there was any large party in this country which really believed in a policy of war. If it were true that we desired peace, our manifest duty was to hail the proposal and take care that if any efforts of ours could secure it, it should be carried to a triumphant issue. It was true the proposal had been followed by somewhat difficult circumstances affecting this nation in particular, and because of this very misunderstanding with France there lay upon us the solemn responsibility of showing before all Europe and the world a spirit which should break down the petty obstacles that hindered us from fellowship with our brethren across the Channel, and secure, so far as we could do it, that there should be a restoration of the friendly relations which for a time seemed to have been broken.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, in seconding the resolution, protested against any suggestion that the Czar's action was prompted by sinister motives. They could not argue that manhood was being developed by the spirit of militarism. They must do their best to form and strengthen public opinion that war should follow the suit of slavery and many another evil, and that this great military slavery should receive its death-blow.

The Bishop of Hereford, in supporting the resolution, said the noble and high-minded proposal of the Czar reminded us that in the comity of nations, as between individuals, we were called upon to act as Christian men, and not as Ishmaelites. It behoved us to show we were really in earnest, and he hoped that before long we might be able to give something like an object-lesson by drawing more and more into close relationship with our kin across the sea in America, and that this relationship might be placed upon a basis never to be disturbed by a treaty of arbitration, which should be ready in case difficulties should unhappily arise.

The resolution having been carried unanimously brief addresses were delivered by Revs. J. P. Gledstone and J. Scott Lidgett, Messrs. J. Carvell Williams, M.P., and J. Bevan Braithwaite.

Personalia.

Rev. Darlow Sarjeant has gained strength by his rest, and his medical advisers have allowed him to resume his preaching.

Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has accepted the charge of Holy Trinity (Free Church of England), Oswaldtwistle, Lancs.

Mr. E. P. Field (son of General Sir John Field, one of the former secretaries) has been elected general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, in succession to the late Mr. A. J. Arnold.

Rev. G. H. Giddins has just returned from his visit to Florence, where he has been attending the General Assembly of the Evangelical Church of Italy as the delegate from the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

M. François Coillard will shortly be leaving for his work on the Upper Zambesi. Opportunity will be afforded for bidding him farewell, and friends of the work are asked to keep themselves free to attend such a meeting at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening, December 8.

Dr. Harry Guinness has been visiting Scotland in connection with the "Helpers to Regions Beyond" Union. He has conducted large and interesting missionary meetings in many places, giving his lecture "Children of the Sun," descriptive of his recent missionary journey in South America.

Rev. S. G. Green, D.D., one of the secretaries of the Religious Tract Society, recently preached the eighty-fifth anniversary sermons at the Silver-street Baptist Chapel, Taunton. Dr. Green was pastor of the church half a century ago, and, in spite of his advanced age, he retains much of his youthful vigour.

Mr. J. Theodore Isaac writes:—"After much thought and prayerful consideration, my wife and I feel, with the deepest regret, forced to resign the position which it has been our joy and privilege to hold in connection with the Ratcliff Strangers' Rest for the past twenty years. Will you kindly make known the need for someone to come forward and take up the secretaryship and general superintendence of this important work. I shall be glad to correspond with anyone who may feel led to take my place, which is voluntary and honorary, and can assure them of much sympathy and help from the present devoted staff of workers. We are retaining our connection with the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest, which has always been financially separate." Communications to Mr. Isaac may be addressed, Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E.

The West Indies Hurricane.—In our notice last week of this catastrophe and the efforts being made partially to relieve the distress occasioned by it, the name of the friend who received and forwarded contributions was given as G. Sutherland. It ought to be Rev. S. Sunderland, 84, Tonbridge-road, Barking, E.

Death of Madame de Scherer.—By the death of Madame de Schérer (née de Winterfeld) the Evangelical churches of France and Switzerland lose a warm friend and supporter. The widow of Colonel Emile de Schérer, one of the founders of the Evangelical church at Nice, she seconded with great liberality many enterprises for the spread of the Gospel. Among other works which owed much to her sympathy may be mentioned the School for Evangelists at Sainte Philomène, where she died on October 24 in perfect peace.

Mrs. Bruere's Orphans.

OUR young readers will remember that some time ago they contributed towards the support of a number of famine orphans under the charge of Mrs. Bruere. On another page some interesting information is given by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer about the wonderful progress these poor sufferers have made since they were rescued. The engraving on this page is from the photograph referred to by our correspondent, and it confirms what is said about the improved appearance of the girls. The boys and girls who helped will be interested in the following description of those who make up the group:—

Bhaghari, who stands on the left of the picture, is the youngest child of her parents. After the death of her father from privation caused by famine, the family was without food for six days, and then separated to do the best they could for themselves individually. People were dying from starvation all around them. Bhaghari, at that time aged eleven years, was told to go in search of her husband, but as she had no recollection of ever having seen him she declined to go. The marriage must have been contracted when she was a very small child, as is often the case in India. Instead of searching for a husband whom she did not know, she painfully made her way on foot from her village to the nearest town, where she was succoured by a Christian missionary, by whom she was sent to Mrs. Bruere. Bhaghari has pleasing features, but when not animated by conversation her face bears a pained expression, doubtless begotten by the agony she endured during the famine. It is to be hoped that time will efface this trace of her suffering. She is one of the elder girls who have been baptized on the profession of their faith in Christ.

Shantibai, the young woman standing in the centre of the group, well illustrates some of the possibilities of famine orphans. She was an orphan in the famine prior to the last, when, with others, she was rescued by that devoted missionary Mrs. M. B. Fuller. Shantibai was soon brought to a saving knowledge of Christ, and in time became a Bible-woman. When Mrs. Bruere began to rescue famine children, early in 1897, Shantibai came to help in the care of them. Her presence among the emaciated and suffering starvelings was a blessed inspiration. Most were in a dreadful condition, sick with various maladies due to want of food; but Shantibai would bid them cheer up, saying, "I was once like you, but look at me now!" Shantibai remains to assist to teach and train those whom her loving devotion has helped to win back to health.

Sunderia, who stands on the right of the picture, with her hand on her little sister's shoulder, is one of the brightest and best girls in Mrs. Bruere's Orphanage, giving evidence of a real change of heart. She is a pattern of industry and helpfulness, the kind of girl that Christian parents in Western lands delight in. She does not know her age, but it is probably about thirteen. Her little sister, Sarasvati, is, perhaps, nine.

Ganesha, the womanly looking girl who sits, book in hand, between Shantibai and Sunderia, is not so old as she seems in the picture. She is, however, womanly in disposition. A few days since, in relating her history in my hearing, she said, while thoughts of the past and present crowded in upon her, "I feel like crying, and I feel like laughing!" Not much more than a year ago she was destitute in body and spirit. Now she is fed and clothed, with the joy of salvation in her soul. She is both a capable and a good girl.

Thaie is the child who sits next to Ganesha, on an arm of a chair. The chief points in her history are that her parents are dead; that she is married! but does not know anything of her husband; and that a good Samaritan, in the form of a Christian missionary, found and succoured her when she was in a starving condition.

Tighai, the now bonnie lassie who sits next to Bhaie, is a heroine. Her father was a carpenter, and died not long before the famine. Tighai and her mother then worked in the fields for a livelihood. The famine ended their occupation. The mother died shortly afterwards, and with her dying breath committed her little baby to the care of Tighai, then less than twelve years of age, giving her a small sum of money to be expended solely in the purchase of milk for the child. The brave girl was faithful to the charge. The painful story of the next ten months need not be recounted. It is sufficient to say that at the end thereof, having reached a town, she sank down, weeping and hungry, with the baby in her arms, on the verandah of a European dwelling. Happily, a woman missionary dwelt there. The famished girl and her baby sister were soon fed, and invited to remain, an offer which was gratefully accepted till they were handed over to the care of Mrs. Bruere. Tighai is another of the elder girls who have been baptized on the profession of their faith in Christ.

Concerning Persodai, the bright little girl leaning on Tighai's knee, all that is known is that she was found deserted, destitute, and suffering, having been left to shift for herself in a famine district. Her pitiable condition was her claim on Christian love.

Temperance Notes.

"The water will not hurt me, but the rum will," was the answer of one of the native head men of Kusaie, Micronesia, when the captain of a trading vessel threatened to throw him overboard because he refused to take the glass of strong drink offered him.

The Congo Administration has put a further restriction on the liquor traffic in Central Africa. Absinthe, hitherto imported for the consumption of Europeans, is now added to the list of alcoholic liquors prohibited both in the Upper and Lower Congo.

At a temperance gathering in connection with the annual conference of women workers, held in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, addresses were given by Lady Battersea, Miss M. E. Docwra, Mrs. Locker Lampson, and others. The audience was large and enthusiastic.

Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, suggests four points of which our young men should be convinced in order that they should become total abstainers—"1. That nature is against alcohol; for it is not the natural fruit of the vine, but the product of decomposition. 2. The Bible is against alcohol. 3. The Church is against it, and must be; a tippling pastor is worse than any ten grog-shops. 4. The State is, or ought to be, against alcohol, as alcohol is against the State and against law."

In the neighbourhood of Liverpool-street Station there is a public-house which is conducted in a peculiar manner. Smoking is strictly forbidden. If you enter with pipe or cigar in mouth, you will not be served. The chief rule, however, is that customers can have only one supply of liquor, and that of a limited quantity. The proprietors reserve to themselves the right to conduct their business as they choose, and by a placard on the walls they recommend those who are not willing to conform to the rules to transfer their patronage elsewhere.

Presiding at the annual business meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance in Manchester, Sir Wilfrid Lawson said the licensing party had been at work four hundred years and had made an awful mess, as gaols and asylums told. The Alliance party, who had been organised forty years now, asked for an opportunity to try their plan. To complain that the Alliance had not made much progress in forty years in view of the licensing history of four hundred years was the height of impudence and insolence. In the evening a great demonstration was held in the Free Trade Hall. Dr. John Clifford, who presided, said an inevitable step in our political development was to give to the people within properly arranged areas the control of the drink traffic.

The Y.W.C.A. in India.

A NUMBER of workers and friends interested in the Y.W.C.A. recently gathered at Morley Hall, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, to bid God-speed to workers returning to India. Hon. Emily Kinnaird presided and in a few earnest words commended to the prayers of her hearers those already in the field as well as those returning.

Miss Bethune, National President of India, said the object of the Y.W.C.A. in India is to reach the Eurasians. They are all English speakng and nominal Christians. In India and Ceylon there are over six hundred thousand of these, those whom no special mission to the heathen can reach. Miss Bethune said: I think it is the privilege of the Y. W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A., who are in the forefront of the battle, to meet the needs, and seek to win these, our brothers and sisters, to the Lord. Those amongst whom we work are mostly employed in houses of business, as school teachers, and in other trades in which women are engaged in that country, and what we do is to seek to win them for Christ, and stir them up to love and zeal for their own country-women. They are the ones that we believe will be so valuable as missionaries to their own people, who understand them, and whom they understand. They have the advantage of knowing the dialects, and also of knowing English, and therefore they have not to spend, as missionaries have, a year in learning the language. We have now in India 105 branches of the Y.W.C.A., fifty-six of which are English speaking, and 49 vernacular. The English-speaking members number 2,213, and the native members 1,356. We need to pray that they may not only be members of the Association, but living members of the Lord Jesus Christ. Workers too are needed; holy consecrated women who will give themselves to the work in India.

Miss Collins, secretary of the Calcutta Branch, said: We started, before we came home, a branch for Tamil women, and at the opening meeting over seventy joined. They are all Christians, but they much need help and sympathy. I cannot tell you how they have appreciated the meetings we have been able to hold for them. God provided a secretary, but these women have to be visited in their homes, and they want help in all sorts of ways. For a worker to go visiting them costs money, and I want to know whether some branch represented here, or some individual worker, would undertake to collect £5 a year for supporting the Tamil work in Calcutta. For our Calcutta home we still want help. We have not yet a house of our own, as they have in Bombay. Most of all we want workers; I cannot help thinking that if we were all right with God we should not want to be continually reminded about the needs of India, but if He wanted us we should be there by now.

Miss Jones, from Colombo, who is returning to take up work in Bombay, after giving some helpful thoughts, said: At Colombo we have about 200 members of the Y.W.C.A., and they seem nothing compared with the numbers we see in the streets; but how can we reach them without workers? We have three homes in India, and we have only about twelve workers for the whole of that great land; we ought to have homes in all the large cities of India.

Contributions will be received by Miss Bethune, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

National Conference.

The British National Conference, which met at Edinburgh from October 25 to 27, may be described as one of the most important and successful that has ever gathered in the northern metropolis. Some 290 delegates were present from all parts of the kingdom. There were earnest deliberations day by day on practical questions, while encouraging reports of progress were also given.

The closing meeting, which was of a public nature, was held in the Free Assembly Hall, at which there was a large attendance. Lord Overtoun presided, and gave a happy address from the words "Go forward." Major Lombard spoke on witnessing; Mrs. Colville on the work in Edinburgh, with its forty branches and 2286 members; Mrs. Smith for Ireland; Mrs. Moore for British Associations; and Hon. Miss E. Kinnaird on the World's Y.W.C.A. The closing address was given by Dr. John Smith on "Rooted, Growing, Serving."

The Y.M.C.A.

Associations have recently been formed at Tarbet Dornoch, and Nethy Bridge, N.B., while those at Forres and Nairn have been resuscitated.

Mr. W. R. Lane spoke for two nights at Coventry at the close of the membership campaign. A number have given in their names as accepting Christ. All the religious meetings are filling up, and there is an awakening going on.

A small company of young men in Lichfield, who have been meeting for Bible study and Christian fellowship for many months past, were recently met by the district travelling secretary, and formed into a Y.M.C.A. auxiliary.

At a reception in connection with the Bedford Association an interesting report of work done during the year was submitted. Particulars were given of the progress made in connection with the new building, now in course of erection.

A meeting of men, convened by the Prudential Prayer Union, which is affiliated with the Y.M.C.A., was held on October 26. Nearly six hundred were present, and an address upon the subject of "Success" was delivered by Rev. E. J. Kennedy.

At the annual conference of the North-We District Union at Kendal, on October 27, an interesting discussion took place on the subject of "The Inner Life of the Associations," Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. Henry Armstrong being the principal speakers.

At the annual meeting of the Hanley Y.M.C.A. the report of the secretary, Mr. J. Palmer Howard, showed that the membership has risen to three hundred and sixty-five, and that the various departments of the work are now in a thoroughly efficient condition.

The annual meeting of the South-East Metropolitan District Union was held, by invitation of Mr. Alexander Young, at his residence, Blackheath, on October 27. It was reported by the Woolwich delegates that they are contemplating the erection of new premises at a cost of upwards of £1200.

The Bayswater Association was last week the scene of a very interesting series of meetings, when special addresses of a practical nature were given to large companies of young men by Preb. Webb-Peploe, Rev. E. Hopkins, Rev. G. Hanson, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. G. H. McGregor, and Rev. F. Paynter. Many hearts were reached by these earnest exhortations, and the result will be a strengthening of the ranks of the Association.

Successful annual meetings have been held by several Associations in the North-Eastern District, including those at Hartlepool and Middlesbrough. At Middlesbrough the need for more suitable premises was brought before the meeting. At Darlington arrangements were made for deputational visits to the various Associations in the district, and for the holding of periodical Scripture examinations among the members.

Mr. Alderman Coltman presided over a representative meeting of Christian workers in the Town Hall, Loughborough, on Oct. 19, at which a Y.M.C.A. for the town was formed. A week later a well-attended and encouraging public meeting in furtherance of the interests of the new Association was held in the Corn Exchange.

Wesleyan 20th Century Fund.

AT the latest meeting of the special committee on the million-guinea scheme it was agreed to advise the general committee to establish scholarships at the Leys School. The sum of £100,000 was allotted for a "plant" fund for the missionary society, to provide for the building of mission chapels, schools, etc. An equal amount was voted to home missions, including the Wesley Deaconesses Institute, and temperance work, and £50,000 was allocated to the children's home.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., brought forward a resolution that a sum of £250,000 be allocated for the purpose of the purchase of a suitable site in London, in a convenient and prominent situation, and the erection thereon of a monumental connexional building. The area should be at least 20,000 square yards, and the estimated cost would be £150,000, so that at least £250,000 would be required to erect the same. The proposal would include a large central hall to accommodate 3000 persons. This was absolutely necessary. At present there was no central hall in London for public meetings. Then they needed a smaller hall to seat 1000 persons, also a lecture-hall or library with suitable committee rooms. Provision would be made for the home missionary department, the Allan Library, and other Methodist departments.

THE EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

WITH reference to a short visit paid to Albany, N.Y., by these two brethren, a local paper says:—

It is many years since Albanians have had a chance to hear the evangelists together, and the meeting-places where they sang and preached were crowded to overflowing. On the Saturday night 1000 persons heard them at the Trinity Methodist Church. On Sunday morning they held services before the inmates of the penitentiary, and in the afternoon led a men's meeting in Jermain Hall, at which 600 or 700 were present. At this meeting Mr. Moody spoke about his experiences at the penitentiary and in prison work in general. Of late this has been a favourite field with him, and there is no doubt that he has achieved wonderful results. Mr. Moody expressed himself gratified with the results of the services held in the city. The prisoners at the penitentiary listened to him earnestly, and there were many requests for copies of his book.

Although both evangelists are getting on in years, they seem to have lost none of their old-time vigour. Mr. Sankey's voice is as powerful and sweet as ever, and Mr. Moody is the same dominating personality.

The Weaver Brothers.

A FORTNIGHT'S mission, conducted by the Weaver Brothers in the Free South Church, Peterhead, was brought to a close last Friday. The mission has been a real success in the quickening of believers, the restoration of backsliders, and the awakening and converting of the careless. Notwithstanding the stormy weather, the audiences were good, and every night increased, till by the end of the first week 500 people were in nightly attendance.

Mr. Bewley Weaver spoke with the eloquence of conviction on the power of the Holy Ghost. Mr. Frank wings the message with his sweet gift of song, and not a few were arrested or comforted by the music of his Gospel stealing into their hearts. On the second Sabbath evening the glory of the Lord filled the house, and a number were utterly broken down, and went into the vestry-hall for conversation. For the next hour and a-half the church was a place of weeping, rejoicing, praying, and pleading, and nearly all the anxious ones found peace in believing. Many heart-searching experiences have come within my knowledge during the last fortnight; we have the names of over sixty men and women who profess to have surrendered to the Lord; many of these have been members of my church and other churches, and respected members of society. Whole families have professed conversion, and as one godly father said, whose four grown daughters and son have experienced the blessing, "I can only say it is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in mine eyes." That God has done a glorious work among us I most gratefully acknowledge.

George W. Alison,
Minister Free South Church.

A Mission in Birmingham.

Closely following the Convention held by the President of the Wesleyan Conference in Birmingham, the Wesleyan churches of that city have joined in a simultaneous mission for the purpose of unitedly appealing to the unsaved multitudes in their midst. In twenty-two or more chapels special mission services were begun on Sunday, October 23, and continued during the week. The mission preachers were in part ministers of the city, and also ministers from various parts of the country.

Great success has attended the services; many hundreds of persons have passed through the inquiry-rooms. It is felt that the Methodist [illegible] in Birmingham have received a great [illegible] in this combined effort to reach the masses and to save the young people connected with the Sunday-schools. The services in some cases are being continued this week. C.

Metropolitan Theatre.

THE theatre was well filled on Sunday evening, when the thirtieth anniversary of the Hyde Park Mission was celebrated. Converts from all parts of London evidenced their love by their attendance and help, despite the weather.

Mr. Chas. Cook told of the beginning of the work in the open air and in the lodging-houses of the neighbourhood some years before the park services were commenced. The park services of last summer were among the best meetings they had experienced, and the new theatre had been well attended. During October nearly forty persons had been dealt with as anxious. The Browning Quartette and Mrs. Randall, by their sweet singing, have greatly added to the interest of the meetings.

At the after meeting some hundreds stayed behind, and many professed to accept Christ as their Saviour and Lord. During the thirty years £20,000 has been spent, over 7,000 souls have professed salvation, and, besides England, twenty-seven different nationalities have been represented by the converts of the Mission.

London Medical Mission.

WE have just closed a very happy mission of a fortnight's duration. Mr. Richard Spragg conducted the services, on Medical Mission days, with the patients, and every evening also for the general public. There were many evident tokens of blessing among young and old, and we have reason to bless God for the visit of our brother to us. The work was divided between our two missions, here and at Lambeth, and special services for children were also held, attended with encouragement.

Mr. Spragg is eminently fitted for work among the classes that we reach, and he has a very earnest and clear way of presenting the Gospel.

H. Soltau, Supt.

Gospel Work in South Wales.

THE strike among the colliers is over, but the havoc it has made in the ranks of the toilers is painfully evident; distress and privation will be with us, I fear, for some months to come. The earnest prayers which went up daily at our meetings are being answered in spiritual results; hardly a week passes without seeing penitents seeking mercy. Backsliders are returning to the fold, and sinners are getting saved. Many happy cases of blessing we could cite. News is to hand from Brynmawr of a gracious awakening and souls coming to Jesus.

Mr. Alfred Smith, who has retired from the London police force, has taken up work among us. He and his devoted wife will give themselves largely to rescue and "special cases." A house has been taken where such can be lodged pro tem. The field of service is very vast and needy, thousands throng these Welsh valleys, and much more could be done if help were forthcoming. The new report, "Toils and Triumphs in the King's Service," will be gladly sent upon receipt of address.

Gerald R. Coultas.

Evangelistic Movements.

Mr. D. L. Moody is conducting a series of Gospel meetings at Denver, Col.

Mr. Canning has concluded a series of Gospel meetings in the Free Church, Peebles. There have been some cheering cases of awakening and decision.

Mr. Henry Varley has completed a week of meetings in Montreal. Much interest was manifested; and it is likely that a return visit will be paid later on.

Mr. F. W. Pascoe, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a seventeen days' mission at Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells. Several were led to confess Christ, and believers have received much spiritual strengthening.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith (London Evangelisation Society) has just closed a fortnight's mission in North Devon. Many professed to accept Christ, and believers were much blessed. Mr. Smith is now at the Wesleyan Chapel, North Seaton.

The Jubilee wing of the Seamen's Institute at Middlesbrough has just been opened by Eleanor Duchess of Northumberland. The new wing adjoins the Mission to Seamen Church and Institute, and comprises twelve rooms for officers, apprentices, ambulance, and literature. There is also an excellent coffee bar.

Rev. Joseph Henderson, formerly of Cheetham Hill Congregational Church, is engaged in a mission at the Knot Mill Hall, in connection with the Manchester Congregational Mission Board.

Rev. John McNeill having closed a fortnight's work in Invergordon with good results, takes a short rest preparatory to going to Stornoway for a season of preaching. His visit to Stornoway is looked forward to with keen anticipation by all classes in the community.

Rev. D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth, S.E., is holding a series of meetings in Nairnshire. On Sunday week he began in Auldearn Free Church (Rev. John McNeill's), and the interest was very marked. During the week quite a number professed conversion.

Mr. James Sprunt has just concluded thirteen days' special services in the Co-operative Hall, Horsham. The meetings were arranged specially for Christians, and have proved most helpful. All denominations were represented. The addresses were upon "The Second Coming of Christ," "The Inspiration of the Bible," and "Practical Godliness." Many testified to help and blessing. H. May.

Gipsy Smith has held a ten days' mission for the Liverpool Free Church Council in Hengler's Circus. The audiences were very large, and the spirit of inquiry after the truth was manifestly present at every service. The addresses were full of plain Gospel taught earnestly, pressed home upon the hearts and consciences of the hearers. Several hundred persons were conversed with in the inquiry-room.

Rev. F. C. Spurr has just brought to a close a ten days' mission in connection with the Morley and District Free Church Council. The mission has been an unqualified success, and will never be forgotten by those who attended it. Seldom have the claims of religion been put forward more convincingly, while many have realised for the first time in their lives the splendid strength of the Christian position. The council feel that a better beginning to their winter's work it would have been impossible to have had.

Rev. J. Manton Smith has closed a ten days' mission at Dewsbury, conducted under the auspices of the Free Church Council. Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends, Independent Methodists, New Connexion Methodists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans joined heartily in the movement. By songs and sermons Mr. Smith cheered and stimulated the churches. Gipsy Smith came eighteen months ago as the rousing Elijah, "Manton Smith" has followed as the gentle Elisha—both God's prophets, one supplementing the work of the other. C. P.

The Hanley Christian Mission is making progress under the superintendence of Mr. W. J. Taylor. In a report for the past three months we read:—"Every department of the good work has greatly increased in usefulness. Many have found the Lord to the joy and satisfaction of their souls, and are workers with us. Mr. Jas. Wade has undertaken the superintendence of our Sabbath school, which is increasing in numbers and good spirit. During the three months we have held sixty-five open-air meetings in the streets and squares of the town, and about sixty-five indoor services; five thousand tracts distributed, forty new members added to the roll, and about seventy visits to the homes of the people."

The Evangelisation Society send an evangelist twice a year to Cox Green Mills, belonging to Messrs. J. and T. Garnett, to conduct mission services for the benefit of the workpeople and others who may be willing to attend. Mr. Henry Collins has been selected for the past six years for this work, and his coming amongst the people of Cox Green has always been looked forward to with eager anticipation. The mission, which ended on the evening of Sunday, October 30, was encouraging from every point of view. The attendances were good on week-nights, and always crowded out on Sundays. The evangelist has made many new friends, and his addresses were marked by much clearness, vigour, and freshness. Many conversions have resulted, especially among young men. J. Naughten.

As was recently intimated, a special mission to the blind of London is being conducted by the Indigent Blind Visiting Society. The afflicted people are being brought together in various centres, and after a free tea are addressed in the name of Christ and for their soul's good. Already three such meetings have been held—one at Kennington, at which the Gospel was preached by Pastor Archibald

G. Brown; a second at Stratford, when addresses were delivered by Revs. Alexander Jeffrey and W. Skinner; and a third at Bow, when the speakers were Revs. Sydney J. Jones and F. H. King. Already eleven hundred blind and guides have been gathered. Six other meetings are being organised, so that in all about four thousand persons will be embraced. After the meetings each blind person receives a shilling, and each guide a good book. The entire expense is being borne by a lady who is deeply interested in the welfare of our sightless friends.

The Aldersgate "Mid-day."

At the noon prayer-meeting on Monday last Mr. Leonard Weaver gave a helpful address on the Epistle to the Romans, demonstrating the power of God to deliver from sin. The speaker described in graphic fashion his former efforts in combating his temper, and how in the course of an ebullition his finger came to be broken. Taking that as a Divine reminder, he devoted himself with groans to seeking deliverance, which came, accompanied by a keen realisation of the words, "Sin shall not have dominion over you."

Many cheering testimonies were given, especially of a bricklayer and a costermonger—recently converted at the Tottenham tent—who had been extraordinary out-and-out characters in the service of Satan, but were now sobered and saved and members of a local Bible-class.

The Churchmen's Union was inaugurated at a well-attended meeting at the Church House, Westminster, on Monday, when Canon Eyton presided. The objects are to unite Churchmen who consider that dogma is capable of re-interpretation and re-statement in accordance with the clearer perception of truth attained by discovery and research; to take such steps for the advancement of legislation in matters of doctrine, discipline, and dogma as may seem to conduce to the safety, welfare, and progress of the Church; and to promote a conciliatory attitude towards Nonconformists, with a view to making the Church inclusive and truly national. The immediate action of the Union will be directed towards bringing about a condition of affairs in which the layman will have a real and practical share in Church government.

Evangelical Alliance.

The fifty-second annual conference of the Evangelical Alliance was opened at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, on Monday. At the afternoon meeting the great need of unity between Christian bodies was urged, Rev. J. B. asking how dare anyone say that this was impossible when the Queen was a good Episcopalian in England and a good Presbyterian in Scotland.

Afterwards a conversazione was held, followed by a crowded public meeting. Captain the Hon. R. Bingham presided, and said that when Evangelical societies were so much in need of support it was a farce to talk of Christian union. He implored Evangelicals to sink all differences and to offer a bold and uncompromising opposition to the encroachments of Rome and the machinations of Ritualists. The extreme men in the Church were dangerous to the religious health of the nation.

Rev. Hubert Brooke said that never had the Evangelical Alliance required to be a greater reality than at the present time, when they saw such a tendency Romeward. The old fighting instinct of their warrior ancestors would begin to stir in their hearts, but he cautioned them against the use of carnal weapons, and also against the men who were seeking by political dodges to purify the Church of Christ.

Rev. Dr. Wright (Liverpool) regretted that he did not see such growth of the Alliance as should be visible. Never was there a more eloquent call to Churchmen to see on what terms they could offer the right hand of fellowship to other Protestant bodies.

Rev. H. R. Jackson spoke of the great need to combat sacerdotal and rationalistic error and maintain simple Gospel truth, as opposed to the dangerous and deadly teaching of Romanism.

The Conference was continued up till yesterday (Wednesday).

Six cases were rescued, two entering London Homes and one being restored to a sorrowing mother. Captain Key, R.N., three Salvation Army sisters, and Mr. Wilson McCree, secretary of the society, with others, conducted the meetings.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Lord's Supper.

Dear Sir,—Much has been said and written on the purpose and use of the Lord's Supper, as opposed to the Popish elements, as taught in the charges of the Archbishop. May I be permitted to add a word on the symbolical teaching contained in God's Word on this subject?

Bengel, that prince of commentators, says: "The Supper denoted a table, as opposed to an altar," and I would venture to suggest that it denotes a social meal, as contrasted with an act of worship, thereby enlarging the scope of its doctrine to embrace all that concerns our human life, as complemental to baptism, which represents our initiation into the new life. Should this be thought a lowering of its purpose or materialising of its character, we may quote Paul in 1 Cor. x. 31, "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Surely when the ordinance is confined to the children of God nothing they do should be short of this highest object.

The name applied to it in Scripture—"breaking of bread"—confirms this view of the question. Whether we regard the appointed elements in use, as bathing in baptism, it would seem more in accordance with our Lord's custom of applying already existing practices in common use, or the testimony of history, to this being the custom of the early Church (see Pliny's letter, or St. Paul in 1 Cor. xi. 21). The early believers being mostly of the poorest class, we may see how appropriate the meal in common was for keeping up the communion of saints, as now is increasingly the custom in all evangelistic work, and as was the custom of the Lord Himself. How totally different is the picture thus practically afforded to the benevolent fruits of Christianity, compared with the Ritualistic ceremony witnessed in all our orthodox churches.

It has been rightly said that the question in debate is one that involves the whole nation, and not merely as laymen, but as patriots. We may have to recur to the old question of "the Solemn League and Covenant" to be discussed, not in the Jerusalem Chamber by ecclesiastics, but by the assembled people in Hyde Park, after the order of the 19th century; for this question, like the Gospel, is come to the whole world, and we must allow the Lord to settle it in his own way. If the Church declines her duty, the Lord can find other instruments.

Ixworth, Oct. 28. H. M. Conran.

Human Depravity.

Dear Sir,—As a humble Bible student, I am most desirous to obtain some opinion on the following. Quite recently I have come across a well-meaning Christian man who has a peculiarly intense desire of bringing up at every opportunity, especially in a class of young fellows, his ideas of utter and total depravity. What I should like to know is—can we take this as a correct and Scriptural interpretation of the Word?

When man fell, he evidently placed himself under the penalty of death. But, on the other hand, am I to understand that, from henceforward, Adam had not a spark of good in him? If so, what is the meaning of that portion of an early chapter in Genesis wherein it says, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man"?

Kindly give us an explanation of the texts "There is none righteous, no, not one," and "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." To me the Scriptures do not bear out the teaching that there is absolutely no good in man, either morally or spiritually. "Total or utter depravity" may or may not be Scriptural, but I for one would like some enlightenment.

An Anxious Enquirer.

[It is essential to confine ourselves to Scripture terms or their equivalents. Let your friend state what he means by utter and total depravity (for it is a first necessity in debate that there be agreement as to the value of the terms used). Then let him substantiate his view by reference to Scripture. Having done so, let him leave it for the consideration of the rest. It will kill any class for one person to be perpetually harping upon one thing.—Ed.]

THE BOOK WORLD.

SOME NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

The November number of Wings, the official organ of the Women's Total Abstinence Union (1d. i, Ludgate-hill, E.C.), contains a biographical notice of the late Mrs. Edward Crossley, of Halifax.

There is a symposium in The Temple Magazine on "My Ideal Newspaper," also a sketch of the Marquis of Salisbury. There are illustrations to these and other contributions, one of which tells the story of Pitman's shorthand.

There is always good reading on work in the foreign field in the Church Missionary Intelligencer. The new number opens with an account of the Society's jubilee in 1848, which is full of interest in view of the approaching centenary celebration.

The Quiver more than sustains its reputation, both from literary and artistic standpoints. The November number includes three excellent coloured plates—the finding of the Saviour in the Temple (Holman Hunt), and the captive maid and Esther and Haman (M. L. Gow).

The Baptist Monthly continues its course, with every promise of enlarged usefulness. It is well suited for localisation by churches. The November issue opens with an article by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, who answers the question, "Is a Forward Movement possible to the Baptist Denomination?" (1d. monthly. A. H. Stockwell & Co.)

The Boy's Own Paper opens with a large coloured plate of national flags, also the flags and funnels of our steamship lines and fishing steamers. The general contents are fully up to the well-known standard. The companion monthly, The Girl's Own Paper, has two brilliantly coloured full-page pictures that will receive much attention, besides a long array of most instructive and helpful articles.

In The Sunday at Home a Canadian story is begun by Emily P. Weaver, and there are several good topical and biographical papers. Dr. Flinders Petrie contributes a deeply interesting article on "The Harvest from Egypt, 1898," with numerous engravings of archæological finds. "Glimpses of Protestant France" is another readable paper. The Leisure Hour is a very attractive number in its own peculiar vein of literature. There is a paper on the Bismarck memoirs, and Mr. Gordon writes pleasantly on the commerce of the Port of London. An illustrated article on the Queen's clocks at Windsor is full of curious interest.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Children's Treasury is a very desirable gift-book for a child, full of easy but sound reading, and beautifully illustrated. (1s. Nelsons.)

There is much that is just to the mind of the young in the new volume of Early Days. The stories and other contents combine to make this a book that will instruct as well as please our boys and girls. (2s. Kelly.)

Little Folks (3s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) seems to grow better as the years go by. The volume just issued is artistically a thing of beauty, and will prove a perennial joy to the six-year-olds of the family circle. The many coloured pictures are one only of the numerous attractive features of this old favourite.

A grand work is chronicled in The Zenana, the monthly magazine of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. The fifth volume of this serial, like its predecessors, is filled with descriptive articles and reports, which are sure to interest all students of missionary enterprise. (2s. 6d. Office of the Mission, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.; and Messrs. Partridge & Co.)

A familiar friend for many years past, and an annual for which the young look forward with high expectations, is Our Darlings. It is truthfully called "The Children's Treasury of Pictures and Stories." There are wholesome tales and good reading enough to occupy the children during the winter months, while the coloured plates and other illustrations are uniformly bright and entertaining. (3s. and 5s., according to binding. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

There is always something interesting to humane minds in The Animals' Friend, a bright and purposeful monthly, edited by Sidney G. Trist. The annual volume is a repository of information on our dumb companions, and regarding efforts against vivisection and other forms of cruelty. The pages have also an entertaining side, with their records of animal life and interest, while the illustrations are numerous and of a high order. (2s. 6d. net. George Bell & Sons.)

Among boys' magazines, a high popularity is enjoyed by Young England, the annual volume (5s.) of which is a storehouse of information and entertainment. The pages are characterised by pleasing variety, and many an effort is made to point youthful readers onward to responsible life, with its opportunities and duties. For the younger members of our families there is The Child's Own Magazine (1s.), which is as good as ever, the volume being gay outside and bright within. (Sunday School Union.)

The Sunday Magazine presents its accustomed variety of choice reading, fully illustrated, not to mention the lighter items in the form of stories and sketches. We notice many good papers on biography and travel. In the latter section is a capital series on Egypt in old times, by Dr. James Wells, entitled "From the Land of the Lotus." Dean Farrar's articles on "Great Books" are full of illumination. The "Sunday Evenings with the Children" talks are as good as ever, and that is saying a great deal. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

A companion volume is Good Words, edited by Dr. Donald Macleod. Here again there are serials for those who seek entertainment, and many contributions of more substantial quality. Lady Magnus writes on "Life's Minor Moralities"; there are papers on Durham and Carlisle Cathedrals, admirably illustrated, and the poetical and literary departments are well supplied. The Sunday readings are a valuable feature, and throughout the year they are from the pen of Dr. Walter C. Smith. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

The second volume of the fourth series of Great Thoughts contains the parts issued from April to September, and makes the twenty-ninth volume from the beginning. While providing reading for varied ages and many classes, this publication finds special favour with those who are ever on the look-out for points and facts wherewith to illustrate sermons and addresses. While conducted as at present its pages will not disappoint thoughtful readers. The various indexes are welcome. (4s. 6d. A. W. Hall, 28 to 32, Hutton-street, E.C.)

The "Herald of Mercy" Annual this year is entitled On the Look-Out: and Other Readings. Whether in prose or poetry, the contents have a definite evangelistic purpose; while the illustrations are striking and numerous. In its monthly issues the "Herald of Mercy" is a favourite in many a home, and distributed with special pleasure by many a Christian worker. In volume form it is well adapted for presentation to young and old. It should have a place in village libraries and in the packs of colporteurs. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

The Leisure Hour was with us in the days of youth, and it still waits on its valued ministry, informing and influencing the home circle. From the story pages, along the way of papers and sketches of a useful and entertaining character, until we come to the notes on science and the "Varieties," we find the contents always good alike, and well illustrated. Special reference may be made to the biographical articles, and to a series on Greenwich Observatory, by E. W. Maunder, F.R.A.S., and to "Over-sea Notes," in which much that is of permanent interest is recorded. (7s. 6d. R.T.S.)

With equal pleasure we open the volume of The Sunday at Home, the pages of which have something for young and old. There are illustrations in colour and on toned paper and many engravings. Among the series are "Women's Settlements in London" and "Tombs of the English Kings." Rev. H. J. Piggott, of Rome, writes on "New Italy," and there are some good studies in the history of Elijah, from the pen of the late M. A. Scott Moncrieff. Sir William Dawson writes on "Prehistoric Man," and there are the usual "Sermons for Sunday Morning," with other devotional papers and Scripture expositions. (7s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

BOOKS FOR THE NURSERY.

Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co. have made excellent additions to their several series of books for children in Christian homes. They are all filled with good and suitable reading matter, and admirably illustrated.

First comes Sunday Sunshine, edited by Catherine Shaw, which will be prized by little ones from six to twelve years of age (boards 1s. 6d., cloth 2s. 6d.). Then we have Little Frolic, an old friend, in large type, filled with short and bright readings. Animal Land, by Kake Chattan, is sure to interest young folk, and instruct them at the same time (2s. and 3s. 6d. each, according to binding). Another capital volume, All Play, by Ismay Thorn, is very entertaining with its pictures and stories, every one of them "just the thing" for the children (cloth 3s. 6d.). Lastly comes Our Darlings' Story Book, in specially large type, and from beginning to end an ideal nursery book (cloth 5s.).

A very useful series of books has for some years been in progress with the title Something for Sunday, edited by Catherine Shaw. Here on prepared paper are outlines of Scripture texts for colouring, and spaces in which the results of Bible study may be neatly written. The various series have been highly appreciated, and we give the eleventh a hearty welcome. The books provide interesting Sabbath employment, and when completed the texts may be given away by the children as representing their own work. Publications such as these should not be over-looked at the season when the young people come in for special remembrance.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. have published three very prettily got-up books for children, with short sketches in prose and verse, and many graphic illustrations. They are Holiday Joys, Ring of Roses, and Dolly's Schooltime.

The Red Nursery Series includes books that are sure to be favourites with the young. Recent additions are: Tales Told at the Zoo, by E. Velvin, and Old Testament Stories. Both are fully illustrated. (1s. each. Sunday School Union.)

The younger children of our households will be charmed with the amusing poems and storyettes in bold print, with accompanying pictures, in Tales and Rhymes for Happy Times, by Dorothy Arnold. There are four beautifully coloured full-page plates, and the book is handsome enough to grace a palace nursery. (2s. 6d. R.T.S.)

Books of high merit for children are:—Pretty Polly, a collection of bird stories, and Round the Farm, a picture book of pets. Both are from the pen of Edith Carrington, who is a specialist on the animal world, and in each case the illustrations are numerous and good. (1s. each.) Another capital book for younger children is The Animal Alphabet. (6d.) The pictures are admirably coloured. (Nelson & Co.).

STORIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Hutchinson & Co. issue, in May Malmesbury's Doubts, a graphically written story, strikingly bound and suitable for a girl's gift book.

There is much readable matter in The Pattypats (Ward, Lock & Co.), a story of adventure in the Land of Once Upon a Time.

A story for boys is The Whipping Boy (1s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), depicting the sorrows of the official and youthful "pain-bearer" of other days. The same firm issue The Little General (1s. 6d.), a somewhat ghastly picture of Prussian military life during the wars of Frederic and Maria Theresa; also The Child of the Lighthouse (1s. 6d.), a vivid tale of Napoleonic times, in which the sorrows of war are pathetically delineated.

The series of books edited by Alfred H. Miles, giving a story for every week in the year, is growing in number as well as in popularity. The latest issues are Fifty-two Holiday Stories for Boys, with G. A. Henty, Geo. Manville Fenn, and Coulson Kernahan among the writers; Fifty-two Holiday Stories for Girls, with L. T. Meade and Sarah Doudney among the contributors; and Fifty-two Sunday Stories for Boys and Girls, in which the pens of Marie Corelli, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and others have been employed. (5s. each. Hutchinson & Co.)

S. W. Partridge issue several new stories. The Old Red School-house (1s. 6d.), by Frances Hariott Wood, is a graphic Canadian tale of the taming of a wild lad. Local colour is liberally imparted. There are plenty of Indians, woods, sleighs, and chipmunicks. Major Brown (1s. 6d.), by Edith S. Harris, is a powerful book of high moral tone, illustrative of life in the Southern States of America. Regia (1s. 6d.) may suit readers who care for an exciting story, with such ingredients as stolen diamonds, Röntgen rays, arson, and a young baronet. One rather tires, by the way, of the vast number of titled persons introduced into eighteenpenny story books. Una's Marriage (1s. 6d.) is a story of average merit of a lady of high degree who marries a mill owner. Two stories on perseverance rewarded are A Life's Victory (3s. 6d.), by Mrs. F. C. Carter, telling of the struggles of a girl painter, who at length had her picture "hung"; and A Child of Genius (2s.), by Lily Watson, tracing the path along which musical fame was achieved by a girl who made the most of her one talent.

While so many rubbishy books, worldly in spirit and flippant in style, are issued for young people, it is refreshing to note the high tone of Messrs. T. Nelson and Son's volumes. Our Vow (2s. 6d.), by E. L. Haverfeld, is charmingly written, and can only effect good. The Triple Alliance, by Harold Avery (3s. 6d.), is a capital story for boys, introducing us to a trio who were chums at school and college, and held together wonderfully in trials and triumphs, in games and adventures, not to say in scrapes now and again. French and English, by E. Everett-Green (5s.), is a grand historical tale, taking us back to the middle of the last century, when the forces of General Wolfe captured Quebec. The circumstances that led up to the war are well portrayed, and the story admirably impresses upon the mind a great event in our colonial history. The Pirates' Gold (1s. 6d.) is a readable story, by Dr. Gordon Stables, of a treasure island off Florida. The Green Toby Jug (2s. 6d.), by Mrs. Edwin Hohler, is an excellent volume for children; it is pleasingly written, easily understood, and admirably illustrated. If Tom Tufton (3s. 6d.), by E. Everett-Green, were alleged to excite a false regard for a dare-devil, lawless career, the author would, perhaps, point for justification to the hero's repentance. The work is beautifully illustrated by Mr. Stacey.

The cheap issue of the quarto illustrated edition of Farrar's Life of Christ makes a handsome book. The character of the work is well known, and in this its latest form it will prove of great service for presentation purposes. (7s. 6d. Cassell's.)

The Pocket Diary for 1899 (1d. "Young Watchman" Office, Kilmarnock) is a neat little production, eminently suitable for regular use, containing daily texts, space for notes, and helpful reminders for busy men. Certainly it is much preferable to the purely secular diaries in common use.

Christmas Cards. Popular as "private Christmas cards" have become, it is very evident that they are far from supplanting those of the old style. Yet the latter can hardly be called "old style" when each succeeding year brings "novelties" in abundance. Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons have for years stood in the first rank as publishers of fresh and artistic designs in which they cater for young and old, light and serious, with inimitable taste and variety, and their productions this year are well up to their accustomed standard.

Fathers and mothers have no lack of advisers in these days. Among the best of counsellors we would include Confidential Talks on Home and Child Life, by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The work is uniform with volumes to young men and young women by Dr. Lyman B. Sperry, and its pages are worthy the serious perusal of the heads of families who are in need of advice. And who is beyond being benefited by the experience of others? In giving this work a cordial commendation for its general usefulness, we would not imply our approval of all the author's views or counsels.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons are adding to their small books of the "Rapid" series for the study of modern languages. The second part of Hier und Da, with its witty selections, will assist students of German, and the same, in another line, may be said of German Business Letters, part 1 (6d. each). The Advanced French Conversational Exercises (6d.) is useful, and the same may be said of the Practical Spanish Instructor, which is appearing in weekly parts (1½d.). Among weekly periodicals Pitman's French Weekly (serio-comic) occupies a place all its own; volume 3, containing the issues of six months, provides a great variety of reading (3s. 6d.). The German Weekly, which is equally entertaining, is issued in its second half-yearly volume (3s.).

The teaching of the Word of God about the Spirit of God has been well set out by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor in a little book entitled, "The Things of the Spirit." (1s. Marshall Bros.) The Personality and Deity of the Spirit, with his names and titles, dispensation and ministry, are the subject of many passages of Scripture, which are here arranged in order. Succeeding sections deal with the relation of the Holy Spirit to our Lord, also Life in the Spirit, the latter in regard to the sphere, rule, and power of life. In a preparatory note Mr. Macgregor says: "With the exception of two or three passages, the meaning of which is doubtful, every passage in which the Holy Spirit is expressly mentioned has been included." The booklet will prove instructive to many, and of special assistance to preachers and teachers.

The London Anti-Vivisection Society (32, Sackville-street, W.) publishes a pamphlet called AN INDEPENDENT MEDICAL VIEW OF VIVISECTION, by Dr. Stephen F. Smith, which ought to be read by all who wish to be informed of the unspeakable horrors of the practice of animal vivisection.

Messrs. Shaw and Co. have issued their ROLL TEXT ALMANAC for next year. With its large type Scripture texts, it is a favourite with many. THE BIBLE-SEARCHING ALMANAC, prepared by Mrs. Gedge, is a familiar friend, and no doubt many will again join the searchers' band. (1d. each.)

At a town's meeting at Harrogate last month addresses on THE CZAR'S MANIFESTO ON DISARMAMENT AND PEACE were delivered by the Dean of Ripon and Mr. Samuel James Capper. These have now been published in pamphlet form, and deserve many readers. (1d. Headley Brothers.)

Captain Henry Toynbee, of "weather forecasting" fame, pays due regard to the signs of the times as they relate to clerical lawlessness and spiritual declension. He sees much self-worship and love of human applause in the ways of modern error and inconsistency; and, recalling the subject of a well-known picture, he entitles his latest pamphlet on passing affairs in the Church and the world, "SEE me JUMP!" His words are timely and wise. In the judgment of Rev. Dr. Handley Moule, the pamphlet "puts the finger on the sore point of all." Dr. Moule adds: "God bless to me, and to each reader, the message." To this prayer we say a hearty "Amen!" (1d. Thurgate & Sons, 18, Harrow-road, London W.)

Sergeant Pallinger wishes to remove the impression that owing to his evangelistic work he has given up his work among soldiers. He writes: "I feel very grateful for the interest and prayers of the Lord's people on behalf of my Sunday engagements. May I ask for a similar interest and practical sympathy in the efforts made through 'The Guards' Mission' (58, High-treet, Pimlico, S.W.) to bring our soldiers in London to a saving knowledge of the truth?"

164, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C.

PRESIDENT - - THE EARL OF JERSEY, G.C.M.G.

As this Society is a National one, not simply Metropolitan, admission is ensured to a destitute child from whatever part of the kingdom it may come. 900 CHILDREN MAINTAINED. NO VOTES ARE REQUIRED. FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED. Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary or Finance Secretary, or may be sent to the Office of The Christian.

Working Men's Mission, Collingwood Street, New Cut.

WE ARE IN GREAT NEED OF FUNDS. PLEASE HELP US.

To provide for the Hungry and Starving in one of the Poorest Neighbourhoods of London.

We are getting our Soup Kitchen ready, which provided 112,000 meals to men, women, and children last winter. This Mission has been established for the past twenty-one years. Gifts of clothing, etc., will be gratefully received.

Will the readers of The Christian send a contribution to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; to T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.; or to the Office of The Christian.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY,

The CHURCH HOUSE, WESTMINSTER, LONDON, S.W.
(Great Smith-street Entrance.)

Gen. Superintendent—Rev. W. HAY AITKEN, M.A.
Secretary—Rev. HERBERT MUIR, M.A.

Object—The Promotion of Parochial Missions throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

The Society urgently needs help, as it is without endowments and has to depend entirely on the offerings of those who value Evangelistic Work. It undertakes Missions in a large number of very poor Parishes. The Work being entirely of a spiritual character does not command so readily the support of many rich people, who give freely to charitable objects mainly designed to meet temporal necessities. The Rev. A. J. Harrison is now conducting evidential Missions in connection with the Society, and the Committee will be glad to receive applications for his services.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

This Society continues to spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster-row, London; and at the Office of The Christian.

CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Secretary and Treasurer.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

THE LONDON ASSOCIATION in aid of these

OLDEST OF PROTESTANT MISSIONS

EARNESTLY APPEALS FOR FUNDS.

THE NEED IS MOST URGENT.

Owing not to increase of expenditure, but chiefly to the false impression concerning the Morton Legacy, which when forthcoming can only be used for new missions, the decrease in funds has been so great, that instead of the additional £10,000 so much needed for Labrador, &c., there is to date a serious growing

DEFICIENCY OF £12,000!

This must be met speedily without any diminution in the General Fund, or some of the Mission Fields, actually calling for extension, must be abandoned.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary, the Rev. W. Wetton Cox, 7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.

N.B.—One in Sixty Members of this devoted little Church is a Missionary, and so richly is their work blessed that the Converts number nearly 100,000, or more than Three Times as many as the parent Church. There are nearly 500 Missionaries in the field, and the whole expenditure has been under £80,000, of which Two-thirds has been contributed by the Native Churches.

Church of England.

The ritual controversy, The Record states, is gravely affecting the incomes of Church societies.

At Oxford the Archbishop of Canterbury has preached a special sermon at a service of intercession for foreign missions.

Miss M. A. Dunn, secretary of the Ladies' Association, Rochester Diocesan Society, 113, North-side, Clapham Common, appeals for voluntary workers for some of the poorest South London parishes.

St. Mildred's, an ancient City church, has been reopened after renovation. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and other City representatives attended the service. St. Michael's, Bassishaw, is, however, to be pulled down.

The Bishop of Gibraltar, who is now visiting the English community at Bucharest, and has held a Confirmation there, has paid a visit to Archbishop Gennadius, the Metropolitan of Roumania, who gave him a very cordial welcome.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has visited Tunbridge Wells in connection with the second jubilee celebration of the Church Missionary Society, and after preaching in the parish church in the morning, presided at a meeting of the East and West Kent and Sussex Church Missionary Unions in the Great Hall, which was crowded with clergy and lay representatives.

The Bishop of London has appointed Sunday next as "Lay Helpers' Sunday," remarking that the need of lay help in the work of every parish is of increasing importance. He suggests that the lay helpers in each parish be specially invited to join in partaking of the Holy Communion; and that the attention of the people be drawn to the opportunities for work afforded by the Church.

The Archbishop of York, preaching at Acomb, said he believed there never was a time in the history of the Church of England when more good sermons were preached—good in the best sense of the word—than at the present day. Not all men had the eloquence which drew crowds, but the vast majority of the clergy were ever striving to do the work of the Lord Jesus.

At a special meeting of the general committee of the Church Pastoral Aid Society it was unanimously resolved that the committee, at the present juncture in Church affairs, desires to call attention to the steady adherence to Protestant and Evangelical truths and principles by which that society has always been distinguished. This adherence it will ever be their endeavour to maintain.

The financial statement as to the recent Church Congress at Bradford shows that the gross receipts reached £1382 and the expenditure £1081, leaving a balance, including £10 since contributed, of £300. Of this surplus £150 has been allocated to the Bradford Church Institute, and £30 to the Queen Victoria Clergy Sustentation Fund, the remainder going towards the restoration of Bradford Parish Church.

A temporary church at Redland, near Bristol, has been dedicated by the Bishop of Bristol, who said that the population of the city and neighbourhood was increasing by scores of thousands. New churches meant a very great effort on the part of Church people, and he suggested the formation of a guild for the collection of penny subscriptions, so that the clergy might be freed from anxiety as to where their stipend was to come from.

The Bishop of Exeter, in his address at the Diocesan Conference at Exeter, referred to the observance of Romish festivals and practices. There were, he said, few sowers of perversions in the diocese, but the time had come when such must return to the simple faith of the Gospel; and if a few who felt their position to be untenable seceded, that would be far better than that the Church should connive at error, and allow her accredited representatives to teach doctrines which she had deliberately and distinctly repudiated.

Congregational.

The foundation stone of a new church has been laid at Muswell Hill.

Recognition service in connection with the settlement of Rev. C. H. Underwood as pastor of Ruscombe, Pitchcombe, and Edge, was held last Thursday. Addresses were delivered by Revs. A. G. Hastings, Samuel Thomas, and C. A. Davis.

Dr. Probert, having accepted the Principalship of the Independent College, Bala, Bangor, the Rev. W. Charles, M.A., Treorchy, has been appointed his successor as theological lecturer at Brecon Memorial College, and has commenced his duties.

Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers will deliver the Merchants' Lecture in the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, every Tuesday in November. In fulfilment of a promise made at the close of his last course, Dr. Rogers intends to treat of the Dutch Reformation, first in itself and then in relation to English Protestantism in general and Congregationalism in particular.

At an informal meeting of the minister (Rev. James Wylie) and deacons of Donegall-street Church, Belfast, the condition of the ministers of the aided churches in Ireland was brought under consideration. Over £40 was subscribed, and it was at once decided to have special collections in order to meet the immediate needs of the ministers, some of whom are in very straitened circumstances.

Baptist.

At the seventeenth anniversary of Rev. J. Wesley Boud's settlement as pastor of Penge Tabernacle Rev. Chas. Spurgeon preached. The report of the work showed cheering progress in each department.

At the recognition of Rev. H. J. Milledge as pastor of [illegible]ston-road Church, Croydon, Rev. Chas. and Dr. J. A. Spurgeon took part. The intention of erecting a substantial permanent building was announced.

At a branch meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, held at Manchester, Rev. J. R. M. Stephens exhibited a copy of one of the Gospels, printed and bound by native [illegible]s on the Congo, and said that was an augury of the future of their missionary work in that part of Africa.

On Monday, October 31, Rev. Archibald G. Brown concluded the first year of his pastorate at West Norwood. He asked all those who had reason to praise God for blessing received to bring an offering to be devoted to the Lord's work, and in response over £200 was brought in. During the twelve months nearly two hundred have been added to the membership. The chapel is to be lit with electric light.

Methodist.

The Free Methodists' Connexional property has been doubled in value within the last thirty years, and the aggregate debt reduced by one-third.

Rev. T. Jackson, whose labours in the Primitive Methodist Mission in Walthamstow and Clapton are well known, is devoting himself for the future to the Whitechapel Mission.

Richmond, which claims the distinction of being the Missionary College of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, has this week celebrated its missionary jubilee, the students raising in connection therewith the sum of £618.

Rev. Danzy Sheen, of Leeds, general secretary of the Sunday-schools of Primitive Methodism, has issued his annual report, which shows that the denomination has 4,308 Sunday-schools, 61,000 teachers, and 465,089 scholars.

According to the recently issued report, Bolton Wesleyan Mission has been successful, although hampered for lack of class-rooms and other accommodation for social work. The new building, the Victoria Hall, will be the largest owned by the Methodist body.

At the fourth triennial Sunday-school Conference held in Birmingham, the Rev. John Smith, president of the Primitive Methodist Conference, occupied the chair, and delivered an address on the influence of the Sunday-school upon the life of the nation. The programme included a great rally of Christian Endeavourers.

Rev. F. B. Turner (Methodist New Connexion), in a letter describing the progress of mission work in China, says that at the last monthly gathering of representatives of the different missions some told of revivals of religion resembling the great Methodist revival in Wesley's time; others of the small beginnings of self-support here and there, and yet others of the widespread interest of the educated classes in Christianity.

Presbyterian.

The newly formed Presbyterian congregation at Cricklewood, London, has addressed a hearty and unanimous call to Rev. Thomas Brown Nicholson, M.A., Brandon-street Church, Hamilton.

Principal Story and Dr. McAdam Muir preached at the dedication services in connection with the opening of a new church (St. Cuthbert's), situated in the centre of a working-class district in Glasgow.

The Queen of Holland is a Presbyterian, and worships in the New Church of Amsterdam. Members of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church in London propose to get up an address to her, signed by the moderators of all the branches of the Presbyterian Church in the world.

Aberdeen U.P. Presbytery recently adopted a resolution cordially approving of the proposed union with the Free Church. Rev. Dr. Robson declared that the time had now come when advantages were no longer to be gained by separation. If the churches were united they could take up more effectually in this country the great work of evangelisation.

Salvation Army.

The elevators and shelters of the Men's Social Work in London are full nightly.

His Honour President Steyn, of the Orange Free State, has laid the foundation-stone of a new hall at Bloemfontein.

A large building has been loaned in New York for the purpose of a temporary convalescent home for soldiers who have returned from Cuba.

A friend on the borders of Swazieland has donated twenty acres of land for an industrial settlement, and promises building materials and labour for a hall.

Fallen Asleep.
